clerk of the Interior Department, and that it was satisfactory to the department. It is true that the party so stating did not say to me that it was satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior, but he did say that it was satisfactory to the department. That being the case, I then offered the proposed amendment, prepared, or supposed to be prepared, by the Interior Department, as a substitute for the House bill, and the committee rejected my offer by a divided vote.

I think that the Senator from Colorado had good grounds for the statement he made, because he was in the room at the same time the statement was made to me, and I have no doubt the statement was made to the Senator from Colorado in exactly the same way that it was made to me.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I want to add to what has been said by the Senator from Utah that that statement was publicly made to the Public Lands Committee in session.

THE MILITIA.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I desire to offer a memorandum sent me by the Secretary of War bearing directly and indirectly upon the militia, and also a discussion from the records of Congress, the Federalist, and other sources bearing upon the constitutional provisions referring to the organization of the militia. I ask to have the matter referred to the Committee on Printing, and I hope that committee at an early day will report favorably for the printing of the document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Oregon will be complied with.

REPUBLIC OF CUBA V. STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the argument made by the governor of North Carolina on the question of the jurisdiction of a foreign Government to sue a State of the Union. I think it will be very interesting to all Senators, and I ask permission to have it printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the request of the Senator from North Carolina is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

MR. BICKETT'S ARGUMENT.

May it please the court, since notice of the motion in behalf of the Republic of Cuba for leave to bring suit against the State of North Carolina has been served upon our State, we have been diligent in the investigation of the authorities bearing upon the question before the court, and all that we have been able to find are set forth in the brief submitted in behalf of the State of North Carolina, and we trust that these authorities may prove helpful to the court in its deliberations.

In the oral argument, I shall not attempt any detailed analysis of these authorities but shall submit briefly several definite propositions, any one of which, if sound, is fatal to this motion, and all of which I believe find substantial support in the main current of the decision of this court, in the public thought and known jurisprudence of the period in which our Constitution was devised, and in that sweet reasonableness which is the breath of equity.

I.

My first proposition is that in this motion the Republic of Cuba is asking this court to recognize between that Republic and the State of North Carolina a relationship obnoxious to section 10 of the first article of the Constitution.

When the men who conceived and constructed the framework of this Government came to consider the subject of controversies between the States and foreign powers, they had a vivid appreciation of the menace to the peace and safety of the Nation such controversies would involve. Therefore, in the very first article of the Constitution, they took steps to exclude, so far as human foresight could exclude, the possibility of such controversies arising. Hence, it is written that under no circumstances may a State enter into any alliance or treaty with a foreign power, and that no State may make any compact or agreement with a foreign power without the consent of Congress. The reasoning was that if the States were not permitted to bargain, contract, deal, or dicker with foreign Governments, the most prolific source of controversies would be entirely eliminated. This reasoning finds its jurisdiction in the fact that 127 years have elapsed since this inhibition was made a part of our organic law, and now for the first time a foreign Government knocks at the door of this court and alleges that a controversy has arisen between it and a State of this Union.

This court has never given a comprehensive and conclusive definition of the words "compact" and "agreement" found in the section under consideration. There has been no occasion for doing so, as the court decides cases and not academic questions. In Holmes v. Jennison (14 Pet., 540) Mr. Chief Justice Taney, speaking for the court, says:

"But the question does not rest upon the prohibition to enter into a treaty. In the very next clause of the Constitution the States are forbidden to enter into any 'agreement' or 'compact' with a foreign nation; and as these words could not have been idly or superfluously used by the framers of the Constitution, they can not be construed to mean the same thing with the word treaty. They evidently mean something more, and were designed to make the prohibition more comprehensive. A few extracts from an eminent writer on the laws of nations showing the manner in which these different words have been used and the different meaning sometimes attached to them, will, perhaps, contribute to explain the reason for using them all in the Constitution, and will prove that the most comprehensive terms were employed in prohibiting to the States all intercourse with foreign nations (quoting from Vattel). After reading these extracts we can be at no loss to comprehend the intention of the framers of the Constitution in using all these words—'treaty,' 'compact,' 'agreement.' The word 'agreement' does not necessarily import any direct and express stipulation; nor is it necessary that it should be in writing. If there is a verbal understanding to which both parties have assented and upon which both are acting, it is an 'agreement'; and the use of all these terms—'treaty,' 'agreement,' and 'compact'—show that it was the intention of the framers of the Constitution to use the broadest and most comprehensive terms, and that they anxiously desired to cut off all connection or communication between a State and a foreign power; and we shall fail to execute that evident intention unless we give to the word 'agreement' its most extended signification and so apply it as to prohibit every agreement, written or verbal, formal or informal, positive or implied, by the mutual understanding of the parties."

This case was decided in 1840. In a later case, Virginia v. Tennessee (148 U. S., 503), the opinion of the court leans to a more restricted meaning of the words "compact" and "agreement," and, applying the doctrine noscitur a sociis, gives to the words a meaning akin to the words "treaty" and "alliance" used in another part of the same section. In that case Mr. Justice Fields, speaking for the court, says:

"Looking at the clause in which the terms 'compact' or 'agreement' appear, it is evident that the prohibition is directed to the formation of any combination tending to the increase of political power in the States which may encroach upon or interfere with the just supremacy of the United States. Story, in his Commentaries (sec. 1403), referring to a previous part of the same section of the Constitution in which the clause in question appears, observes that its language 'may be more plausibly interpreted from the terms used, "treaty, alliance, or confederation," and upon the ground that the sense of each is best known by its association (noscitur a sociis) to apply to treaties of a political character, such as treaties of alliance for purposes of peace and war, and treaties of confederation, in which the parties are leagued for mutual government, political cooperation, and the exercise of political sovereignty, or conferring internal political jurisdiction or external political dependence, or general commercial privileges, and that 'the latter clause, "compacts and agreements" might then very properly apply to such as regarded what might be deemed mere private rights of sovereignty, such as questions of boundary, interest in land situate in the territory of each other, and other internal regulations for the mutual comfort and convenience of States bordering on each other,' and he adds:

"'In such cases the consent of Congress may be properly required in order to check any infringement of the rights of the National Government, and at the same time a total prohibition to enter into any compact or agreement might be attended with permanent inconvenience or public mischief.'"

It is interesting to note that in the case of Virginia v. Tennessee the earlier case of Holmes v. Jennison is not mentioned in the opinion of the court. Undoubtedly there is conflict between the opinions written in the two cases, but between the decisions reached there is perfect harmony. In Virginia v. Tennessee the court had before it an agreement between two States with respect to their bounday lines. This agreement grew naturally and necessarily out of the physical contact of the two States. The court was impressed that the section of the Constitution under consideration was designed to prevent controversies between the States, and the nature of the agreement before the court was calculated to serve the purpose of the Constitution in the prevention of controversies between the States, and the court felt that the words of the Constitution should be given, as to the subject matter before it, such a restricted meaning as not to interfere with the manifest purpose of the section.

On the other hand, the subject matter before the court in Holmes v. Jennison was a contract with a foreign power, not arising out of the natural and necessary relations of the State to such foreign power, and in that case the court concluded that the main purpose of the Constitution, to wit, the prevention of controversies, would be served by giving to the words "compact" and "agreement" the most extended signification.

Now, applying to these words the elementary rule of construction, that a law should be so interpreted as to suppress the mischief at which it is directed, the conclusion forces that the relationship that Cuba is here seeking to establish between herself and a State of this Union is pregnant with the very mischief the Constitution was designed to prevent.

At the close of the Civil War the whole South was in a condition of public and private bankruptcy. Bill Arp, the Barlow philosopher of Georgia, said that when the Confederate soldier returned home "he had nothing, nothing to get nothing with, and nothing to put it in." The treasury of North Carolina was empty. The State was unable to meet the interest on its admitted obligations, and this condition was universal from the Potomac to the Rio Grande.

Now, suppose while the States were in this helpless and well-nigh hopeless condition a European power had proposed to these States to advance to them unlimited funds with which to rebuild their waste places and take the bonds of such States payable to this foreign power for the money so advanced. Is it debatable that such an arrangement would have been invalid without the consent of Congress, and is it conceivable that Congress would have given its consent? The borrower wears the yoke of the lender. In public as well as in private life it often happens that the first step toward subserviency is the acceptance of a loan. Such an arrangement would have given to a foreign power an interest and an influence in this country that the General Government would not for one moment have tolerated.

Well, if a foreign power can not deal directly with a State, and buy her bonds without the consent of Congress, but may take an assignment of these bonds from an individual, and thereby create the very relationship the Constitution forbids, then the wisdom of the statesmen is canceled by the artifice of the speculator, and a wholesome restraint of the Constitution becomes a rope of sand.

II.

My second proposition is that if a foreign power can maintain at all an action founded on contract against a State of this Union, still such foreign power comes to this court by grace and not by right.

Our Constitution is a compact between the States that agreed to it, and that have since been created under it. No foreign Government has any rights guaranteed to it under the Constitution of the United States. No foreign power was a party to that great compact. To-day no foreign Government recognizes the obligations of the Constitution of this Union, and they are not, as a matter of right, entitled to any of its benefits. Whether or not the Constitution reaches as far as the flag has been the subject of high debate. No one has maintained that it goes any farther. So that when Cuba comes to this court she comes not as a member of the family made one by the Constitution, but she comes as the guest of the Nation by courtesy and not by right, and coming by grace she must come gracefully. She must bring to this court a real cause, and not a naked claim. She must submit to this tribunal a case based not on the technicalities of the commercial law, but one that appeals by virtue of its inherent righteousness to the conscience of the court.

The famous dictum of Lord Camden, in Smith v. Clay (3 Brown, ch. 639) "that nothing can call this court into activity but conscience, good faith, and reasonable diligence," applies with peculiar emphasis to this petition. The Republic of Cuba falls pitifully short of this requirement for admittance to a court of equity.

The facts in regard to the bonds, upon which she bases her declarations, appear in the public statutes and in the Constitution of North Carolina, in the opinions of this court, and in the public reports of the Federal Government. These public documents show that these bonds were conceived in sin and brought forth in iniquity; that they were repudiated by the very legislature that attempted to authorize them, and to-day the State of North Carolina has a declaration in its organic law that not one of them shall ever be paid without a vote of the people of the State. The reasons that justify this repudiaion and made it inevitable appear in a report made to the Senate of the United States by a committee appointed by that body to investigate alleged outrages in the Southern States in 1871, and published in Report No. 1, Forty-second Congress, first session, March, 1871. In a minority or, rather, supplemental report made by Senator Blair, of Missouri, and Senator Bayard, of Delaware, it is said: "These, then, were the methods taken to array the negroes in one compact body against the white people of the State in the election of 1868 under the reconstruction acts of Congress. The election was supervised by Gen. Canby, in command of that military division. Its result is well known. The enfranchised negroes, under the lead of Gov. Holden and his carpetbag allies, backed by the military power of the Government, accomplished an easy victory over the disfranchised white people. But to make it complete Gen. Canby gave orders to exclude a certain number of the Conservatives elected to the legislature. Judge Reade, who administered the oath to the members elect, testifies that he was instructed by Gen. Canby to tell certain persons to whom particular disqualifications attached to stand aside, and he then proceeded to administer the oath of office to the remainder. (See testimony of Judge Reade, p. 412.) Thus was the reconstruction of North Carolina accomplished upon a loyal basis—a basis composed of ignorant negroes and unprincipled carpetbaggers, cemented and sustained by military power. The result might have been foreseen.

The legislature, moved by a "ring" of unprincipled adventurers, went to work to squander the money of the people. They issued twenty-five or thirty millions in the bonds of the State to certain railroad companies; the bonds were issued by Holden to these adventurers without exacting compliance with the law, the bonds were sold, and the money went into carpetbags and flitted away from the State. Ten millions of this issue were subsequently declared unconstitutional by the courts of the State, and of the balance not one million of the entire sum was ever applied to the construction of railroads, the value of the bonds sank in the market to 22 cents on the dollar. These transactions appear from the testimony of nearly all the witnesses examined; men of all shades of political sentiment testify to this shameless plunder of the State, and all unite in denouncing the outrage and deploring the ruin and bankruptcy that has been brought upon the State. The majority of this committee allude to this matter as showing the latitude allowed in examination, and are seemingly unconscious of its significance. They do not appear to be aware of the fact that Congress, by establishing a government wholly irresponsible to the people of the State, composed of ignorant negroes without a dollar of property, and controlled by designing men in search of pillage made the plunder of the State inevitable. The same result has followed the same measures in every one of the reconstructed States. All have been plundered and by the same means.

This report is sustained by every historian who has written with any adequate knowledge of the subject and the period. Mr. James Ford Rhodes, in his remarkable history of the United States from 1850 to 1877, says: "During his (Holden's) administration an era of corruption set in, which was an entire novelty in the Old North State that previously had not on record a case of malversation in a member of the general assembly. The voting of the bonds of the State to aid in building railroads was the most fruitful source of corruption, and no doubt can exist that a large number of the members of Holden's legislature took bribes for their support of these various enterprises. It appeared to an observer, who had the opportunity of seeing different sorts of men in North Carolina, that the dishonesty was unblushing, and that a decent hypocrisy to cover the plundering of the State was entirely absent. The negroes were, of course, apt pupils in the practice of corruption; and Zebulon V. Vance tells a story which, whether exact or not, illustrates a natural attitude of an inferior race raised suddenly from a low to a high estate. A negro member of the legislature was visited one night in his room and found seated at a table 'laboriously counting a pile of money by the dim light of a tallow dip' and chuckling to himself. 'Why, what amuses you so, Uncle Cuffy?' was asked. 'Well, boss,' he replied, grinning from ear to ear, 'I's been sold in my life 'leven times an' fo' de Lord dis is the first time I eber got de money.'"

Senator HENRY CABOT LODGE, in his history of the United States, says: "In North Carolina the chief sin of the reconstructionist was the wholesale squander of public funds. The legislature authorized the issuance of $25,000,000 in bonds for railroad construction, $14,000,000 were actually issued, and not a mile of railroad was built." The compass of this work will not allow a detailed account of the saturnalia of misrule, extravagance, and plunder which afflicted the Southern States during the negro and carpetbag régime.

The conditions in North Carolina were not dissimilar to those in the other Southern States. From the Potomac to the Rio Grande "sufferance was the badge of all our tribe." So that Cuba brings here bonds stamped with dishonor and seamed with infamy. They are not the legitimate issue of a sovereign State, but the unseemly offspring of a band of cunning adventurers and irresponsible blacks, who descended upon a bleeding, poverty-stricken people, seized the sacred school fund of the State, bartered the children's hopes for a midnight debauch, stole everything in sight, and then attempted to sell all our generations into bondage. And yet Cuba brings these papers into this court and gravely heads her petition "In equity."

I prefer not to question the integrity of that Republic. On land and sea North Carolina poured out precious blood that Cuba might take her place in the constellation of free Republics. It is a natural law that we love those for whom we suffer, and I prefer to believe that Cuba has been imposed upon and knows not what she does; but the fact remains, as sad as it is certain, that though her heart may be of purest gold, she stands before this court on feet that are of the commonest kind of clay.

May it please your honors, from the time I was old enough to have any intelligent comprehension of the framework of this Government I have associated the approaches to this tribunal with the celestial inquiry, "Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord, or who shall dwell in His holy place?" And the answer bars and bans forever this petition, for it is written, "He that hath clean hands and a pure heart."

At a later period the convention referred all of its proceedings to the committee on detail, and that committee made a report back to the convention in which it elaborated the clause with respect to the judiciary that had been referred to it. This report of the committee on detail, after some slight amendments, was adopted by the convention, and became the second clause of the judiciary article, which is as follows: "The judicial power shall extend to all cases, in law and equity, arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority; to all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls; to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; to controversies to which the United States shall be a party; to controversies between two or more States; between a State and citizens of another State; between citizens of different States; between citizens of the same State claiming land under grants of different States; and between a State or a citizen thereof and foreign States, citizens, or subjects."

Now, it clearly appears that the principle agreed upon in the very beginning and adhered to throughout was that the jurisdiction of the Federal courts should extend to all cases arising under the national laws and all other questions affecting the national peace and harmony. This principle was indorsed by the committee of the whole and by the convention itself. The report of the committee on detail is simply an elaboration of this principle. In other words, the convention declared that the jurisdiction should extend to all cases arising under the national laws and to all questions affecting the national peace and harmony; this is to say, the questions enumerated in the report of the committee on detail. So that when a foreign Government brings to this court a case against a State of this Union the court is, by virtue of the history of the judiciary article, justified in inquiring whether or not the case is one that affects the national peace and harmony.

The view that in any event the court ought not to entertain this petition unless it discloses a real grievance on the part of Cuba finds support in the genesis of the article declaring the extent of the judicial power. The subject of the jurisdiction of the judiciary was first considered by the committee of the whole, and that committee reported the following clause: "The jurisdiction of the national judiciary shall extend to all cases with respect the collection of the national revenue, impeachment of any national officers, and questions which involve the national peace and harmony."

When this report came to be considered by the convention there was some objection, and Mr. Madison offered a substitute for the report, which was adopted without opposition. The substitute is as follows: "The jurisdiction of the national judiciary shall extend to all cases arising under the national laws, and to such other questions as may involve the national peace and harmony."

The court is justified in giving to the case a consideration not unlike that which would be given it by the Department of State were it presented to that department for settlement by diplomatic negotiations. In the absence of the jurisdiction of this court diplomatic negotiations would be the only avenue through which the claim for the payment of the bonds could be made, and the instant and conclusive answer of the Department of State would undoubtedly be that North Carolina had done nothing to the injury of Cuba, and if that Republic was in any danger of losing any money, it was because of her officious, if not pernicious, interference with a situation that in no way concerned her.

III.

My third proposition is that, without reference to the eleventh amendment, the original clause in the Constitution, extending the judicial power of the Federal Government to controversies between the States of the Union and foreign powers, did not contemplate that a foreign Government could maintain an action in court against a State of this Union, to enforce the payment of a bond floated by such State, without the consent of the State.

This proposition is supported by the following considerations:

1. When this clause was written no such action was known to judicial power. The whole world of jurisprudence conceded and asserted that the King—the Government—was immune from the processes of the courts at the instance of subjects or aliens. The wayfaring man understood that if he loaned money to the Government his sole security was the good faith of that Government. A suit in court by an individual against a government, without its consent, to enforce the payment of a debt was unheard of; a suit in court by one sovereign power against another to enforce the payment of a debt was undreamed of. No European power was more jealous of its sovereignty than were the States of this Union at the time the Constitution was written. No more startling proposition could have been submitted to the fathers assembled at Philadelphia than one to clothe a foreign power with the right to sue a State for debt without its consent. The whole history of the Colonies and of the States shows that such a proposition would have been refuted instantly and with indignation. Every light and shade in the history of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, the temper of her great leaders, the whole course and color of her civilization show with mathematical certainty that if the proposition now urged had then been presented, Massachusetts would have thrown it overboard as promptly as she dumped tea that she did not like into Boston Harbor.

It is inconceivable to a mind acquainted with the elementary facts of history that the framers of the Constitution intended to clothe, not to say conceal, an innovation so radical in the few simple words of the Constitution. Hamilton could not conceive it. Impressed as he was with the necessity for a strong central Government, he could not understand how anyone could think the Constitution was capable of the construction that a sovereign State could be sued for debt without its consent. He voiced this conviction in his speech before the New York convention when he then said, "It has been suggested that an assignment of the public securities of one State to the citizens of another would enable them to prosecute that State in the Federal courts for the amount of those securities—a suggestion which the folowing considerations prove to be without foundation: It is inherent in the nature of sovereignty not to be amenable to the suit of an individual without its consent. This is the general sense and the general practice of mankind; and the exemption, as one of the attributes of sovereignty, is now enjoyed by the government of every

State in the Union. Unless, therefore, there is a surrender of this immunity in the plan of the convention it will remain with the States, and the danger intimated must be merely ideal. The circumstances which are necessary to produce an alienation of State sovereignty were discussed in considering the article on taxation, and need not be repeated here. A recurrence to the principles there established will satisfy us that there is no color to pretend that the State governments would, by the adoption of that plan, be divested of the privilege of paying their own debts in their own way, free from every constraint but that which flows from the obligations of good faith. The contracts between a nation and individuals are only binding on the conscience of the sovereign, and have no pretension to a compulsive force. They confer no right of action independent of the sovereign will. To what purpose would it be to authorize suits against States for the debts they owe? How could recoveries be enforced? It is evident it could not be done without waging war against the contracting State; and to ascribe to the Federal courts by mere implication, and in distraction of a preexisting right of State government, a power which would involve such a consequence would be altogether forced and unwarrantable.

These were the views of Hamilton when he was urging the people to accept the work of the Philadelphia convention. Later, in 1795, when he was Washington's Secretary of the Treasury, he reiterated these convictions. In his annual report for that year he said: "Public debt can scarcely in legal phrase be defined either as property in possession or in action. It is evidently not the first until it is reduced to possession by payment. To be the second would suppose a legal power to compel payment by suit. Does such a power exist? The true definition is, such a property subsisting in the faith of the Government. Its essence is promise. Its definite value depends upon the reliance that the promise shall be definitely fulfilled."

Precisely the same views were expressed by Madison and Marshall in the Virginia convention in answer to the criticisms of Patrick Henry and George Mason. Mr. Madison said: "I do not conceive that any controversy can ever be decided in these courts between an American State and a foreign State without the consent of the parties." If they consent, provision is here made. The dispute ought to be tried by the national tribunal. This is consonant to the law of nations." (In 3 Elliott's Debates, p. 533.)

In the same convention Mr. Marshall said: "I hope that no gentleman will think that a State will be called at the bar of the Federal court. Is there no such case at present? Are there not many cases in which the Legislature of Virginia is a party and yet the State is not sued? It is not rational to suppose that the sovereign power should be dragged before a court." (In 3 Elliott's Debates, pp. 555, 556.) At page 557 Mr. Marshall said: "If a foreign State brought a suit against the Commonwealth of Virginia, would she not be barred from the claim if the Federal judiciary thought it unjust? The previous consent of the parties is necessary; and, as the Federal judiciary will decide, each party will acquiesce. It will be the means of preventing disputes with foreign nations."

These views of Hamilton, Madison, and Marshall are in precise accord with the opinion given by Daniel Webster to Baring Bros. in 1839. In that celebrated opinion Mr. Webster said: "The security for State loans is the plighted faith of the State as a political community. It rests on the same basis as other contracts with established governments, the same basis, for example, as loans made by the United States under the authority of Congress; that is to say, the good faith of the Government making the loan and its ability to fulfill its engagements."

This short paragraph sums up the law and the philosophy of the subject. It is a statement clear as day of what was understood to be the law at the time the Constitution was written by all men, from the judge on the bench to the huckster on the streets. These authorities justify the conclusion reached by Thorpe in his constitutional history of the United States: "That the Constitution was adopted with the understanding that a sovereign State could not be sued in a Federal court can not be doubted if the complete evidence is duly weighed." (Vol. 2, p. 270.)

And departure from this interpretation will inevitably produce a brood no man can number of the very controversies the designers of the Constitution endeavored to prevent.

This interpretation placed upon the Constitution by Madison and Hamilton, two of its ablest champions, and by Marshall, its first great interpreter, has been acquiesced in by the whole world by a century and a quarter of inaction. It is a wise and salutary principle that when an alleged power under a statute has never been invoked through a long period of years, a presumption arises that no such power was ever conferred, and this rule is intensified in this case by the fact that Hamilton, Marshall and Madison from the beginning unequivocally denied the existence of any such power.

The proposition that a foreign State can not sue a State of the Union without its consent finds support in the consideration that a binding jurisdiction ought to be binding on both parties to the controversy. No one will say that this court is clothed with any power to call the Republic of Cuba before it. It is equally without power to enforce any judgment of any sort against the Republic of Cuba. As to Cuba, this court must at every stage of the case act only as a court of arbitration, without power to enforce its judgment. Such a status forces the conclusion that Madison, Marshall, and Hamilton were correct in declaring that only when the State consents to it can it be sued by a foreign power.

It is elementary and axiomatic that neither the law nor the Gospel ought to be interpreted in disjointed sections, but that every part should be studied in the light of the whole. Now, if we take Article I, section 10, and Article III, section 2, of the Constitution and read them together and in the order in which they are written in the Constitution, we will have this: "No State shall enter into any treaty or alliance with any foreign power, and no State without the consent of Congress shall make any agreement or compact with any foreign State, and the judicial power shall extend to controversies between a State and a foreign State." Clearly the first clause modifies the second, and it is plain that it was not intended for the judicial power to extend to controversies growing out of relations forbidden by the first clause. The controversies must not be made, they must be born. They can neither be bought nor borrowed, but they must be original controversies growing out of the necessary relations of a State and a foreign Government, while each is in the exercise of its sovereign power, or out of agreements entered into by and with the consent of Congress. Read and interpreted in this way the judicial power is given its full scope, and at the same time the inhibition of the Constitution against all bargains and agreements between a State and a foreign Government is fully observed.

IV.

My fourth proposition is that the Republic of Cuba, in seeking to enforce in this court the payment of repudiated State bonds, with whose origin and initial sale she had absolutely no connection, is guilty of a transparent attempt to nullify the eleventh amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

I assume that the purpose of the eleventh amendment was to protect the States and not to punish individuals. But if bonds bought by individuals can be sold to a foreign Government which can in turn enforce their payment in this court, then the net result of the amendment is to impose a hardship on individuals without securing to the State any immunity it did not therefore enjoy.

Another startling result of such a construction is that a Constitution framed to promote the general welfare of the people of the United States, guarantees to a foreign Government rights and privileges that are utterly denied to a citizen of this country.

There are no facts in our constitutional history better known than those which led to the adoption of the eleventh amendment, and these facts show beyond all question that the purpose of the amendment was to make it forever plain that the plighted faith of the State is the only security for the payment of its obligations.

After the amendment passed the Senate an amendment to the amendment was offered in the House, limiting the exemption from suits in the Federal courts to those States which provided in their own laws for suits to be prosecuted against them to effect. This qualification was rejected by a vote of 77 to 8, and this vote shows how utterly opposed the representatives of the people were to anything that savored of interference with a State in the way and manner in which it should discharge its own obligations.

But such interference is effective and complete if the individual can assign his holdings to a foreign power, which can in turn enforce their payment in this court. Such a construction utterly ignores that maxim of equity so strikingly stated by Mr. Justice Wilson in Chisholm v. Georgia—"Causes and not parties to causes are weighed by justice in her equal scales. On the former solely her attention is fixed; to the latter she is as she is painted—blind."

Looking, as this court always looks, with X-ray power through the form to find the very heart of the case, the court must see at a glance that Cuba has no grievance against and no controversy with the State of North Carolina; that she is not the real moving party in the case, but that wittingly or unwittingly she is being made the tool of men who are seeking to plow around the eleventh amendment to the Constitution of the United States. The tactics employed are the reverse of those practiced in an ever memorable fraud, for here the voice is the voice of Esau, but the hand is the hand of Jacob. If such tactics shall prove successful, if foreign powers that have no controversy with a State of this Union can assume or buy one, then I see no insuperable obstacle in the way of creating a principality or republic that out of gratitude for its existence would in turn create whatever controversies may be desired. It does not tax the imagination to see some adventurous spirit gathering up all the repudiated bonds of all the Southern States, carting them across our southern border, and there finding some ambitious patriot who, for the very love of the bonds, will rise up and assert and peradventure prove that he is Mexico.

But the authorities and the reasons that support the proposition that this is an attempt to nullify the eleventh amendment are set forth in the dissenting opinion in the South Dakota case in convincing array. I have studied this phase of the case with religious intensity seeking for some new argument, some new light, but I find myself unable to add one jot or tittle to that opinion. Its logic, and the logic of Bradley in Hens v. Louisiana, and of Iredell in Chisholm v. Georgia stands unanswered and unanswerable.

May it please your honors, I have never regarded lightly any opinion of this court, even though handed down by a bare majority. My feeling toward this tribunal through all of its history amounts to veneration. My faith is of the quality of the old patriarch when he exclaimed, "Though he slay me yet will I trust him." But despite this veneration—no, I will say because of this veneration—I stand here to-day and ask this court to declare that the opinion in the South Dakota case is not the law. I am driven to ask this by a conviction I can not escape—that when our Constitution was written there was not a man who gave to its making the travail of his soul, not one who championed it in the great debates before the people when the very life of the Nation was at stake, who ever said, or thought, or dreamed that under that sacred compact a foreign power is authorized to forget its sovereignty, descend to the level of a pawnbroker, hang out three balls, and, yielding to lust for unholy profit, traffic in securities so dishonored they can find no other market, and then bring them for enforcement to this high court of conscience, that throughout its history has stood before the whole world, even as the great Law Giver of Israel stood when he came down from the mountain top with the statutes of the Lord God Almighty in his hands and "wist not that his face shone."

V.

My last proposition is that even though the court should feel constrained to adhere to its decision in the South Dakota case, the case at bar differs fundamentally from that case in that so far as the court proceeded at all in the South Dakota case it proceeded in rem, while the present case involves a proceeding strictly in personam.

The difficulties that confront the court in such a proceeding were well stated by Mr. Justice Brewer in the South Dakota case, and he made no attempt to solve them. The only possible way the court could render an affective judgment in this case would be to issue compulsory process against the general assembly of the State, and the whole fabric of English liberty is built up on the principle that this can not be done. The one great right of the Commons, the people, was to say how and when the public money should be collected and paid out, and neither court nor king could coerce them. When the decision of Chisholm v. Georgia was handed down the legislature of that State at once enacted a law making it a hanging crime for any officer of the State of Georgia to pay anything on the judgment.

Speaking as an official of the State of North Carolina, and from an intimate knowledge of our people, I can safely say that no matter what the judgment of this court may be, North Carolina will not follow the example of Georgia, nor will it pass any law that could possibly be construed as disrespectful to this tribunal. But as an official of the State the thing that distresses me is that if this court should make it a hanging crime not to pay the judgment, I do not know where I could get the money.

We are doing what we can to bring the old State up and make her a credit to the family, and I know that in running out schools and courts and public institutions of all kinds after levying the limit of taxation allowed by our constitution, the administrative officers of the State are daily confronted with that sorest task of man alive, to make 8 guineas do the work of 5.

A last word. I said that Cuba comes into this court by grace; North Carolina is here by right. She is of the blood of the covenant. Her name is forever linked with some of the brightest pages of the Nation's history. In 1865 our people accepted in the utmost good faith the arbitrament of the sword. The prejudices and passions engendered by that titantic struggle have passed away, and to-day Connecticut is not more loyal than Carolina. We are not only loyal to the Union but we love it, and are teaching our children to love it more and more. Over every schoolhouse the flag floats, and the first note of the Star Spangled Banner brings every child to his feet. To-day while we debate a question that involves the character of our people and the very destiny of our State, far to the south 3,000 North Carolina boys man the frontier, ready at the word of command to leap forward with "the cry that rang through Shiloh's woods and Chickamauga's solitudes" and do and die for the Nation's weal.

As we are doing our part in making and protecting the Nation, we have a right to look to the Nation to protect us from a band of marauders that by the cause of our alien hand would filch from us both our purse and our good name. We do not flee from this court. We look to it as our hope and our reliance.

"Our hearts, our hopes, our prayers, our tears,
Our faith triumphant o'er our fears,
Are all with Thee, are all with Thee."

NANTICOKE RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Order of Business 810, being the bill (S. 7359) authorizing the Delaware Railroad Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Nanticoke River at Seaford, Sussex County, Del.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in the Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment.

The amendment was, on page 1, line 7, after the words "Nanticoke River," to insert "at a point suitable to the interests of navigation."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BASIS OF REPRESENTATION.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I submit the following Senate resolution and ask that it may be read by the Secretary and go over under the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 315), as follows:

Resolved, That the following governmental conditions attending the election of President of the United States under the electoral system and the representation of the people of the United States in the House of Representatives imperatively demand in a republican form of government remedial legislation to the end that the representation of population, not merely in the census returns, but who are permitted under undiscriminating laws and the administration thereof to participate in self-government by active and effective voting, so that the controlling vote of no State shall be cast solely by a minority of its population and still retain its full representation and influence in elections on the basis of that population:

First. The returns of successive elections prove conclusively that both presidential electors and Representatives in Congress receive from two to six times a greater percentage of votes to the total population in some States than in others, resulting in overrepresentation in certain States.

Second. Representatives in Congress represent in the districts of certain States a grossly disproportionate actual vote cast compared with the actual votes cast in districts of other States, so that the election of Representatives does not signify popular government, but unfair representation of the people who are not permitted to exercise acts of self-government which would longer justify those who do from having the representative power for those who do not.

Third. The ratio of representation fixed in the last congressional apportionment act is 211,877 for each of the 435 districts in the United States, and the acts of the legislatures of the several States have created districts within their respective States accordingly.

Fourth. The percentage of actual votes to the whole population in some districts and States is so low compared with the actual votes cast in other States and districts proportionate to the latter's population as to demonstrate that in the first-named States and districts the potential vote is habitually suppressed or omitted.

Fifth. The acts of various State legislatures in the States which cast such low percentages of actual votes contain provisions commonly known as "grandfather clauses" or "literacy tests," so applied as to exempt from their operation certain of their population and disfranchise the remainder of the voting population, and those election laws, with certain other well-known conditions attending national elections in such States are the causes of the suppression or omission of such votes, resulting in the unjust overrepresentation named in paragraphs 1 and 2.

Sixth. Recent decisions of the United States Supreme Court prior to the November, 1916, elections have declared in the Oklahoma and Maryland cases that the amendments to the Oklahoma State constitution in one case and the statutes of the State of Maryland in the other unlawfully exempted in their operation certain citizens from the tests there imposed and applied such tests to the remainder in such a way as unlawfully to deprive them of the right to vote.

Seventh. It becomes material to a free representative form of government to know if acts of a nature similar to those referred to in paragraph 6, so declared to be void, were in force and applied by the State election authorities in certain States of the Union in the November, 1916, election of Representatives in Congress and the electoral ticket.

Eighth. If Senate joint resolution No. 193 was offered since the decision of the Supreme Court in the Oklahoma and Maryland election cases, whether it was offered as a notice or a menace to the United States Supreme Court or the members thereof that it or they must not assume, except under penalty of vacating their judicial offices, to decide acts of Congress or statutes or constitutions of States unconstitutional if they, or any of them, are in contravention of the Constitution of the United States.

Ninth. Congress, and especially the Senate, is now concerning itself in the publicity of campaign expenses and the corrupt practices at elections, seeking to regulate and prevent the same. The suppression of the votes of an entire race authorized under the Constitution of the United States to exercise all the rights of citizenship, including that of voting, and preventing them from taking any part in elections in nearly one-fourth of the States of the Union is, in the opinion of this Senate, of equal, if not greater significance and requires legislation more urgently to vindicate representative government than to regulate or suppress the practices complained of in the publicity of campaign expenses and alleged corrupt practices in elections.

Tenth. The second section of Article XIV of the Constitution of the United States provides that—

"Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being 21 years of age and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens 21 years of age in such State": Therefore be it further

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections be, and is hereby, directed to investigate the foregoing conditions and recommend a measure or method whereby either the decisions of the United States Supreme Court may be enforced in the several States of the Union on the matters heretofore named, and the conduct of the several States so persisting, if they do, in holding elections under such acts of such States be properly dealt with, so as to secure the rights of all qualified voters, or, in default thereof, that the representation from the offending State or States be reduced pursuant to the mandatory provisions referred to in paragraph 10.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I understand the resolution goes to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois has asked that the resolution may lie over under the rule for one day, as though objected to.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, if the Chair will indulge me for a moment, I see both the Senators from Texas here, and I desire to make an observation pertinent to the question raised by the resolution of the Senator from Illinois. It will take only a moment.

Michigan cast 625,872 votes in the recent presidential election, has 13 Representatives in Congress, and 15 votes in the electoral college. Texas cast 306,420 votes and has 18 Representatives in Congress and 20 electoral votes. With less than half as many votes as Michigan, Texas has one-third more representation here in Congress and counts for one-third more in the election of a President of the United States. One voter in Texas has 33⅓ per cent more voice in the Government than two voters in Michigan.

I wish to state further that under the present administration Michigan has contributed $32,804,000 in internal revenue for the support of the Government, and has received $3,170,000 in Federal appropriations. Texas has contributed $8,898,000 in internal revenues and received $5,231,000 in Government appropriations. With one-half the votes but one-third more representation, Texas has obtained nearly twice as much in Government favor as the State which I have the honor to represent in part. I think that there should be equality among the States—equality of representation and equality under the Constitution and the laws.

If this situation, which I assert with positiveness, does exist, it calls for some remedy at the hands of Congress, which has power to equalize not only representation but, generally speaking, the privileges of government as well.

I may not be on the floor when this resolution comes up for final consideration, but I do hope whenever it is presented it may receive such attention at the hands of Senators as its importance deserves.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. I received a communication from some gentleman the other day which called my attention to the fact that my State did not get as much in appropriations in proportion to its population and voting strength as some other States did. The thing did not appeal to me at all.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will say to the Senator from Montana that would not appeal to me.

Mr. WALSH. Do I understand the Senator from Michigan to take the position that the appropriations made by Congress ought to be distributed around among the several States in proportion to their voting strength?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No, Mr. President; if the statement made by the Senator from Montana had been made to me I should regard it as lightly as does the Senator from Montana; but I know of no reason in the world why Texas should have a greater voice in the choice of a President of the United States and greater representation in Congress with only one-half the vote which Michigan casts.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I ought first to yield to the Senator from Montana, who first addressed me.

Mr. HARDWICK. I thought the Senator from Montana was through. Does not the Senator from Michigan know that the voice Texas has in those questions is determined by population and not by voting strength, according to the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; I think it is unfair to count all the people of Texas for purposes of enumeration and representation and then abridge the rights of citizens in Texas.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is not the question. The Senator is complaining about a plain provision of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; I am not.

Mr. HARDWICK. Representation is based on population.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I claim that either the representation of Texas is greater than it should be and out of proportion to her population, or else the voice of her population is stifled in the exercise of a plain constitutional right.

Now, I want to correct my honored friend from Montana. I did not say that appropriations should go with voting strength. That would be absurd. No Senator would say that. But I do say that the burdens of government should be distributed fairly, and it is at least unfair that the State which I have the honor to represent in part should bear a disproportionate share of the burdens and expense of the Government.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the Senator yield again?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. HARDWICK. Those laws operate impartially throughout the Union, in every State in the Union.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. They do not operate impartially. The Senator knows that it has been the policy of his party to pass laws in such form as would bear most heavily on industry in the North.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, the Senator can not put any such words as that in my mouth. The Senator from Georgia does not know anything of the kind.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will withdraw the imputation. The Senator is always fair.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not think the Senator from Michigan knows any such thing, either. Of course, the Senator may contend that, but before no thoughtful forum will such a proposition as that ever be successfully maintained.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Now, let us see a moment. I do not want to prolong the discussion, and I did not start it; but under the present administration of the National Government my State has contributed $32,804,000 to the public revenue under laws which heavily penalize prosperity.

Mr. HARDWICK. Has the Senator made any such comparison as to show what the States contributed under the last administration and the administration before that? I hope the Senator will do so.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; I made a comparison that would be exceedingly interesting to the Senator, because under laws which I have assisted in passing when my party was in power the burdens of public expense have been met by collecting duties on imports according to the historical policy of our Government from its foundation, thus safeguarding our industries and collecting with certainty the necessary revenues.

Mr. HARDWICK. It comes back to the tariff question, then?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes. I will say to the Senator from Georgia it comes back where you are coming, I think, very slowly, but I think very surely, much against your will. However, necessity prompts you. You must reestablish that principle which your party has torn down with such ruthless hands, or face a demoralized and exhausted Treasury. We never felt called upon to appear before the country as apologists for our financial system; we never have been called upon to face an apparent deficit of over $300,000,000 in the revenue in a single year; and it was because we levied our duties according to the historic policy of this Government for over a century of its marvelous prosperity. I am not going to say any more; I did not intend to say as much, but the resolution of the Senator from Illinois quickened my resentment.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Will the Senator from Michigan yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I would yield to the Senator, but I can not do so at this moment, for it would interrupt the continuity of my thought.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I would not consent to do that on any account.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I reassert the statement which I made at the beginning, that while Michigan has contributed $32,000,000 in internal revenue under this administration, that marvelous empire, the imperial State of Texas, a State which I greatly admire and whose people I most highly respect; which is so ably represented upon the other side of the Chamber—Texas, that once felt herself nearly strong enough to stand upon her own feet as an independent entity in the family of nations, actually contributed but $8,898,000 to the internal revenue, and received in return, by the favor of this administration, $5,232,000 of Government appropriations. Perhaps we ought not to complain, but I do not think that is fair. I am willing that Texas should get all the appropriations that she needs; I have voted for a great many of them, but I think that if people are to be counted for purposes of representation they are still citizens on election day; if they are to be counted for purposes of enumeration and representation, they ought to be permitted to vote in accordance with the constitutional right of citizenship.

Mr. HARDWICK and Mr. SHERMAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before the Senator proceeds——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the Senator pardon me a moment while I interject a very pertinent and appropriate reference to this entire subject, which is found in the Constitution of the United States? The language of the Constitution reads:

> But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being 21 years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens 21 years of age in such State.

Mr. President, my friends upon the other side of the Chamber may quarrel with the Constitution if they like. We have been supine and indifferent to the rights of our fellow citizens in other States; we have shown a delicate and scrupulous regard for the proprieties of our national situation; but when the great State of Texas has a third more representation in the Congress of the United States than has the State of Michigan, from which I come, and when we cast 668,000 votes for President of the United States while Texas casts but 300,000, I think the situation calls for some attention. There is a very disproportionate representation from many States in the North or a very exaggerated representation from many States in the South. When I say this I do not mean to give offense, I mean to emphasize a glaring inequity in our present plan of representation.

Mr. SHEPPARD and Mr. SHERMAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair had recognized the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK].

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I had told the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] that I would yield for a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator must address the Chair before seeking to interrupt.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Michigan about a matter which I expect to use later in considering the corrupt-practices act; namely, the menace or threat contained in Senate joint resolution 195 to the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, that they will be removed from office if they persist in declaring acts of Congress unconstitutional?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Well, but such a law has not yet passed Congress, has it?

Mr. SHERMAN. No.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Does the Senator from Illinois think that there is any likelihood that it will even receive serious consideration?

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, anything will receive careful consideration in this body, and the more ridiculous it is the more apt it is to receive favorable consideration. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I have been here longer than has the Senator from Illinois, and I have seen a great many foolish things done here, but I have never in my life seen anything quite so grotesque as the proposition the Senator has described.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator has served longer than have I, but he never saw such a Senate as this.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Oh, Mr. President, I will not say that. I look about this Senate and compare it with those that have preceded it. I do not now see many men of long service here who have made national and international fame. I do not see here the stalwart figure of Roscoe Conkling or that of James G. Blaine or that of David B. Hill, who used to grace a seat in yonder corner of the Chamber, about where the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] now sits. I do not see many eminent men who have come and gone, like Lamar and Vest and Morgan, like Allison and Spooner and Platt; but I do see men with great ability, high character and honesty, integrity, and patriotism here; and if they are permitted to remain as long as their predecessors remained I dare say their fame will be none the less resplendent.

The old method of electing Senators was calculated to season the candidate for future prestige and long service. The new system gives wider scope and greater freedom to the ambitions of our citizens, and the most popular is not always the best fitted. But as I look at the State of New York and its representation to-day I do not think it has suffered. I think it bears very favorable comparison with former days. As I look at the representation from Ohio I do not think it has suffered by the changes that have taken place. I do not think Illinois has suffered in her prestige by the changes here; I do not think that Georgia or Mississippi or Alabama or Colorado or North Carolina or Iowa or any of these great States of the Union have suffered by the changes. The men who are here are intelligent, upright, patriotic men, painstaking in the performance of their duties; but they are dealing with a situation that is very different from that which confronted their predecessors. New questions call for new review.

No; I do not despair of the Senate. And I think action on the measure to which the Senator from Illinois has called my attention will reveal in a new light the patriotism and the intelligence of Senators upon both sides of this Chamber. I do not believe a half dozen votes can be found on either side of the Chamber for such a bill. The attempt to curb and to discipline the Supreme Court of the United States will fail, as it should fail, to receive the approval of the American people or their representatives here.

No; Mr. President, I am not ready to say that there has been any decadence in the public life of our country.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am through, and I yield the floor gladly to the Senator, unless he cares to interrogate me.

Mr. OWEN. I merely want to ask the Senator whether he is aware that the Congress of the United States, by the Constitution of the United States, has the lawful right to control the cases that should go on appeal to the Supreme Court?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Oh, undoubtedly, to a limited extent; but the Supreme Court, in passing upon the cases that come before it for adjudication, always have in mind the constitutional safeguards which have been thrown about the rights of person and property in this Republic, and we are beating our heads against a stone wall when we attempt to coerce or restrict the steady and even flow of justice from a tribunal created by the same hand which gave life to the legislative department of the Government.

Mr. OWEN. Does the Senator take the position that after the Senate of the United States and the House of Representatives of the United States and the President of the United States, upon their oaths, have passed a bill, thereby declaring it constitutional, they are guilty of a violation of their oath of office if the Supreme Court declare it unconstitutional?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; Mr. President, Congress and the President have simply shown their ignorance of the fundamental law, the court must correct them when in error. I take the position that this Government has been divided into three distinct and separate branches, each in its own sphere, independent and supreme. Those three spheres—the executive, the legislative, and the judicial—get their dignity and their strength from their constitutional right of independent action, and it little becomes the Congress of the United Sates or the Executive to undertake to coerce or unduly influence either of the other departments of the Government, and any resolution or any law intended to coerce the judiciary of our country in the performance of its constitutional duty should be and will be discouraged and defeated by intelligent men who love their country and respect its organic laws.

Mr. OWEN. Does the Senator take the position that the Congress of the United States can have its acts nullified at will by the judiciary?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes, Mr. President. When they are in conflict with the Constitution of the United States, which is the fundamental law.

Mr. OWEN. Then the Senator takes the position that nine gentlemen on that court, or a majority of them, have a greater knowledge of the law, and that they have more power under the Constitution, than the Congress of the United States, which by that instrument was vested in effect with the sovereign power belonging to the legislature which is enumerated there—the right to tax the people of the United States, to expend the money taxed from the people of the United States, to declare war, to make peace, and to make treaties with foreign countries.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Oh, Mr. President, it would be a sad day for this Republic when the constitutional power of our highest judicial tribunal is restricted and restrained and its solemn judgment nullified by men holding place in a coordinate legislative or executive department of the Government.

Mr. OWEN subsequently said, Mr. President, I was interrupted when I wanted to put into the RECORD the joint resolution which I introduced bearing upon the question then under discussion, which joint resolution was criticized by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN]. I desire at this point to have that joint resolution inserted in the RECORD without reading. It is Senate joint resolution 195.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIRBY in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The joint resolution referred to is as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 195) forbidding Federal judges to declare any act of Congress unconstitutional and providing penalties therefor.

Whereas the Constitution of the United States gives no authority to any judicial officer to declare unconstitutional an act which has been declared constitutional by a majority of the Members of the United States Senate and of the House of Representatives and by the President of the United States, who, on their several oaths, have declared the opinion in the passage of such act that it is constitutional; and

Whereas in the Constitutional Convention, in which the Constitution of the United States was framed, the motion was three times made to give to the Supreme Court in some mild form the right to express an opinion upon the constitutionality of acts of Congress and was three times overwhelmingly rejected; and

Whereas such assumption of power by the Federal courts interferes with the reasonable exercise of the sovereignty of the people of the United States and diverts it from the hands of the representatives of the people in Congress assembled to a tribunal appointed for life and subject to no review and to no control by the people of the United States, and is therefore against a wise public policy; and

Whereas the declaration by any Federal court that the acts of Congress are unconstitutional constitutes an usurpation of power: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That from and after the passage of this act Federal judges are forbidden to declare any act of Congress unconstitutional.

No appeal shall be permitted in any case in which the constitutionality of an act of Congress is challenged, the passage by Congress of any act being deemed conclusive presumption of the constitutionality of such act.

Any Federal judge who declares any act passed by the Congress of the United States to be unconstitutional is hereby declared to be guilty of violating the constitutional requirement of "good behavior" upon which his tenure of office rests and shall be held by such decision ipso facto to have vacated his office.

SEC. 2. That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to nominate a successor to fill the position vacated by such judicial officer.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, since it is perfectly obvious that Congress can make such exceptions and provide the regulations under which the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court may be exercised, if Congress henceforth permits the inferior courts to declare unconstitutional and void the acts of Congress and permits such cases to be appealed to the Supreme Court, any regulations which would permit that court to pass upon the constitutionality of the acts of Congress and to declare such acts unconstitutional and void, then the Congress of the United States will be itself abdicating the sovereign power of the people of the United States. I shall never consent to this. I do not feel willing, as a representative of the people of the United States, to yield the sovereignty vested in the people and in their representatives in Congress.

I think it is against a wise public policy to permit this. It makes it impossible for the people of the United States ever to know what the law is according to our written statutes if we allow this judicial control; it introduces an element of confusion and uncertainty in the meaning of the laws, and makes it impossible for the people of the United States, with certainty and precision, to determine questions of public policy through the National Legislature or to hold the National Legislature responsible to themselves for a failure to make effective such national policies.

In the great questions which are now arising in the country before us, it is, in my judgment, imperative that the people of the United States should be permitted to exercise their sovereign power through their delegates in Congress and to hold such delegates to Congress responsible therefor.

I desire also to have inserted in the RECORD paragraph 2 of section 2 of Article III of the Constitution, reading as follows:

In all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, and those in which a State shall be party, the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction. In all the other cases before mentioned the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction, both as to law and fact, with such exceptions and under such regulations as the Congress shall make.

So that the jurisdiction exercised by the Supreme Court of the United States is a statutory jurisdiction, made in pursuance of the Constitution, and it is within the power of Congress to preserve its own sovereignty by limiting the cases which may be appealed to that court and by instructing the inferior courts which are established by the statutory power of Congress.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan is always interesting to me. The variety of his information and the boldness with which he expresses or asserts his opinions are not only interesting but very often instructive. Now, I shall not dispute with the Senator this afternoon as to the wisdom of the Supreme Court of the United States exercising the almost despotic power which it assumes to exercise; but I think it is an historic fact that the convention of 1787 which framed the Constitution did not intend to confer that power upon the court. The matter, I think, was four times distinctly submitted to that convention, and four times it was defeated. Notwithstanding the fact that the proposition had the support of such men as James Wilson, of Pennsylvania, and Madison, two of the most learned and influential members of the convention, it only received the vote of three States. In this statement I think I am historically accurate. I might add, also, that it is my opinion that if the Constitution had definitely conferred upon the court the power and authority which the court exercises to-day it would not have been adopted by a single State.

Mr. OWEN. There is no question about that, Mr. President.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I am through, Mr. President. I simply desired to make that statement that the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] might understand that the proposition made by the able and learned Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] was not altogether new—it is not novel. On the contrary, it is a subject that has been discussed, and ably discussed, by some of the most learned lawyers that this country has produced. I trust the learned Senator from Michigan in the course of his illuminating discourse may throw more light upon this very important theme. It is entirely worthy of his genius.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I might add to the comment——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield to the Senator from Utah for a moment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, the statement made by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] has been made by others a great many times. It has been made by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. The fact that it is an old statement does not make it a correct statement. I undertake to say that nothing of the kind described by the Senator from Mississippi ever occurred. No attempt was made in the framers' convention either to confer upon or to take away from the Supreme Court in express terms the power to pass upon the constitutionality of an act of Congress or of an act of a legislature of a State. What occurred was an entirely different thing. An attempt was made upon two or three occasions during that convention to confer upon the Supreme Court, in connection with the President of the United States, a veto power; to make, in effect, the Supreme Court a council of revision, and to confer upon that body, in connection with the President of the United States, a veto power over the legislation of Congress. Of course it requires no analysis to demonstrate that the power to say what the law shall be is a wholly different thing from the power which the Supreme Court exercises and has exercised for more than 125 years to decide what the law is.

The Constitution of the United States itself provides that the Constitution shall be the supreme law of the land. It is more than a compact; it is more than a contract between these 48 States; it is what it declares itself to be, "the supreme law of the land," made by the sovereign lawmaking body of the land, namely, the people themselves. Now, I submit that it is a matter too plain for argument, that when one of the agents of these sovereign people, namely, the Congress of the United States, undertakes to write a statute, and that statute in the regular consideration of a case properly before the Supreme Court is presented to the Supreme Court and the question is properly brought before that body as to whether or not that act of legislation is in harmony with the Constitution of the United States, which is the supreme law, the judicial power of the court to deal with that question at once attaches. If that body in the regular exercise of its jurisdiction is confronted with two instruments—the Constitution of the United States and a statute—the former of which is declared to be the supreme law and to which therefore every statutory enactment must correspond, the Supreme Court must follow the supreme law and not the statute which was passed in contravention of the supreme law. That is the exercise of judicial power. It is the normal and ordinary exercise of judicial power. It is exactly the power which any court exercises when it is confronted with two conflicting statutes, one of which says one thing and another which says an entirely different thing. Both can not stand. Of course the court must determine which shall stand. Ordinarily, it would take the later enactment as the one which stands. It would attempt to reconcile them, but if that were impossible, it would of necessity be obliged to determine that one was valid and the other void, because it is of the essence of judicial power to ascertain and declare what the law is.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the difficulty with the Senator is that he begs the question.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Just a moment; let me finish the thought, and then I will yield. When, therefore, Congress has passed an act, which is invoked in the course of proceedings before the Supreme Court, and it appears that that act is in contravention of the supreme law of the land, of course the courts can do nothing else except to declare the supreme law controls, and not the statute which is enacted in opposition to the supreme law.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator ignores the fact that it is not the Constitution which is the supreme law of the land alone. It is the Constitution and the statutes passed by Congress in pursuance thereof.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Precisely; and that emphasizes the point that I am making. It is not every statute passed by Congress that is the supreme law of the land, but it is, first of all, the Constitution of the United States, and, second, statutes passed in pursuance of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. OWEN. They could not pass any statute except in pursuance of the authority granted by the Constitution.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly not. It is no law, then. It is a void thing. But it is perfectly obvious that if the Constitution be the supreme law of the land, anything else which contravenes it is not the supreme law of the land.

Mr. OWEN. The only authority which has the right to declare a law constitutional is the Congress of the United States.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator and I are in hopeless disagreement about that, and fortunately——

Mr. OWEN. I observe that, and for that reason I stated the case.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator is not only in disagreement with myself about that, but he is in disagreement with the best thought of the country for 125 years.

Mr. OWEN. That remains to be seen.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And he is in disagreement with the decisions of the courts of the country for 125 years and in disagreement with the position occupied by both Houses of Congress and by all the Presidents of the United States from the beginning of this Government down to the present time.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, a question of order. I raise the point of order that this whole discussion is out of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I appreciate the indulgence of the Chair. It was not my intention to proceed any further.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Concurrent and other resolutions are in order.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I just want to state at this point, in reply to what the distinguished Senator from Utah has said as to the historical accuracy of what I said regarding the limitation of the powers of the Federal Supreme Court as contemplated by the framers of the Constitution, that

I shall endeavor to establish at some time in the near future the accuracy of my statement.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I shall be very glad to have the Senator undertake that impossible task.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, if the Senate will pardon me, inasmuch as the Senator mentioned my State I want to say that the right to vote is not denied or abridged in any way in the State of Texas, and any intimation to that effect is as unkind as it is without any foundation whatever. The smallness of the vote is due to the fact that the Democratic Party is so overwhelmingly in the majority that less interest is felt in the national election, and less part taken in it, than in States where the contest is close. The population of Texas is over 4,000,000, while that of Michigan is a little over 3,000,000. Besides, any criticism of Texas comes with ill grace from the Senator from Michigan, because we have sent more money into Michigan for Ford automobiles than Michigan ever contributed to the Federal Government above appropriations received. [Laughter.]

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, in order that it may not appear that Texas is the only sinning one in the galaxy of our Nation, I have to portray a situation in the State of New Jersey which is very like the stiuation described by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH].

New Jersey, which cast 580,000 votes in the recent presidential election, has 12 Congressmen and 14 votes in the Electoral College. Georgia, which cast 137,056 votes, has 12 Congressmen and 14 electoral votes. With less than one-fourth as many votes as New Jersey, Georgia has the same representation and counts for as much in the election of a President. One voter in Georgia has the voice in Government of four voters in New Jersey. It may be that he is four times as valuable. I will not attempt to say that, but the people of New Jersey would not believe it.

Under the present administration New Jersey has contributed $47,853,559 in internal revenues to the support of the Government and has received $2,011,424 in Federal appropriations. Georgia paid $3,163,402 in internal revenue and received $1,874,579 in Government appropriations. With less than one-fourth the votes, but the same representation, Georgia has obtained nearly as much in Government expenditures, while paying approximately one-twelfth as much taxes.

Now, I will not attempt to contend that this may not be just or perhaps not fair or legal, but it does seem utterly inequitable and utterly unfair. I do not know. It may be I can attribute it—I thought that I could when I read this first—perhaps to the more industrious activity of the statesmen from Georgia and the statesmen from Mississippi than the statesmen from Michigan and the statesmen from my little Commonwealth. Whatever may be the cause, the result is the same; and I should like to join with the Senator from Michigan—whether he is a Republican or a Democrat, I do not care so much on a question of this kind—in seeing a little more equitable administration of these affairs.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I do not feel that my State or the State of Texas, either, for that matter, can be put on trial in this body in any such way; and I am not disposed to accept very seriously the statements of Senators on either side. When the Senator from Michigan was proceeding I somehow or other felt that possibly nothing ought to be said, because after every election we allow certain latitude for disappointed people. They are allowed to kick a little without anything being said about it, very much as in old England it used to be that sailors while they were being flogged could say pretty much what they pleased about the King or the Government. I do not think the Senators expect us to take too seriously these sectional and quasi sectional arguments that they are making.

It is, however, a matter of concern to me that any Senator, whether he sits on one side of this Chamber or the other—and I am very glad, for the purposes of my remarks, that the two Senators who have taken occasion to do so sit on opposite sides of this Chamber, because it will relieve my remarks of anything like a partisan character—I am very sorry always when any Senator on either side of this Chamber uses his great position to create or tend to create in any way sectional rivalries or jealousies or enmites among the people of this country. I thought that in this body, at least, the day was past when statesmen of broad mind and broad view could regard that as a fitting position for them to occupy.

Unfortunately there have been periods in the history of this country when that sort of thing was all too common; but what we sow we reap. We sowed hatred on the floors of both of these Chambers of Congress, and we reaped a whirlwind before we finished. Surely the time has come when the good people throughout this country are sick and tired unto death of all this talk about the North and the South and the East and the West; and surely the day has come when in the Senate of the United States, at least, and in the Congress of our common country, sentiments of that sort are no longer popular, are no longer right, and ought not to be and will not be tolerated.

If the Senator from New Jersey or the Senator from Michigan can assail the justice of any appropriation that has been made the benefits of which extend to any State, North, East, South, or West, I think they will find that there are many Senators on both sides of this Chamber who will join them, regardless of locality or geography. It is utterly unfair, it is utterly ungenerous, it is utterly unstatesmanlike, for Senators to undertake to segregate appropriations by States, and to undertake to create feeling between States as well as between sections, on account of the relative size of appropriations.

If any appropriation that has been made for Georgia is wrong, fight it on its merits, and you will not find me defending it if I think you are right. If any appropriation that is made for Texas is wrong, fight it because it is wrong, not because it is for Texas, and I believe you will find the distinguished and able Senators from Texas agreeing with you if they believe you are right. But this proposition—narrow, infinitesimally small, unutterably little—of taking any State in this Union and saying: "Oh, this State got so much money and paid so much taxes," is one that will not appeal to the good sense of the American people, and will not appeal to the patriotism of the country.

What does it matter if the smallest State in this Union needs for proper Federal appropriations the largest amount of money of any State in the Union? What does it matter to any of us, if we are broad American statesmen, Senators from the whole country, and representing it all? What does it matter whether the State is Democratic or Republican? What does it matter whether it lies in the North or in the South or in the East or in the West? Surely statemanship in this Chamber has not yet sunk to any such level as that.

I say here and now to my friend from Michigan, whom I have known and loved through all these years, and to my friend from New Jersey, whom I have not known quite so well, but I have loved equally well, that if I know my own heart I would not vote against any appropriation for their States, because it went to the North or to the Middle West, nor would I fail to vote for any just and reasonable appropriation for any State in this Union, where I thought it was a proper appropriation of the Federal funds. I think that is true about almost every Senator who sits in this Chamber, whether he comes from one section or from another section of our common country.

One of my friends suggests, in an aside, that possibly some of these very revenues that Senators speak of may have been paid by the people of Georgia or the people of Texas. Quite true. We buy your automobiles, as my friend from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] suggested. We buy mules from Missouri. We buy horses from Kentucky.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is that all you get from Kentucky—horses? [Laughter.]

Mr. HARDWICK. Well, it does not look like we are getting much more nowadays. [Laughter.] But I do not think the Senator ought to be entirely jocular about this thing.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am not quarreling with the appropriations. I voted for many of these appropriations. What I am talking about is the distribution of the burdens of Government.

Mr. HARDWICK. Well, now, wait a minute. If the Senator voted for the appropriations, and he thought they were just and right, one by one and all in all, why should he come up and stand before the Senate of the United States and before the people of the United States and point out that a certain amount of dollars went to Georgia or a certain other amount went to Texas? Is that broad patriotism?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; the Senator must state the facts correctly.

Mr. HARDWICK. I certainly would not do the Senator the slightest injustice.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The truth is that I said that Michigan had contributed $32,000,000 in internal revenue for the support of this administration, and had received about $3,000,000 in appropriations from this administration.

Mr. HARDWICK. And the Senator cited some other States.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. While Texas has contributed $8,000,000 in internal revenue, and has taken out $5,800,000 of appropriations. Now, I am not complaining about the appropriations. I am quite liberal in my views of appropriations; but I think that the scheme of government devised by Senators on the other side in a caucus and in closed committee rooms which distributes the burdens of Government so skillfully, and yet so unfairly, that they weigh overheavily upon one State, and out of proportion to what it should bear, is a proper subject of criticism.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, after all, I have not misunderstood the Senator's position. I did not think I had. I do not want to do him an injustice. He points to these matters in this way, whether for the purpose or not, certainly with the effect of having a tendency to excite sectional feeling in this country.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Oh, no; Mr. President, that is far from my purpose.

Mr. HARDWICK. Well, it was generally done in the recent campaign. I was surprised to see my friend from New Jersey join in it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It was not done by me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. HARDWICK. Not, for the moment, to anybody. We whipped that sort of thing in this presidential campaign. To my great regret, almost to my shame as an American citizen, this is the first campaign in many years where I have seen any such sectional arguments made about appropriations and tax burdens as were made in this campaign; and this is the first campaign in many years in which I have seen even a presidential candidate stoop from what I consider his high place in order to revive, or attempt to revive, sectional feeling. The result was not gratifying to you on the Republican side. It was not pleasant to us. It seems to me that the sooner we get away from that sort of thing, and the longer we keep away from it and the farther we keep away from it, the better off we will be in all parts of this country, North, East, South, and West.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia now yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. HARDWICK. For a question.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I simply wanted to observe that——

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not yield for an observation just at present.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I entertain no hostility toward the South. I am calling attention to an inequitable division of the burdens of Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Georgia declines to yield.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me just a moment, I want to finish the train of thought I have in my mind, and then I will yield to the Senator.

Senators assert that they entertain no hostility, yet they point out and insist on pointing out State by State, particularizing the sovereign Commonwealths of the American Union to which appropriations, according to their contentions, are unfairly given and unfairly distributed, and the Government burdens of taxation are also unfairly imposed from a geographical standpoint.

Mr. President, I utterly deny it. I utterly repudiate the suggestion. I do not believe the American Senate and the American Congress has been conducted on any such plane. If the Senator from Michigan or my friend the Senator from New Jersey could have established anything whatever of the contention they seem to have in mind, there has not been a day and there has not been an occasion when the Senate would not have stood ready to sustain either one, but because it happened, if it be the fact, that certain of the States are poorer in material resources, poorer in wealth than other States, are you therefore to say to them, "Because you are poor, because your people can not contribute out of their poverty as much as we contribute out of our wealth, therefore we are not going to give you the proper Federal improvements and appropriations in your State"? I do not believe any Senator would care to take such a position.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, it appears to me that the argument of both the Senators is entirely unfair. All these revenues, while they are paid from the State, are generally paid by the consumers of all the States. Take my own State, for instance. We pay into the Federal Treasury probably over $30,000,000. We pay $25,000,000 of it as an internal-revenue tax. While that was paid by the distillers of Kentucky, they, of course, got it back from the consumers of whisky to whom it was sold.

Now, to say that Kentucky is discriminated against because we paid thirty or forty million dollars into the Federal Treasury and only got a million out of it in appropriations is so manifestly unfair that even for partisan purposes in a hot political campaign it weighs utterly nothing with the fair-minded American people.

Mr. HARDWICK. Not only that, Mr. President, and I quite agree with the Senator's contention about it, it is true not only about the whisky-distilling business he has mentioned, but also every other business in this country. It is true about every form of business where a tax is paid by the manufacturer or the producer and is passed on to the consumer. There is no need to go into that. The spirit I am protesting against is the spirit that it is the duty of the American Congress to draw a balance sheet between the several States. It is not right to inculcate any such spirit as that. It is not right to teach our people any such lesson as that. If there is a single one of these appropriations that is being made for the North or the East or the South or the West that is not right, if it is wrong, if it is too much, fight that appropriation, regardless of geography, regardless of section, regardless of the State.

If there is a single tax that is not fair and just to all the people of the United States and does not operate on them all equally throughout the United States, oppose that, and after you get through do not come up here with a little sum total about what the State of New Jersey or the State of New York or the State of Rhode Island or the State of Arizona or any other Commonwealth has gotten from the American Government or has paid into the American Treasury, and do not bring in support of such contentions figures that are wholly incomplete and totally misleading.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, does not the Senator think that these gentlemen, in order to justify their position, ought to show what appropriations have been asked for New Jersey and for Michigan which were denied and what appropriation was given to Georgia which was unjust and which they themselves opposed? That is the way to get at it.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, undoubtedly; and if I have made myself plain to the Senate, I mean just this: Do not draw up a little, tiny, puny, or sectional balance sheet between the States of this great country, all of which are inhabited by the American people. Do not revive any such sectionalism on any such small, narrow line as that. It is both pitiful and disgusting.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not feel the slightest prejudice against the South. I never have done so. My ancestors on my mother's side were southern people, and I share their affection for the Southland; but I am complaining of an injustice which the Senator from Georgia would be quick to resent.

Mr. HARDWICK. If that is true, the Senator ought not to do what he has been doing to-day.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; I ought to do exactly what I have been doing or I would be unfaithful to my duty as a Senator, because in the administration of affairs of this Government your party has so skillfully made its laws that the burdens of government fall heavily upon our section of the country and lightly upon yours.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I am not going to yield further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). The Senator from Georgia declines to yield further.

Mr. HARDWICK. As a matter of fact, it is not so. It would be wrong if it was true.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I gave you an illustration.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not believe it, and you can not prove it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The honored Senator from New Jersey gave you an illustration quite in point.

Mr. HARDWICK. Of course that would be very wrong if true; but there is not anything true about it, and it does not prove it. To state that a certain State did not pay into the Federal Treasury as much as some oher State and prove that certain appropriations for Federal purposes in that State were more than in some others does not prove that proposition at all.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator from Georgia knows very well that about the first thing that was done after you came into power was to strike down the protection that we had upon our industries.

Mr. HARDWICK. Personally I am devotedly attached to my friend from Michigan, but I can not yield further.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Senators of your party in this Chamber exposed our sugar industry to ruin. Only the European war has caused it to revive.

Mr. HARDWICK. Sugar is ruined now, is it? They are making more money now than they ever made in the history of the country, in spite of the Senator's contention.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. We are enjoying the high protection of the war.

Mr. HARDWICK. They are making more money now than they ever made in the history of the world before.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Because there is no world competition on account of the war, and your party has partially restored the threat of free trade.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I am not going to yield for any tariff argument. I am going to get through because the Senator from Montana wants to go on with his bill. To my mind, with all due respect to the Senator, this tariff talk is all rot.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think the Senator knows that when they put the tariff back on sugar they did it because the industry had been severely crippled and because you needed the revenue.

Mr. HARDWICK. I am astonished. Certainly that is one schedule the Senator from Georgia knows something about.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator knows about it.

Mr. HARDWICK. The exact reverse of the Senator's statement is true, so far as the industry being crippled is concerned.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I have read the Senator's report on it.

Mr. HARDWICK. When we put back, or retained, the tax on sugar there was not the slightest excuse for it on this earth from any standpoint I can think of, Democratic or Republican——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Then, why did you do it? For revenue?

Mr. HARDWICK. Except for protection; that is all. We could have gotten the revenue by a consumption tax—twice as much revenue—a tax like that imposed in every civilized country on earth that raises any sugar. That is the situation in respect to sugar; but I am not going to be led into that discussion now.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not blame the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator from Georgia is never afraid to face the Senator from Michigan on a tariff argument.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I know the Senator. He is very brave and very capable.

Mr. HARDWICK. But we do not want to get off into that now. Of course, if the Senator's complaint is that we have done injustice in that we have cut down the protective tariff a little, I must confess there might be some ground for him to stand on, from his standpoint. We have not reduced the tariff as much, I tell the Senator frankly, as I think we ought to have done, nor as much as I still hope to see it reduced.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. More than you will ever do again, however.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will say to the Senator that if that is his complaint I can understand him, even while disagreeing. If that is really what you mean, then do not go into this little petty picayunish business of drawing tax and appropriation balances between the States of this great American Union.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. Preident——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HARDWICK. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I observe the Senator from Georgia suggests that the tariff is likely to be still further reduced. Am I mistaken in reading in the daily press that the President of the United States has suggested that the revenue bill will have to be revised and there will have to be greater protection than there is now?

Mr. HARDWICK. I can not tell what the Senator from New Hampshire has been reading in the daily press, nor can I vouch for the accuracy of any such report as that.

Mr. GALLINGER. I can vouch for having read it.

Mr. HARDWICK. I have no doubt the Senator has read it, but I say I can not vouch for any newspaper report.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is it not in contemplation?

Mr. HARDWICK. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I will suggest to the Senator from Georgia that I am very sure the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] would like to continue the reading of the report.

Mr. HARDWICK. What report?

Mr. WALSH. The report on the bill pending before the Senate.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator from Georgia is going to complete his remarks before that is done.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have no disposition to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. HARDWICK. I supposed I was doing my friend from Michigan a very great kindness.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am very much interested in the debate.

Mr. HARDWICK. I am going to say just a few words more that I have risen to say. I am also tired of all this talk about depriving people of their votes. We have had that until it has gotten just a little stale and tiresome, I think. There are 28 States in this Union, if my memory is accurate, that do not allow certain males, 21 years of age, to vote, by various devices. Whenever you get ready to apply any such rule as is contained in the second section of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, it may be that we might consider the proposition then; but until you do get ready to do it do not let us talk in this general, vague, indefinite way about it. So far as I am concerned I am not devoted to that section of the Constitution, as the Senator knows. I think it was adopted at a time when passion and prejudice ran riot in this country and obscured the clear judgment of our lawmakers. That, however, might be very well a subject of difference between the Senator and myself; but all this continual attempt to revive sectional feeling and to talk about the States of this country as if they were foreign countries, talk about the people of those States as if they were antagonistic and hostile to each other, does no good, either here or elsewhere; and for one, as a sincere personal friend of all the Senators who have indulged in it, knowing the effect that it has in all parts of the country, I earnestly hope the Senators will not give us a recurrence of this sort of thing.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I thought the Senator was about to take his seat.

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am just as free from sectionalism as the Senator, and I have no desire to revive the argument of sectionalism; but the Senator, with all his argument, will not deny the fact I presented.

Mr. HARDWICK. What does it prove?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. You gentlemen—and I regard you all kindly and am very fond of you, and agree with much of your thought—claim, you say, that all this array and presentation of facts—and, of course, they are compiled by the Treasury Department—is small, unpatriotic, and petty politics. I do not know upon what ground or reason the Senator from Georgia or the Senator from Texas—but the Senator from Texas is a little more modest—on what ground the Senator from Georgia should arrogate to himself all the patriotism and all the broadness and depth in legislation and deny it to all those who happen to disagree with him all along on the other side.

Mr. HARDWICK. Let me say, Mr. President——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The Senator has had his time.

Mr. HARDWICK. I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey will suspend for a moment. The Senator from Georgia has the floor.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator has the floor by my courtesy.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. But you granted the floor to me.

Mr. HARDWICK. Not at all. I merely yielded to the Senator.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That is my impression, at all events. I do not want to trespass upon the Senator's time if he has not finished. In God's name let him go on; but, if the Senator will permit me to say it, while I am on the side of the Senator from Michigan seemingly on this question, he must not assume. He said he is surprised to find me in my position. I am, I hope, as broad and patriotic as the Senator ever dared to be, but I am contending for our rights on our side in the State of New Jersey. I feel that we are being unjustly discriminated against and unjustly dealt with.

I do not agree with all the doctrine of the Senator from Michigan on the tariff nonsense. I think it is the greatest heresy in the world. He talks about the tariff on sugar. We have had but little tariff on sugar, but it was not done with my vote. I will never vote to increase the tariff on sugar when you can raise in the territory of the United States from 5 to 7 and even 9 tons of sugar per acre. I will never sweat the people of this country by my vote to grant them any further gratuity. So I do not agree with his doctrine at all. But so far as the facts and figures are presented by the Senator from Michigan there is something unfair in the condition, and so far as these things count I do insist that there is something wrong in that condition; and if you want to rid this country of sectionalism, you can not rid it of sectionalism by taking money out of my pocket and depositing it in yours.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is what we long have thought in the South, but we have even gotten to a point down there where we are willing to give up a little of our cash to the protective interests and to other sections of the country in order to try to get a little better feeling. I am not finding any personal fault with my friend from New Jersey, any more than I did with my friend from Michigan, but the fact remains that if the Senator can see that anything is proven by getting up little balances by States, and that sort of thing, without regard to the justice of the appropriations that go to the States, he is utterly beyond any argument I hope to make upon it. What does it matter if two-thirds of all the Federal appropriations went to any one State if that is the place where that kind of appropriations ought to go, and the appropriation was just and necessary?

Mr. SHEPPARD. May I interrupt my friend from Georgia?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Is it not a fact that the statements quoted by the Senators from Michigan and the Senator from New Jersey did not include all the small appropriations received by their States?

Mr. HARDWICK. I have not even seen the statements the Senators referred to. The details I regard as of small importance.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I quoted the appropriations received from your committee.

Mr. HARDWICK. What does it matter? Did the Senator find fault with any one of them? Did he vote against any one of them?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I say you are claiming all the patriotism and getting all the cash. That is a very serious matter. [Laughter in the galleries.]

Mr. HARDWICK. No; I say the Senator from New Jersey does not do himself great credit in that statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia will please suspend. The Chair admonishes the occupants of the galleries not to make expressions of approval or disapproval. The Senator from Georgia will proceed.

Mr. HARDWICK. Of course, it is all very nice to get up here and talk in a sort of slipshod way about this sort of thing. But that does not do the Senator any good, either. If there has been made for Georgia or for Texas or for any other State of the Union an appropriation that is wrong, the Senator ought to point out why it was wrong, and he ought to have fought it, and he ought not to get up here and indulge in this Republican buncombe of drawing these little balances by States.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Republican what?

Mr. HARDWICK. Buncombe.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I did not indulge in Republican buncombe. My information about it is something more than Republican buncombe, and it is so stanch that it can not be waived off or combated by a Georgia fusillade.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators must obtain recognition from the Chair before speaking.

Mr. HARDWICK. Of course, I yielded to my friend from New Jersey. No matter where he got it, it proves nothing, and the Senator knows it. If these appropriations were wrong, he ought not to have agreed to make them. I certainly would not ask you to make one for my State that was wrong any more than I think he would ask me to make one for his State that was wrong. If those taxes were unjust, they ought not to have been imposed. That is the proposition. I certainly would not support them, whether they fell on my people or his people, unless they were just and reasonable and fair. But to undertake to draw balances between the States of this Union and to say this one got so much and that one paid in so much and the net result is so-and-so is so nearly peanut politics that I do not think the thoughtful people of the United States can possibly approve it or appreciate it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. One thing, Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. What is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. One moment. When the Senate adjourned last night the Secretary was reading from the report of the Committee on Public Lands, on page 14, and had just finished the letter of the Secretary of the Interior.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator ask for the reading of the report?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly; and it was asked for by other Senators, several of them. I have listened to the reading very carefully thus far, and I am waiting with a great deal of pleasure to hear the report of the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] read, which, I presume, will follow, and which I hope may be read without any attempt to delay or prevent its orderly sequence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the report will be continued. Does the Senator from New Jersey desire recognition?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I have said all I care to say. My constituents in the State of New Jersey asked me——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Did the Chair recognize the Senator from New Jersey?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did recognize him a moment ago.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I know I am some trouble to the Senator, but I am positively in favor of the measure he is so much interested in. I am not so much interested in your measure as I am interested in the measure I am now talking about. My constituency are asking me continually by letter and voice how this condition is. They ask me, "Are you less attentive and active to the affairs of the Commonwealth of New Jersey and the interests you have at heart than are those from the State of Georgia?" I tell them no; I do not know that I am as zealous and earnest in the matter as I can be. They are finding fault. They ask me how it is. I am not as familiar with legislation nor have I served as long as the Senator from Georgia. He served two or three or four terms in the House. He and his fellow citizens are all fine, splendid men. My constituents asked me how it is. I said, "Those men of the South are a better organized troop than the people of the North and the East." That is about the reason why many of these measures that my people rebel at have come about. They asked me, "Can not something be done to make this a little more equitable and fair?" I do not want to quarrel with the Senator; I feel kindly to him; but I do say do not arrogate to yourself all the patriotism and breadth when at the same time you have got all the cash.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I can not sympathize very much with what my colleague has had to say in this debate. I do not know of any taxes that have borne more heavily upon the people of our State than upon the people of Georgia. I do not think my colleague knows of any, either. I do not think either of us would vote for the passage of a measure which had for its object and final effect the singling out of one community or one section of the country and compelling it to bear a greater burden than its due share of the taxes of the whole Nation.

I do not like the plane upon which this whole colloquy this morning has been conducted. I thought the Republican Party years ago came to the conclusion that there was not another election to be won by waving the bloody shirt. I thought that the issue of sectionalism had been forever buried. I believe that was the case up to the time the Republican candidate in the last campaign was convinced by somebody that the fires of sectionalism and hatred could once more be fanned into flame and capitalized into Republican votes. I do not think there was anything that did more to bring down upon his head the merited indignation of the American people than the very attitude he took in that matter.

The time has gone by when men from the South can be held up as bogy men, as having horns and hoofs. They go abroad as you and I do; they go into different parts of the country. The most effective speeches I have ever heard made, speeches that were received with more rapturous applause than any other speeches I have ever listened to, were made by these very men laying down the fundamental principles of Democracy to men in communities where there was no material gain to be derived because of their love of those principles.

We have kept the fires on the altars of Democracy lighted in the North and in the East and in the West in this country by means of the patriotic fervor and flame that has been furnished to us by these men from the South. Any student familiar with the early history of this country knows that. If he permits himself to think at all he knows that that section of the country has been oppressed by laws enacted by men from the other sections of the country. We know that for years and years they were compelled to purchase everything they purchased in the highest taxed markets in the world, and the things which they produced and sold they sold in the free-trade markets of the world.

The Georgia farmer to-day sells his cotton in Liverpool at anywhere from 7 to 20 cents a pound, whatever the price may be, and buys his automobile in the 45 per cent taxed market of America. The figures the Senator from Michigan has laid before the Senate contain no account of that fact. In the price of every automobile that is purchased by a farmer from the South there is hidden the tariff rate that was laid years ago and has continued since to oppress the purchasers of every other section of the country.

There is one thing that comes with particularly bad grace from Senators from my section of the country. It is this continual casting in the teeth of men of another section of the country the fact that they are poorer than their critics. It may be true. John D. Rockefeller pays into the United States Treasury more money than I do. He receives a larger income than I do. But owing to that fact is he to have a battleship placed at his disposal when his yacht floats the high seas? Is he to have a United States deputy marshal protect him? Is he to have rivers upon his private estates deepened at Government expense? Is he to have anything more done for him than is done for me? Are we to check up individuals or communities or States in accordance with the amount of money they pay? Are we to have that cheap and superficial standard? Everybody knows that the people of the State of New Jersey and the State of New York make what they make out of the people of Georgia, the people of the West and the South and the East and the North, and out of their profits they pay this money into the Federal Treasury.

We twit these men with the fact that they are living under a financial and fiscal system which does not permit them to profit to the extent that other and more favored gentlemen profit.

As far as I am concerned, I am an American citizen. I have not a single fiber in my body which entertains or could possibly entertain the slightest prejudice for any section of the country. I love the West, I love the East, the North, and the South. They are all alike. They were welded by a great fire into one Nation, and in spite of anything the gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber can say we are one Nation.

There are to be no more elections won by the bloody shirt. Sectionalism is dead and can never be revived; and the party that attempts it again will be treated as the party that last attempted it was treated. They will bring down upon their heads again the condemnation of the American people, and they should.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the reading of the report.

The Secretary resumed and continued the reading of the report, as follows:

The committee desires to call attention to the further views of Hon. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, on the subject of water-power legislation embodied in a letter addressed by him to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Public Lands during the life of the Sixty-third Congress, while the subject of water-power legislation was under consideration in that Congress, which letter is as follows:

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the letter which follows is somewhat lengthy and is rather a general discussion of the entire subject than a discussion of the features of the pending bill. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the letter be dispensed with.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I did not hear the Senator's suggestion.

Mr. WALSH. I advised the Senate that the letter which follows in the report is somewhat lengthy and is rather in the nature of a discussion of the general subject of water-power legislation than a consideration of the particular features of the pending bill, and I accordingly asked unanimous consent that the reading of that particular letter be dispensed with.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does the Senator think that anything more instructive can be presented to the Senate or will be presented to the Senate than that letter of the Secretary?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I say, in answer to the question addressed to me by the Senator from Michigan, that there is a stupendous mass of information upon the subject. I have a very high regard for the Secretary of the Interior; I know he has been a student of this question; but this is only a relatively small item out of a total mass of information upon this subject. Accordingly, I find it difficult to institute a comparison concerning the relative worth of the same information that is accessible to Senators from a multitude of sources. I have asked, accordingly, that the reading of it be dispensed with.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I understand that this letter was written when the Ferris bill, so called, was pending before the other House, and that it was written for the purpose of expressing the views of the Secretary of the Interior upon that particular legislation. It, therefore, seems to me that the reading of the letter ought to proceed. Therefore I shall have to object to the Senator's request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan objects, and the Secretary will continue the reading.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the report, as follows:

"WATER POWER.

[By Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior.]

"Should the Government allow its dam and reservoir sites and other lands valuable for power development to pass from its hands forever?

"(1) It has been the policy of Congress from the inception of power development in the United States only to grant permission to use such lands and not to sell or give away the lands in perpetuity. Acts of Congress of May 18, 1896 (29 Stat., 120); February 15, 1901 (31 Stat., 790); February 7, 1905 (33 Stat., 702); May 1, 1906 (34 Stat., 163); and March 4, 1911 (36 Stat., 1253).

"(2) The general law applicable to the use of public lands for the development of electrical power, the act of February 15, 1901, authorizes the grant only of a permission to use public lands and reservations for this purpose, expressly providing that any such permission may be revoked by the Secretary of the Interior, or his successor, in his discretion, and shall not be held to confer any rights or easements, or interest in, to, or over any public land or reservation. The general law now in effect relative to granting of rights of way for transmission lines, the act of March 4, 1911, only permits the approval of such rights of way for periods not exceeding 50 years.

"(3) The future of water power is still unknown. It promises to be an invaluable resource, (a) because it replaces itself, while coal and oil do not; (b) because it can be transported at slight expense and for long distances; (c) because the development of numerous other western resources, low-grade ores, irrigation of arid lands by pumping, and the establishment of manufacturing enterprises are dependent upon cheap and abundant electrical power.

"(4) To at this time grant such lands in perpetuity to private corporations or individuals is to divest the Federal Government, as well as the several States, of a large measure of the control which it might otherwise exercise over this resource by law or regulation, and would place beyond its power the opportunity of providing by law such different method of use or disposition as the future may show to be best adapted to the public interests.

"WHAT HAVE THE STATES DONE WITH THEIR POWER SITES?

"With possibly few exceptions, the valuable power sites on lands not owned by the Federal Government have passed into private ownership in perpetuity. They can not be recovered except at a prohibitive expense, nor can control be exercised thereover in any manner, except it be by regulation of transmission and delivery as a public utility. Out of 7,000,000 horsepower developed in the United States in 1913, 20 companies of groups of interests controlled 2,710,886 developed horsepower and 3,556,500 undeveloped horsepower, or a total of 6,267,386 horsepower. According to a table compiled by the Forest Service, out of a total of 1,135,400 developed horsepower in the States of California, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, Oregon, Utah, and Washington, 1,023,700 horsepower is owned by large corporations, while but 111,700 horsepower is owned by small developers. In the State of California, 92 per cent of the developed power is owned by the large corporations and but 8 per cent by small developers. In Oregon, 90 per cent is owned by large companies and 10 per cent by the small developers. In the State of California, one corporation owns 27 per cent of the total developed horsepower in the State and two groups own 57 per cent of the total development.

"WHAT HAS THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT DONE WITH ITS SITES?

"As stated, it has never been the policy of Congress to dispose of these sites in perpetuity, the laws providing simply for the issuance of limited or revocable permits. Therefore, while some valuable sites have been acquired by private owners through the filing of scrip or entry of the lands under some one of the public-land laws not intended to apply to the development of such a resource, the major portion of lands valuable for this development remains in Federal ownership. A conservative estimate places the total available horsepower at 35,000,000, of which not exceeding 7,000,000 have been developed. Of the total undeveloped horsepower, 28,000,000, about 74 per cent, is in what are known as the public-land States, and 42 per cent of the total is within Government forest reserves. It is thus apparent that the extent and value of this undeveloped resource is large enough to require most careful consideration and disposition.

"HOW DO OTHER GOVERNMENTS DEAL WITH POWER SITES?

"The laws of the Dominion of Canada authorize the issuance of licenses for 21 years, renewable for three further terms of like extent, at a fixed fee, payable annually, and provides that upon the termination of a license the works may be taken over by the Government upon payment of the value of the actual and tangible works and of any lands held in fee in connection therewith. It is expressly provided that the value of the rights and privileges granted or the revenues, profits, or dividends being, or likely to be, derived therefrom shall not be taken into consideration.

"The Province of Ontario authorizes a lease of water-power privileges for periods not exceeding 20 years, with the right of renewal for two further and successive terms of 10 years each, upon the rental stated in the lease and upon such other terms and conditions as the minister may prescribe. Upon the termination of the lease the privileges, together with all dams and other structures or works made or erected by the lessee in connection therewith, revert to and become the property of the Crown, subject, however, to the right of the lessee to remove machinery, failing in which removal it shall become the property of the Crown, also subject to payment of compensation to the lessee of such sums as the minister may deem proper for buildings or structures of a permanent character and necessary or useful for the development or utilization of the water privilege.

"In New Brunswick the lieutenant governor in council is authorized by law to lease or sell rights and privileges for water-power development upon such terms and conditions as to development and utilization as he may prescribe.

"In the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, Yukon, and Northwest Territory the governor in council is authorized to make regulations for the diversion, taking, or use of water for power purposes and for the construction of power development works on public lands. He is also authorized to fix the fees, charges, rents, royalties, or dues to be paid, and the rates to be charged.

"In Queensland the law authorizes water-power development under special license, subject to such conditions and provisions as the governor in council shall determine, for periods of 10 years.

"In France power plants on national lands are developed under concessions for periods not exceeding 50 years, at the expiration of which period the grantee, if concession be not renewed, is required to restore the premises to the conditions previously existing or to deliver the plant to the nation without indemnity, as the nation may elect. The amount of rental to be paid is required to be fixed in the articles of concession.

"In Norway the law authorizes the granting of concessions for power development for a minimum of 60 years and a maximum of 80 years. When the concession expires the land, with improvements and works, reverts to the Government. Various payments for the privilege are required, among them being the establishment of a poor fund under public control, the surrender of a certain percentage of produced power to the community, also to the General Government, and in certain specified developments there may be assessed a yearly tax of 1.25 crowns for every horsepower over 500.

"REGULATION AND CONTROL OF POWER DEVELOPMENT AND TRANSMISSION IN THE SEVERAL STATES.

"The States of Arizona, Wisconsin, Michigan, Missouri, New Mexico, Kansas, Oklahoma, Montana, Idaho, Nevada, California, Oregon, and Washington have provided public-service commissions or bodies vested with more or less authority to regulate and control public-service corporations. The other States containing public lands and reservations do not appear to have provided for such control or regulation, nor has same been provided for the Territory of Alaska. In some of the States named as having public-service commissions, it is represented that the control and supervision is entirely inadequate. Be that as it may, legislation to be enacted should provide for appropriate control and regulation, either by the States or by the Federal Government where the States do not act, where the development is of such a nature and extent as to pass beyond the jurisdiction of a single State. Water-power transmission does not stop at State lines. Power development and long-distance transmission connect widely separated localities and communities. The public interest requires that there be no hiatus. Where State control ceases or does not exist, Federal control is essential to protect the people.

"WATER POWER OF THE WEST CAN NOT BE DEVELOPED UNDER THE PRESENT LAW.

"It is generally conceded that the water-power resources upon the public domain can not be developed under existing laws, because of the uncertain tenure involved by revocable permits; (a) because the engineer and the promoter fear to embark an enterprise under such conditions; (b) because the capitalist will not loan money upon such security; (c) because the consumers can have no positive assurance that they will be supplied for a fixed and definite period.

"It is an established fact that numerous responsible persons who have obtained permits to develop power sites under the existing law have been unable to construct because of the foregoing.

"WHAT SHOULD THE NEW LAW BE?

"The ideal law is one which will give to the developer and investor an assured tenure for a period long enough to justify his investment and reward his efforts. It must be under conditions known to him in advance, so that his plans may be laid accordingly. It must encourage development without losing sight of the needs of the consumer and the rights of the people.

"The gift of a franchise means, generally, the gift of additional profit to the promoter. Its benefit is not passed on to the consumer. There is nothing connected with such a gift which obligates or induces the developer to make low rates to the consumer, or which obligates him to deal more favorably with the general public. Municipalities have generally abandoned the practice of giving away franchises. The people expect and demand that valuable rights shall yield something in the way of direct return. A nominal sale charge is equally objectionable. It has the appearance of yielding a return, while in fact it is more trouble than it is worth, and therefore imposes a burden upon the developer while yielding nothing, or substantially nothing, to the people. Such a nominal charge is also worthless as a regulative measure.

"WHAT IS THE VALUE OF PUBLIC LANDS VALUABLE FOR RESERVOIR SITES?

"Nothing as agricultural lands, because, generally speaking, such lands are in canyons or mountainous regions, valueless for agriculture, of little value for grazing, and of little value for other purposes than the development of electric power. Five per cent of this value would be negligible and not worth collecting. One dollar and twenty-five cents per acre has been suggested as the agricultural value of public lands, because homesteaders may commute at that figure. That does not represent a sale of lands. It is an arbitrary price exacted by law as an evidence of good faith in connection with the submission of final proof on a homestead prior to the expiration of the ordinary homestead period. The present real value of a tract of land for agricultural purposes could only be determined through a method of advertisement and open competitive bidding. The Government does not dispose of other lands or values upon this theory at all. Timberland is disposed of at a price fixed after careful examination and appraisement, the sale price being based on the timber value. Coal land is disposed of on an appraisement based upon the amount of the coal content and a royalty of approximately 2 cents per ton.

"The true value of power sites is, then, not the nominal figure of $1.25 per acre, not their value as agricultural lands, timberlands, or coal lands, but their value as dam sites, reservoir sites, or for other uses in connection with water-power development, and for this purpose the larger and more valuable sites are worth millions of dollars. In one existing development the corporation valued the lands acquired for its dam, reservoir site, and plant at $26,333,000, as evidenced by bonds and stock. A private owner would ask not less than 5 per cent of the value of such lands as power sites. Should the Government do so? In my opinion it should not, because that would prevent development or impose an undue burden upon the consumer; nor should the Government give away lands worth millions of dollars for power sites, because that would be unwise, unbusinesslike, and in derogation of the rights of the general public. Such lands can not be sold because developers, except in rare instances, could not or would not pay the real value of the lands as power or reservoir sites. If they did they would endeavor to secure return by imposing higher rates upon the consumers, and in that case would doubtless be permitted to impose higher rates by public-service commissions, on the ground that it represented return upon actual investments. To give the lands away is therefore not right. To sell them at their real value is impracticable and would injure the consumer.

"Why not, then, secure development under a plan which will be fair to the developer, the investor, the Government, and the consumer, by lease or permit for a definite period on conditions fully known in advance? The word 'lease' is hardly properly descriptive of the plan which should be adopted. It is not a lease in the ordinary meaning of that term. It is rather a permission to use—a contract or agreement for the development and use of sites.

THE FIXED PERIOD.

"Careful consideration has been given to the question of what period should be covered by such a permit or agreement, and the general consensus of opinion seems to be that 50 years is the proper one, having in mind the rights and interests of all concerned. This, subject to renewal in the event that the Government and State or the municipality does not desire to take over the plant at the expiration of the original permit period, or for good and sufficient reason it be not found advisable to renew the permit to the original permittee.

"As already shown, other governments make such leases or concessions for periods varying from 10 to not exceeding 80 years. The State of Kansas provides that franchises to those developing or furnishing electric light, power, or heat to any city in that State shall not exceed for a longer period of time than 30 years from the date of a grant or extension thereof. The State of Wisconsin authorizes an indeterminate permit and provides for the taking over thereof by a municipality at any time upon due notice and proceedings. The consensus of opinion on the part of those interested in power development seems to favor, however, a fixed and definite permit rather than the right in the Government, State, or municipality to take over the plant at any time during the period of use and development.

"It is self-evident, however, that the right should be retained to take over the works upon proper terms and conditions, in order that the same may be taken over and operated by the States or municipalities, and to do this the law and the permit must provide such terms and conditions as will be fair to the permittee, and at the same time not forever preclude the exercise of this right by the State or municipality, because of the impossible amounts required to be paid as a prerequisite to the recapture. It is evident that for the use of the public lands to be granted no payment should be made to the permittee on that account. It is further evident that for lands acquired by the permittee during the course of the development payment should be made, but that payment should not include the unearned increment created by the community and not by the power developer, nor should it include payment for 'good will,' franchise values, or intangible elements.

"The laws of the State of Illinois provide that any city is authorized to acquire, construct, own, and operate public utilities and to lease the same for periods not exceeding 20 years. They further provide that there may be reserved in any grant the right to take over all or any part of the property used in operation of a public utility at or before the expiration of the grant, upon terms and conditions provided in the grant, or to grant to a third party, at the option of the city, on the same terms.

"The laws of Massachusetts authorize the acquisition by cities or towns of municipal electric plants, upon payment therefor, specifically providing that the value in so taking over shall be estimated without enhancement on account of future earning capacity or good will, or of exclusive privileges derived from rights in the public streets.'

"The State of Wisconsin, as already stated, authorizes the issuance of an indeterminate permit for electrical power, but provides for the taking over of such plants by municipalities at any time, upon payment of just compensation, to be determined by the public-utilities commission and according to terms and conditions fixed by the commission. Every such public utility is required to sell such property at the value and according to the terms and conditions determined by the commission, subject to court review.

"The laws of Arizona, California, Maryland, Nebraska, New Jersey, New York, and Ohio prohibit the capitalization of any franchise or permit beyond the amount actually paid to the State or to a political subdivision thereof as a consideration of the grant of such franchise or right.

"None of the laws of the other States or countries, in so far as I have been able to ascertain, authorize or provide for the payment, upon the taking over or recapture of a public utility, on account of good will, franchise value, or other intangible elements. Therefore the provisions of section 5 of the Ferris bill appear to be, in this respect, in full accord with the general practice.

"WHAT PRICE OR CONSIDERATION SHOULD BE EXACTED?

"As already intimated, a nominal charge of 5 per cent of the agricultural value of the land would be useless and inadequate, and would not justify the trouble and cost of collection. The gift of such a resource would not inure to the benefit of the consumer or of the general public, but to the promoter. Furthermore, the authorities agree that a charge of some kind should be imposed as a regulative measure. The Government could, if it followed the precedent of private owners, charge not less than 5 per cent of the value of the lands for power purposes, but this would be a heavy charge upon the developer, which he, in turn, would endeavor to recover from the consumer.

"We should charge nothing at first, during the period while the plant is building and finding a market, except, perhaps, a charge merely sufficient to pay the expenses of administration. This period of nominal charge might be 5 or 10 years. The charge should then gradually and moderately increase as the years go by, according to a scale fixed in the lease or permit at the outset, and in every instance premium should be put on low rates to the consumer. In other words, the lower the rate to the consumer the lower should be the charge on the part of the Government; also some premium should be placed upon the full development of the power possibilities of a given site. The main object, however, is to secure development for the benefit of the consumer, and the regulative charge can be readily fixed upon a sliding scale which will go up or down, according to the treatment of the consumer by the producer. In this and certain other respects the Ferris bill (H. R. 16673) vests some discretion in the Secretary of the Interior. This is necessary and essential, in order that the measure may be workable and may be adapted to the varying conditions of different developments and localities. An arbitrary and fixed rule would, in many instances, work hardships or injustice and prevent development of sites. An examination of the laws of foreign countries and of the several States which have laws governing the operation of public utilities shows that a large amount of discretion is vested in the public-service commissions, governors, or other executive officers charged with the administration of such matters.

"DISPOSITION OF MONEY DERIVED FROM POWER PERMITS.

"The expenses of administration, which will be smaller than is generally believed, should first be paid. The balance should go to the development of the resources of the States wherein the sites are located, and ultimately, in part, to such States and in part to the General Government. The vital welfare of most of the public-land States where valuable power sites are located is bound up with power development and irrigation. All returns over administrative expenses should therefore go into the reclamation fund for the irrigation of arid lands. Upon return of the money to the Treasury, as provided in the reclamation law, one-half of the sums so returned should go to the State within the boundaries of which the power is generated and developed.

"The Ferris water-power bill (H. R. 16673) seems to meet the present situation as nearly as present knowledge and conditions will permit.

"It secures development (a) by certain and fixed tenure; (b) by reasonable charge for the privilege given; (c) upon conditions known in advance.

"It protects public interests (a) by encouraging low rates to the consumer; (b) by reasonable regulative charges; (c) by contribution to development of other resources; (d) by ultimate contributions to the State treasuries.

"It looks to the future by providing that at the end of 50-year periods these sites, with their now unknown possibilities and values, may be taken over by the Government, to be disposed of to States, municipalities, or individuals, or held under such conditions as the future shall disclose to be wisest and best.

"EVILS TO BE GUARDED AGAINST.

"In legislation of this kind among the evils to be guarded against are—

"(1) Monopoly.

"(2) High rates to the consumer.

"(3) Inability to secure restoration of the public lands to public use.

"The first evil is guarded against by the specific provisions of the Ferris bill and by the Sherman law. The second is guarded against by the Ferris bill and Federal and State regulation. The last is protected against by the provisions of the Ferris bill, which would become effective in each development at the end of 50 years.

"CONCLUSION.

"The enactment of such legislation for the development of water power is demanded by engineers, developers, and investors; by the general public which would be served by power development; by all the people in the United States, for all would benefit directly or indirectly from the crops produced and industries created by means of power generated and which is now going to waste."

In conclusion, the committee believes the measure as here reported to meet the needs of the times and the urgency of the situation, and recommends its passage as amended according to this report.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask unanimous consent that there be printed as a Senate document in parallel columns a comparative print of the bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes, showing the bill as passed by the House and the bill as now pending before the Senate. [S. Doc. No. 676.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the order will be made as requested.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I ask that the minority report be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the views of the minority, as requested.

The Secretary proceeded to rend the views of the minority, as follows:

Mr. WORKS, from the Committee on Public Lands, submitted the following views of the minority:

We are unable to join the majority of the committee in recommending the passage of H. R. 408 as amended.

The bill, although modified in many material particulars, is subject to objections which, in our judgment, are fundamental. It is the first step in a policy which proposes to and unquestionably will commit the Federal Government to the leasing of the national domain, and which we believe to be both unwise and inexpedient. It reverses the policy of alienating the public domain, without regard to its character, to citizens of the United States and those intending to become such, under which the great West was peopled and has flourished. A corollary of the new régime will be the permanent retention of Government title to these vast areas of public domain yet undisposed of. Stated concisely, the Government proposes to establish the relation of landlord and tenant as regards this domain, between itself and those of its citizens who hereafter apply for the acquisition of any of the unsold lands of the Government, and this bill is to be the pioneer in that direction.

It was decided more than half a century ago that the doctrine applying to lands in other countries, which reserved to the Crown precious metals and perhaps other mineral contents in the general domain, has no application to a country like ours. This doctrine never had any foothold in the United States. Our policy of homesteads and preemptions was followed by the enactment of statutes relating to mineral lands of the United States, under which prospecting and location were so encouraged that vast treasures of gold, silver, lead, copper, zinc, cinnabar, iron, oil, gas, saline, and other valuable deposits were discovered and developed, thereby peopling the waste places of the continent and adding to the general store of the national wealth.

The climatic conditions prevailing in the arid and semiarid regions of the West long ago required the abolition of the old doctrine of riparian rights as applied to the watercourses in that region, and the substitution therefor of the right of ownership of said waters by appropriation and use for beneficial purposes. This change of the law of ownership of waters found early expression in enabling acts, constitutions, statutes, and judicial decisions, whereby the ownership of the waters in these streams was vested in the States respectively, subject to such right of appropriation. This ownership was exclusive for the purposes mentioned subject only to such modifications as might be imposed by the General Government through its jurisdiction over navigable streams, an overlordship which is entirely consistent with the full enjoyment of the use of the waters and watercourses in the arid and semiarid portions of the country.

This doctrine has been so frequently announced and supported in the Senate as to make quotation of authority unnecessary. Nevertheless, a reference to the great case of Kansas v. Colorado (206 U. S., p. 46) may not be amiss. That action was instituted by the State of Kansas against the State of Colorado to restrain the defendant from diverting the waters of the Arkansas River from its natural course because it was said to diminish its natural flow across the boundary and into the State of Kansas to the injury of her citizens. The United States sought to intervene as the owner of large tracts of public domain and because of its consequent asserted right to make such legislative provision as might be needful for the reclamation of its arid lands, and for that purpose to appropriate the accessible waters. This right of intervention was denied, and the doctrine recognized that each State had full jurisdiction over the land within its borders, including the beds of streams and their waters. On page 92 of the decision the court declared:

"As to the lands within the limits of the States, at least of the Western States, the National Government is the most considerable owner, and has power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting its property. We do not mean that its legislation can override State laws in respect to the general subject of reclamation. While arid lands are to be found mainly, if not only, in the Western and newer States, yet the powers of the National Government within the limits of those States are the same (no greater and no less) than those within the limits of the original 13; and it would be strange, if in the absence of a definite grant of power, that the National Government could enter the territory of the States along the Atlantic and legislate in respect to improving by irrigation or otherwise the lands within their borders."

Statutes in all the public-domain States were long ago enacted, providing how and for what purposes the waters of their streams might be appropriated. Generally speaking, these appropriations are for domestic, or agricultural, or manufacturing purposes, or for all of them combined, the priority of the uses being in the order named. Rights of way for these appropriations may be had as a matter of course either by a purchase or by condemnation, or both, and this right is, or should be, enforcible against lands held in public as well as in private ownership, excepting, of course, such lands as are dedicated to or used for governmental purposes. The proposed legislation, however, by leasing and thereafter controlling power sites necessary to carrying into effect State appropriations for hydroelectric purposes not only disregards the local laws upon the subject of appropriation and use of waters (although ostensibly recognizing their existence), but in effect dominates and controls the waters of the States and derives a revenue from their use. This is confiscation of the most valuable asset of the arid and semiarid States, and the inauguration of a policy which in our judgment is wholly indefensible.

We are aware that the truth of this contention is vigorously challenged. It is true that the bill does not accomplish this purpose in express terms, but such will be the inevitable consequence of its enactment and operation. This is too high a price for the State to pay for its right to use what it already owns. The policy once inaugurated will be difficult to abandon.

Treading upon the heels of this measure is another to be hereafter reported proposing to inaugurate a vast system of tenancy in all the lands of the United States carrying metals or minerals, except those covered by the mining act of 1872. And the latter will inevitably come under the new system of administration once it has been initiated, there being no logical reason why a system demanded by one class of deposits should not be applied to all of them.

The basis of this new departure in land legislation has arisen from abuses in the administration of previous and existing land laws. These have resulted in the private acquisition of millions of acres of the public domain, but all of them have arisen out of or been based upon national laws through the agency of national administration. To make amends for the crimes of the past and for which it is largely responsible, the Government proposes not to punish the criminals or to deprive them of their booty, but to discipline the remainder of its citizens by converting them into a vast tenantry paying tribute to the Government and subject to ouster and eviction at the instance of Government agents and inspectors. The innocent always suffer for the offenses of the guilty, but it is hardly just that this result should be deliberately fixed by acts of legislation involving vast areas of territory and several millions of people.

Apart from the segregation from State jurisdictions and Federal control of millions of acres of land within their boundaries and the transformation of the National Government into a landlord and those thereafter dealing with it into tenants is the effect of the proposed system upon local self-government. If it be true that this feature of Anglo-Saxon institutions is a fundamental one, it must be true that any system, however seemingly necessary, which injures or destroys the principle is pernicious. We affirm that local self-government and Federal landlordism are wholly irreconcilable, and that if the latter prevails the former will ultimately disappear.

Primarily the assumption by the Government of the status of lessor involves absentee landlordism, with all its objections and abuses. The Government has its headquarters in Washington, where its powers are concentrated and from which they radiate. Almost the whole of its public domain lies west of the one hundredth meridian and from 1,750 to 3,000 miles from the Capital. Applicants for leases must present their petitions and requests to the Secretary of the Interior, and these will necessarily undergo the inspection of several bureaus and many subordinates. The leases when made must be under the supervision of the department, and this will find expression in the persons of local inspectors, agents, accountants, and other governmental employees, each intent upon magnifying the importance of his position and his own invaluable services in connection therewith. Demands, complaints, notices, objections, and criticisms will multiply as these activities increase, and they will increase in proportion to the ambitions of the officeholders and the political influence of the office seeker. All appeals must be ultimately reviewed and determined at the seat of government but at the expense of the appellant. The business of the Federal courts, already burdened beyond their capacity, will be multiplied. Such a system must inevitably weaken, if indeed it does not permanently impair the Government, the police power, and the laws of the States and municipalities, thus transferring to the National Government, through its ownership of public lands, a jurisdiction and character of business which it was never designed to and which it can not perform, either with justice to itself or satisfaction to its tenants.

Moreover, the expense attendant upon the administration of this proposed policy will be far in excess of the revenues to be derived from it. If the system were absolutely essential to the public welfare, the problem of expense would not be important, but when we consider that it is neither necessary nor desirable, the cost of administration is not only an important but a serious factor of the situation. Prophecies are both dangerous and unreliable, yet we venture the prediction that before the proposed system has been in operation five years the Government expense of administration will exceed its revenues from two to three fold. It is useless; it is un-American; it is needless; nay, it is dangerous to embark the Government upon such an enterprise.

We think it may be maintained that the sole duty of the Government with regard to its public domain is to so dispose of it that the sovereignties where the same is situate may control it exactly as they control all other domain, subject to their laws and contributing its proportion of the public burden.

In making such disposition every precaution should be exercised against its monopolization by the few; and while it is not to be doubted that such is the purpose of the Government in the proposed legislation, it is remarkable that existing land and power monopolies in the public-domain States have been the direct outgrowth of national administration, for which the States were not responsible and which, in our judgment, would have been preventable under State control.

The question as to the concrete course which the Government should pursue with regard to its lands is a pertinent one. My opinion, long entertained, is that the national domain should be transferred to the States, respectively, where the same is located, the title to be safeguarded by conditions whose disregard will mean forfeiture. The people of those Commonwealths can, if experience is availing, be better trusted to administer these lands than the National Government. Their governments are within the territory affected. Its proper development and settlement are matters of immediate and local concern, and, while abuses inseparable from our methods of administration might manifest themselves at times, their correction would be speedy and their consequences inconsiderable.

The pending bill will not prevent monopolization of water power. On the contrary, it will perpetuate the existing one. In the first place, we do not think that private enterprise will find anything attractive in its provisions. If this be so, development will not follow; certainly not very rapidly. The plants already established will thus be made secure in their respective territory, and, with all remaining power tied up, consequently enjoy a business which customers must patronize, whatever the cost.

But if we should err in this forecast we see nothing in the bill, nor, indeed, in any bill which the wit of man can devise for the development of hydroelectric power by private capital that can effectually prevent consolidation and monopoly. Indeed, nothing short of public ownership will prevent it. The experiences of the Government in legislating for the abolition of trusts and in suits brought to enforce it have not been satisfactory in other fields of effort, and we fear it will be less so when directed to an industry which is a natural monopoly, whose output is a necessity of life, and the competition of whose producers has up to this time served but to increase the cost of the product to the consumer. The price which this bill requires the Western States to pay for a possible competition in the business of developing electric energy, however effective, is too great.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I think it proper to have recorded at this time the fact that while this report is being read there are just five Senators present upon the other side of the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire a call of the Senate?

Mr. WALSH. No.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The call of the roll discloses that 52 Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the report.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the views of the minority, as follows:

It involves the permanent surrender of their sovereignty over vast stretches of territory, the transfer of their waters to the General Government, and the substitution of a swarm of Government employees for public servants of their own selection. The bill should be indefinitely postponed.

C. S. THOMAS.
M. A. SMITH.

ADDITIONAL VIEWS OF MESSRS. WORKS, SMOOT, AND CLARK OF WYOMING.

We agree generally with the views of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH]. When this bill, substantially in its present form, was reported to the Senate at its last session we submitted an adverse report, pointing out our objections to the bill. We now make part of this minority report the statement of our views as then expressed, with some slight changes made necessary by amendments made to the bill as now reported, as follows:

[Senate report 898, part 2, Sixty-third Congress, third session.]

Mr. WORKS, from the Committee on Public Lands, submitted the following views of a minority:

The report of the majority of the committee states the object of the bill as follows:

"The object of the measure is the better and speedier development for useful and beneficial purposes of the great undeveloped water power of the country, now lagging on account of inadequate and inefficient laws."

If this were the real object and purpose of the bill and this object would be attained even in reasonable degree and without unwarranted and dangerous encroachments by the National Government on the constitutional rights of the States, the signers of this minority report of the committee would not be found contending against its enactment, as they represent a constituency that is vitally interested in the development of all natural resources and their application to beneficial uses, freed as far as possible from limitations, obstructions, or unnecessary burdens of any kind. In any attempt to bring about such legislation we should carefully consider:

1. The rights of the States in the waters flowing through them in the natural streams and to regulate and control their appropriation, diversion, and use.

2. The limitations of the National Government in dealing with the appropriation, regulation, and use of these waters.

3. The rights of the people of the States to the use of the waters of the streams, as provided by law, commonly called the consumers.

But after all and in the last analysis it is the consumer that should be protected and his individual right to the use of the water maintained and preserved under reasonable rules and regulations that will insure the greater and more beneficial use of the water for all legitimate purposes.

The western semiarid States, where irrigation is necessary to their full development and prosperity, are peculiarly and vitally interested in making every drop of water beneficially useful, and in supplying every acre of land possible with the water without which much of their lands are sterile and unproductive. This being true it must be seen that these States are interested and will support any just law that will extend the use of water either for the irrigation of their land or the development of power. And if it were believed by us that this bill, if it should become a law, would have that effect without violating any of the fundamental and constitutional rights of the State it would receive our earnest and united support. It is because we are fully convinced by our own knowledge of the subject and the testimony taken at the hearings before the committee that the bill will not conduce to the better or speedier development of the water power of the country, but will hinder and retard such development, and that its real object, purpose, and effect is to usurp by the National Government the rights and jurisdiction of the States in and over the flowing waters of the streams to the detriment of the States and to water consumers that we earnestly oppose the passage of the bill. And this attempt at what seems to us to be revolutionary, detrimental, and unwise legislation is so far-reaching and important that we feel it to be our duty to lay before the Senate our reasons for opposing the passage of the bill.

In dealing with the subject we assume that certain fundamental principles of law, controlling in their influence as affecting such legislation as this, have been firmly and unalterably established by both Federal and State decisions. They are as follows:

1. The ownership of flowing water and the right to dispose of and to regulate and control the use thereof within their borders belong exclusively to the States as a part of their sovereign power, subject only, in case of navigable streams, to the power of the Federal Government to regulate and promote commerce between the States.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, that part of the report from page 7 to page 17 consists of a discussion of legal principles, elucidated by ample quotations from decisions of various courts. I think all will appreciate that that part of the report ought to be studied with some care by those Senators to whom it is of interest, and that the reading of it would serve no useful purpose. At page 17 the author of the report continues a discussion of his reasons for opposing the bill, commencing with the language:

Having demonstrated, by reference to the decided cases—

And so on. I ask unanimous consent, accordingly, that the reading of the report down to the first paragraph commencing on page 17 be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I think the Senator will find it as I have stated.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think it is quite important that this should be read. The reference that is appended to No. 1 may be printed in the RECORD and the reading omitted between paragraphs 1 and 2.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan (3 How., U. S., 212); Withers v. Buckley (20 How., 84); Escanaba Co. v. Chicago (107 U. S., 678); Kansas v. Colorado (206 U. Mr. TOWNSEND. I think the balance of it had better be read.

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator objects to my request, I would be glad if he will agree that the quotations be omitted.

Mr. POMERENE. I am quite sure it ought to be read, because I never heard the Senator from Michigan express himself so seriously.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the reading.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It is understood that those references are to be printed in the RECORD in connection with the reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They will be included, as they appear in the report.

The Secretary resumed the reading, and, omitting the parts indicated, read as follows:

2. That as a consequence the United States have no such right either of ownership, regulation, or control. (Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan, 3 How., U. S., 212; Kansas v. Colorado, 206 U. S., 46; Ward v. Race Horse, 163 U. S., 504.)

3. The rights of consumers to the use of the water are dependent upon State and not Federal laws and subject to State regulation and control, exclusively, unless the use is interstate. (Kansas v. Colorado, 206 U. S., 46; Osborne v. San Diego Land & Town Co., 178 U. S., 22; Los Angeles v. Los Angeles Water Co., 177 U. S., 558; St. Anthony Falls Water Power Co. v. St. Paul Water Commissioners, 168 U. S., 349; Bean v. Morris, 221 U. S., 485.)

4. The Federal Government owns the public lands as a proprietor only and not in its sovereign capacity. (Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan, 3 How., U. S., 212; Ward v. Race Horse, 163 U. S., 504; Woodruff v. North Bloomfield Gravel Mining Co., 18 Feb. Rep., 753; Boggs v. Merced Mining Co., 14 Cal., 279, 376.)

5. The Federal Government has no power or jurisdiction to fix rates or regulate the use or disposition of water within a State. (Sands v. Manistee River Improvement Co., 123 U. S., 288; Osborne v. San Diego Land & Town Co., 178 U. S., 22.)

6. The power to fix rates or regulate the use of water not given to the Federal Government by the Constitution can not be bestowed by act of Congress as a condition to the leasing or sale of the public lands. (New Orleans v. United States, 10 Pet., 662, 736; Leovy v. United States, 177 U. S., 621.)

7. Absolute property in and dominion and sovereignty over the soils under the tidewaters in the States are reserved to the several States. (Kansas v. United Land Association, 142 U. S., 161.)

8. Public lands owned by the United States are not subject to taxation by the States. (California v. Shearer, 30 Cal., 645, 655, 658; Van Brocklin v. Tennessee, 117 U. S., 151.)

9. The power of Congress to legislate or exercise sovereignty over lands within a State is confined to lands acquired by the Federal Government for certain specific purposes, and with the consent of the State. (United States v. Cornell, 2 Mason, 60; Woodruff v. North Bloomfield Gravel Mining Co., 18 Fed. Rept., 753.)

The far-reaching effects of this proposed legislation and the evident attempt of the Federal Government to usurp the sovereign powers of the States move us to consider more extensively the effect of the principles above laid down and the cases supporting our views. In doing so we rest our views and conclusions largely upon the following premises:

1. Before the formation of the present Government all sovereign powers were vested in the several States within their borders.

2. The Federal Government formed by the States has only such powers as the States bestowed upon it by the Constitution. All others are reserved to the States.

3. The powers thus granted do not include the power to regulate or control the use of the waters of streams flowing within a State except to maintain and regulate commerce between the States, with foreign nations, and under treaties with the Indians.

4. The ownership of land within a State as a proprietary owner and not for governmental uses and purposes gives the Federal Government no power or jurisdiction to regulate or control the use of the waters of a stream on which the land borders.

5. Therefore any legislation attempting to vest any such power in the Government will be unconstitutional and void.

That the bill under consideration does provide for such usurpation of power we will show further along.

Having laid down these general principles that should guide and control our action, we quote, for the information of the Senate, some of the language of the courts on the subject which we regard as conclusive.

In Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan (3 How., 212) the question was as to the title to lands covered by the waters of a navigable stream and involved the power and jurisdiction of the United States Government over such lands. The court said:

"The right which belongs to the society——

Mr. WALSH. I understood the reading of the quotation was to be omitted.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator misunderstood me. I want the balance of the report read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is objection, and the report will be read as it appears.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the views of the minority, as follows:

The court said:

"The right which belongs to the society, or to the sovereign, of disposing in case of necessity, and for the public safety, of all the wealth contained in the State, is called the eminent domain. It is evident that this right is, in certain cases, necessary to him who governs and is consequently a part of the empire, or sovereign power. (Vat. Law of Nations, sec. 244.) This definition shows that the eminent domain, although a sovereign power, does not include all sovereign power, and this explains the sense in which it is used in this opinion. The compact made between the United States and the State of Georgia was sanctioned by the Constitution of the United States, by the third section of the fourth articles of which it is declared that 'New States may be admitted by the Congress into this Union, but no new State shall be formed or erected within the jurisdiction of any other State, nor any State be formed by the junction of two or more States or parts of States, without the consent of the legislatures of the States concerned, as well as of Congress.'

"When Alabama was admitted into the Union, on an equal footing with the original States, she succeeded to all the rights of sovereignty, jurisdiction, and eminent domain which Georgia possessed at the date of the cession, except so far as this right was diminished by the public lands remaining in the possession and under the control of the United States, for the temporary purposes provided for in the deed of cession and the legislative acts connected with it. Nothing remained to the United States, according to the terms of the agreement, but the public lands. And, if an express stipulation had been inserted in the agreement, granting the municipal right of sovereignty and eminent domain to the United States, such stipulations would have been void and inoperative, because the United States have no constitutional capacity to exercise municipal jurisdiction, sovereignty, or eminent domain, within the limits of a State or elsewhere, except in the cases in which it is expressly granted.

"By the sixteenth clause of the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution power is given Congress 'to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such district (not exceeding 10 miles square) as may by cession of particular States, and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of government of the United States, and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the legislature of the State in which the same may be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards, and other needful buildings.' Within the District of Columbia, and the other places purchased and used for the purposes above mentioned, the Nation and municipal powers of government of every description are united in the government of the Union. And these are the only cases within the United States in which all the powers of government are united in a single government, except in cases already mentioned of the temporary territorial governments, and there a local government exists. The right of Alabama and every other new State to exercise all the powers of government, which belong to and may be exercised by the original States of the Union, must be admitted and remain unquestioned, except so far as they are temporarily deprived of control over the public lands.

"We will now inquire into the nature and extent of the right of the United States to these lands, and whether that right can in any manner affect or control the decision of the case before us. This right originated in voluntary surrenders, made by several of the old States, of their waste and unappropriated lands to the United States, under a resolution of the old Congress of the 6th of September, 1780, recommending such surrender and cession, to aid in paying the public debt incurred by the War of the Revolution. The object of all the parties to these contracts of cession was to convert the land into money for the payment of the debt and to erect new States over the territory thus ceded; and as soon as these purposes could be accomplished the power of the United States over these lands as property was to cease.

"Whenever the United States shall have fully executed these trusts the municipal sovereignty of the new States will be complete throughout their respective borders, and they and the original States will be upon an equal footing in all respects whatever. We therefore think the United States hold the public lands within the new States by force of the deeds of cession, and the statutes connected with them, and not by any municipal sovereignty which it may be supposed they possess or have reserved by compact with the new States for that particular purpose. The provision of the Constitution above referred to shows that no such power can be exercised by the United States within a State. Such a power is not only repugnant to the Constitution but it is inconsistent with the spirit and intention of the deeds of cession. The argument so much relied on by the counsel for the plaintiffs, that the agreement of the people inhabiting the new States, 'that they forever disclaim all right and title to the waste or unappropriated lands lying within the said territory, and that the same shall be and remain at the sole and entire disposition of the United States,' can not operate as a contract between the parties, but is binding as a law. Full power is given to Congress 'to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property of the United States.' This authorized the passage of all laws necessary to secure the rights of the United States to the public lands and to provide for their sale, and to protect them from taxation."

The case of Withers v. Buckley (20 How., 84) involved the powers of the Federal and State Governments over navigable streams. It also lays down the rule since adhered to that the fifth and other amendments to the Constitution were intended to modify the powers granted to the Federal Government and do not limit or affect the powers of the State.

Quoting from the language of Chief Justice Marshall in Barron v. Baltimore (7 Peters, 247–248), the court said:

"The question thus presented we think of great importance but not of much difficulty.

"The Constitution was ordained and established by the people of the United States for themselves; for their own government, and not for the government of the individual States. Each State established a constitution for itself, and in that constitution provided such limitations and restrictions on the powers of its particular government as its judgment dictated. The people of the United States framed such a government for the United States as they supposed best adapted to their situation and best adapted to promote their interests. The powers they conferred on this government were to be exercised by itself; and the limitations on power, if expressed in general terms, are naturally, and we think necessarily, applicable to the government created by the instrument. They are limitations of power granted by the instrument itself, not of distinct governments framed by different persons and for different purposes.

"If these propositions be correct the fifth amendment must be understood as restraining the power of the General Government not as applicable to the States. In their several constitutions they have imposed such restrictions on their respective governments as their own wisdom suggested, such as they deemed most proper for themselves. It is a subject on which they judge exclusively and with which others interfere no further than they are supposed to have a common interest."

Again, reverting to the causes which led to the proposal and adoption of the amendments of the Constitution, the same judge remarks (ib., p. 250)—and these remarks embrace the whole series of articles adopted:

"In almost every convention in which the Constitution was adopted, amendments to guard against the abuse of power were recommended. These amendments demanded security against the apprehended encroachments of the General Government, not against those of the local governments.

"In compliance with a sentiment thus generally expressed, to quiet fears thus extensively entertained, amendments were proposed by the required majority in Congress and adopted by the States. These amendments contain no expression indicating an intention to apply them to the State governments. This court can not so apply them." (Vide also the cases of Fox v. The State of Ohio, 5 How., 411, and of The West River Bridge Co. v. Dix et al., 6 How., 507.)

And further, in considering an act of Congress relating to the subject, the court, in the same case, used this language:

"In considering this act of Congress of March 1, 1817, it is unnecessary to institute any examination or criticism as to its legitimate meaning, or operation, or binding authority, further than to affirm that it could have no effect to restrict the new State in any of its necessary attributes as an independent sovereign government, nor to inhibit or diminish its perfect equality with the other members of the Confederacy with which it was to be associated. These conclusions follow from the very nature and objects of the Confederacy, from the language of the Constitution adopted by the States, and from the rule of interpretation pronounced by this court in the case of Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan (3 How., p. 223). The act of Congress of March 1, 1817, in prescribing the free navigation of the Mississippi and the navigable waters flowing into the river, could not have been designed to inhibit the power inseparable from every sovereign or efficient government, to devise and to execute measures for the improvement of the State, although such measures might induce or render necessary changes in the channels or courses of rivers within the interior of the State, or might be productive of a change in the value of private property. Such consequences are not infrequently and indeed unavoidably incident to public and general measures highly promotive of and absolutely necessary to the public good. And here it may be asked whether the law complained of and the measures said to be in contemplation for its execution are in reality in conflict with the act of Congress of March 1, 1817, with respect either to the letter or the spirit of the act. On this point may be cited the case of Veazie et al. v. Moor" (14 How., 568).

The case of Escanaba Co. v. Chicago (107 U. S., 678) involved the right of the States to legislate respecting the use of navigable streams over which, for purposes of commerce between the States, the Federal Government has jurisdiction. In dealing with this question the court said:

"The power vested in the General Government to regulate interstate and foreign commerce involves the control of the waters of the United States which are navigable in fact, so far as it may be necessary to insure their free navigation, when by themselves or their connection with other waters they form a continuous channel for commerce among the States or with foreign countries. * * *

"But the States have full power to regulate within their limits matters of internal police, including in that general designation whatever will promote the peace, comfort, convenience, and prosperity of their people. This power embraces the construction of roads, canals, and bridges and the establishment of ferries, and it can generally be exercised more wisely by the States than by a distant authority. They are the first to see the importance of such means of internal communication and are more deeply concerned than others in their wise management. Illinois is more immediately affected by the bridges over the Chicago River and its branches than any other State and is more directly concerned for the prosperity of the city of Chicago, for the convenience and comfort of its inhabitants, and the growth of its commerce. And nowhere could the power to control the bridges in that city, their construction, form, and strength, and the size of their draws, and the manner and times of using them be better vested than with the State or the authorities of the city upon which it has devolved that duty. When its power is exercised so as to unnecessarily obstruct the navigation of the river or its branches, Congress may interfere and remove the obstruction. If the power of the State and that of the Federal Government come in conflict, the latter must control and the former yield. This necessarily follows from the position given by the Constitution to legislation in pursuance of it as the supreme law of the land. But until Congress acts on the subject the power of the State over bridges across its navigable streams is plenary.

"The doctrine declared in these several decisions is in accordance with the more general doctrine now firmly established—that the commercial power of Congress is exclusive of State authority only when the subjects upon which it is exercised are national in their character and admit and require uniformity of regulation affecting alike all the States. Upon such subjects only that authority can act which can speak for the whole country. Its nonaction is therefore a declaration that they shall remain free from all regulation."

Kansas v. Colorado (206 U. S., 46) involves directly the power of the Federal Government to legislate respecting the irrigation of arid lands. The question presented for decision is thus stated by the court:

"Turning now to the controversy as here presented, it is whether Kansas has a right to the continuous flow of the waters of the Arkansas River as that flow existed before any human interference therewith or Colorado the right to appropriate the waters of that stream so as to prevent that continuous flow, or that the amount of the flow is subject to the superior authority and supervisory control of the United States. * * *

"The primary question is, of course, of national control. For, if the Nation has a right to regulate the flow of the waters, we must inquire what it has done in the way of regulation. If it has done nothing, the further question will then arise, What are the respective rights of the two States in the absence of national regulation?"

In discussing this question, as stated by the court, it was said:

"Congress has, by virtue of the grant to it of power to regulate commerce 'among the several States,' extensive control over the highways, natural or artificial, upon which such commerce may be carried. It may prevent or remove obstructions in the natural waterways and preserve the navigability of those ways. * * *

"That involves the question whether the reclamation of arid lands is one of the powers granted to the General Government. As heretofore stated, the constant declaration of this court from the beginning is that this Government is one of enumerated powers. 'The Government, then, of the United States can claim no powers which are not granted to it by the Constitution, and the powers actually granted must be such as are expressly given or given by necessary implication.' (Story, J., in Martin v. Hunter's Lessee, 1 Wheat., 304, 326.) 'The Government of the United States is one of delegated, limited, and enumerated powers.' (United States v. Harris, 106 U. S., 629, 635.)

"Turning to the enumeration of the powers granted to Congress by the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution, it is enough to say that no one of them by any implication refers to the reclamation of arid lands. The last paragraph of the section, which authorizes Congress to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or office thereof, is not the delegation of a new and independent power, but simply provision for making effective the powers theretofore mentioned. * * *

"We must look beyond section 8 for congressional authority over arid lands, and it is said to be found in the second paragraph of section 3 of Article IV, reading: 'The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims of the United States or of any particular State.'

"The full scope of this paragraph has never been definitely settled. Primarily, at least, it is a grant of power to the United States of control over its property. That is implied by the words 'territory or other property.' It is true it has been referred to in some decisions as granting political and legislative control over the Territories as distinguished from the States of the Union. It is unnecessary in the present case to consider whether the language justifies this construction. Certainly we have no disposition to limit or qualify the expressions which have heretofore fallen from this court in respect thereto. But, clearly, it does not grant to Congress any legislative control over the States, and must, so far as they are concerned, be limited to authority over the property belonging to the United States within their limits. Appreciating the force of this, counsel for the Government relies upon 'the doctrine of sovereign and inherent power,' adding, 'I am aware that in advancing this doctrine I seem to challenge great decisions of the court, and I speak with deference.' His argument runs substantially along this line: All legislative power must be vested in either the State or the National Government; no legislative powers belong to a State government other than those which affect solely the internal affairs of that State, consequently all powers which are national in their scope must be found vested in the Congress of the United States. But the proposition that there are legislative powers affecting the Nation as a whole which belong to, although not expressed in, the grant of powers is in direct conflict with the doctrine that this is a Government of enumerated powers. That this is such a Government clearly appears from the Constitution, independently of the amendments, for otherwise there would be an instrument granting specific things made operative to grant other and distinct things. This natural construction of the original body of the Constitution is made absolutely certain by the tenth amendment. This amendment, which was seemingly adopted with prescience of just such contention as the present, disclosed the widespread fear that the National Government might, under the pressure of a supposed general welfare, attempt to exercise powers which had not been granted. With equal determination the framers intended that no such assumption should ever find justification in the organic act, and that if in the future further powers seemed necessary they should be granted by the people in the manner they had provided for amending that act. It reads, 'The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution nor prohibited by it to the States are reserved to the States, respectively or to the people * * *.'

"One cardinal rule underlying all the relations of the States to each other is that of equality of right. Each State stands on the same level with all the rest. It can impose its own legislation on no one of the others and is bound to yield its own views to none. Yet, whenever, as in the case of Missouri v. Illinois (180 U. S., 208), the action of one State reaches through the agency of natural laws into the territory of another State, the question of the extent and the limitations of the rights of the two States becomes a matter of justiciable dispute between them, and this court is called upon to settle that dispute in such a way as will recognize the equal rights of both and at the same time establish justice between them."

The court then proceeded to consider and determine the rights, not of the Federal Government, but of the States of Kansas and Colorado, in the waters of the Arkansas River, a stream which flows through both States.

The case of Shively v. Bowlby (152 U. S., 1) involved the title to lands below high-water mark in the Columbia River in the State of Oregon. It is one of the leading cases on the subject of the powers of the Federal and State Governments over navigable streams. That the power and jurisdiction of the States over nonnavigable streams and lands lying under them is exclusive is not questioned. It is only where the question of navigation for interstate purposes is involved that any question of sovereign power in the States has ever been controverted. In this case the laws of the several States on the subject and the numerous decided cases bearing upon it are fully reviewed and the doctrine laid down in Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan, quoted from above, confirmed and approved. The opinion in the case is an exceedingly interesting and instructive one and should receive attention in this connection. In closing, the court said:

"The United States, while they hold the country as a Territory, having all the powers both of national and municipal government, may grant for appropriate purposes, titles or rights in the soil below high-water mark of tidewaters. But they have never done so by general laws; and, unless in some case of international duty or public exigency, have acted upon the policy, as most in accordance with the interest of the people and with the object for which the Territories were acquired, of leaving the administration and disposition of this sovereign right in navigable waters and in the soil under them to the control of the States, respectively, when organized and admitted into the Union.

"Grants by Congress of portions of the public lands within a Territory to settlers thereon, though bordering on or bounded by navigable waters, convey, of their own force, no title or right below high-water mark, and do not impair the title and dominion of the future State when created, but leave the question of the use of the shores by the owners of uplands to the sovereign control of each State, subject only to the rights vested by the Constitution in the United States.

"The donation land claim, bounded by the Columbia River, upon which the plaintiff in error relies, includes no title or right in the land below high-water mark, and the statutes of Oregon, under which the defendants in error hold, are a constitutional and legal exercise by the State of Oregon of its dominion over the lands under navigable waters."

The following statement in the opinion in Illinois Central Railroad v. Illinois (146 U. S., 387, 435) is to the same effect:

"It is the settled law of this country that the ownership of and dominion and sovereignty over lands covered by tidewaters, within the limits of the several States, belong to the respective States within which they are found, with the consequent right to use or dispose of any portion thereof, when that can be done without substantial impairment of the interest of the public in the waters, and subject always to the paramount right of Congress to control their navigation as far as may be necessary for the regulation of commerce with foreign nations and among the States. This doctrine has been often announced by this court and is not questioned by counsel of any of the parties." (Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan, 3 How., 212; Weber v. Harbor Commissioners, 18 Wall., 57.)

As establishing the claim we make that the Constitution vests no power in the Federal Government to regulate or control the use of the waters of a stream within a State, and that this power can not be given by a statute enacted by Congress, we quote this language from the opinion in New Orleans v. United States (10 Peters, 662, 736):

"The Government of the United States, as was well observed in the argument, is one of limited powers. It can exercise authority over no subjects, except those which have been delegated to it. Congress can not, by legislation, enlarge the Federal jurisdiction, nor can it be enlarged under the treaty-making power."

That the States have the right to regulate the use of even navigable streams within their borders where Congress has not acted or where such action does not interfere with the paramount power of the Federal Government to regulate commerce between the States, is affirmed by Leovy v. United States (177 U. S., 621), in which it is said:

"Subject, then, to the paramount jurisdiction of Congress over the navigable waters of the United States, the State of Louisiana has full power to authorize the construction and maintenance of levees, drains, and other structures necessary and suitable to reclaim swamp and overflowed lands within her limits."

And in the Daniel Ball (177 U. S., 10 Wall., 557) it is said:

"Those rivers must be regarded as public navigable rivers in law which are navigable in fact. And they are navigable in fact when they are used, or are susceptible of being used, in their ordinary condition, as highways for commerce, over which trade and travel are or may be conducted in the customary modes of trade and travel on water."

Respecting the right of a State to control the navigation of a stream wholly within its limits it was said in the case of Veazie v. Moor (14 How., 568, 573):

"Upon a comparison of this decree and of the statute upon which it is founded with the provision of the Constitution already referred to, we are unable to perceive by what rule of interpretation either the statute or the decree can be brought within either of the categories comprised in that provision.

"These categories are: 1. Commerce with foreign nations. 2. Commerce amongst the several States. 3. Commerce with the Indian tribes. Taking the term commerce in its broadest acceptation, supposing it to embrace not merely traffic but the means and vehicles by which it is prosecuted, can it properly be made to include objects and purposes such as those contemplated by the law under review? Commerce with foreign nations must signify commerce which in some sense is necessarily connected with these nations, transactions which either immediately or at some stage of their progress must be extraterritorial. * * * The phrase can never be applied to transactions wholly internal, between citizens of the same community, or to a polity and laws whose ends and purposes and operations are restricted to the territory and soil and jurisdiction of such community. Nor can it be properly concluded that, because the products of domestic enterprise in agriculture or manufactures, or in the arts may ultimately become the subjects of foreign commerce, the control of the means of the encouragements by which enterprise is fostered and protected is legitimately within the import of the phrase foreign commerce, or fairly implied in any investiture of the power to regulate such commerce. A pretension as far-reaching as this would extend to contracts between citizen and citizen of the same State, would control the pursuits of the planter, the grazier, the manufacturer, the mechanic, the immense operations of the collieries and mines and furnaces of the country; for there is not one of these avocations the results of which may not become the subjects of foreign commerce and be borne either by turnpikes, canals, or railroads from point to point within the several States toward an ultimate destination, like the one above mentioned. Such a pretension would effectually prevent or paralyze every effort at internal improvement by the several States; for it can not be supposed that the States would exhaust their capital and their credit in the construction of turnpikes, canals, and railroads, the remuneration derivable from which and all control over which might be immediately wrested from them, because such public works would be facilities for a commerce which, while availing itself of those facilities, was unquestionably internal, although intermediately or ultimately it might become foreign.

"The rule here given with respect to the regulation of foreign commerce equally excludes from the regulation of commerce between the States and the Indian tribes the control over turnpikes, canals, or railroads, or the clearing and deepening of watercourses exclusively within the States, or the management of the transportation upon and by means of such improvements."

In New York v. Miln (11 Pet., 102, 139) the absolute right of the State in this respect is more clearly and emphatically declared in this language:

"But we do not place our opinion on this ground. We choose rather to plant ourselves on what we consider impregnable positions. They are these: That a State has the same undeniable and unlimited jurisdiction over all persons and things within its territorial limits as any foreign nation, where that jurisdiction is not surrendered or restrained by the Constitution of the United States. That, by virtue of this, it is not only the right, but the bounden and solemn duty of a State to advance the safety, happiness, and prosperity of its people and to provide for its general welfare by every act of legislation which it may deem to be conducive to these ends, where the power over the particular subject or the manner of its exercise is not surrendered or restrained in the manner just stated. That all those powers which relate to merely municipal legislation, or what may, perhaps, more properly be called internal police are not thus surrendered or restrained, and that consequently, in relation to these, the authority of a State is complete, unqualified, and exclusive.

"We are aware that it is at all times difficult to define any subject with proper precision and accuracy; that if this be so in general, it is emphatically so in relation to a subject so diversified and multifarious as the one which we are now considering.

"If we were to attempt it, we should say that every law came within this description which concerned the welfare of the whole people of a State or any individual within it, whether it related to their rights or their duties, whether it respected them as men or as citizens of the State, whether in their public or private relation, whether it related to the rights of persons or of property or of the whole people of the State or any individual within it, and whose operation was within the territorial limits of the State and upon the persons and things within its jurisdiction."

Applying this doctrine to the right of a State to protect and control the flow of water in the streams within its limits, the court said, in Hudson Water Co. v. McCarter (209 U. S., 349, 356):

"The problems of irrigation have no place here. Leaving them on one side, it appears to us that few public interests are more obvious, indisputable, and independent of particular theory than the interest of the public of a State to maintain the rivers that are wholly within it substantially undiminished, except by such drafts upon them as the guardian of the public welfare may permit for the purpose of turning them to a more perfect use. This public interest is omnipresent wherever there is a State and grows more pressing as population grows. It is fundamental, and we are of opinion that the private property of riparian proprietors can not be supposed to have deeper roots. Whether it be said that such an interest justifies the cutting down by statute without compensation, in the exercise of the police power, of what otherwise would be private rights of property, or that apart from statute those rights do not go to the height of what the defendant seeks to do, the result is the same. But we agree with the New Jersey courts and think it quite beyond any rational view of riparian rights that an agreement, of no matter what private owners, could sanction the diversion of an important stream outside the boundaries of the State in which it flows. * * *

"The right to receive water from a river through pipes is subject to territorial limits by nature, and those limits may be fixed by the State within which the river flows, even if they are made to coincide with the State line."

Respecting the effect of the admission of Wyoming as a State upon a treaty with the Indians by which they were given the right to hunt on the public domain, the court in Ward v. Race Horse (163 U. S., 504) used this language:

"The argument now advanced in favor of the continued existence of the right to hunt over the land mentioned in the treaty, after it had become subject to State authority, admits that the privilege would cease by the mere fact that the United States disposed of its title to any of the land, although such disposition, when made to an individual, would give him no authority over game, and yet that privilege continued when the United States had called into being a sovereign State, a necessary incident of whose authority was the complete power to regulate the killing of game within its borders. This argument indicates at once the conflict between the right to hunt in the unoccupied lands within the hunting districts and the assertion of the power to continue the exercise of the privilege in question in the State of Wyoming in defiance of its laws. * * *

"The act which admitted Wyoming into the Union, as we have said, expressly declared that that State should have all the powers of the other States of the Union, and made no reservation whatever in favor of the Indians. These provisions alone considered would be in conflict with the treaty if it was so construed as to allow the Indians to seek out every unoccupied piece of Government land and thereon disregard and violate the State law, passed in the undoubted exercise of its municipal authority. But the language of the act admitting Wyoming into the Union, which recognized her coequal rights, was merely declaratory of the general rule."

As to the limitation of the powers of the Federal Government based upon its proprietary ownership of lands within a State, this is said in Woodruff v. North Bloomfield Gravel Mining Co. (18 Fed. Rep., 753, 772):

"Upon the cession of California by Mexico, the sovereignty and proprietorship of all the lands within its borders in which no private interest had vested passed to the United States. Upon the admission of California into the Union, upon an equal footing with the original States, the sovereignty for all internal municipal purposes and for all purposes except such purposes and with such powers as are expressly conferred upon the National Government by the Constitution of the United States, passed to the State of California. Thenceforth the only interest of the United States in the public lands was that of a proprietor, like that of any other proprietor, except that the State, under the express terms upon which it was admitted, could pass no laws to interfere with their primary disposal, and they were not subject to taxation. In all other respects the United States stood upon the same footing as private owners of land."

Having demonstrated, by reference to the decided cases, the respective rights of the Federal Government and the States in the subject matter of the bill, we proceed to consider the provisions of the bill itself and the bearing of the principles we have discussed above on its terms and conditions.

But before taking up the various provisions of the bill in detail we desire to consider it briefly as a whole.

The bill in its entire scope and purpose is an infringement upon and a usurpation of the sovereign powers of the States. This is not only its effect, but it is the avowed intention of its friends to transfer, in part, at least, from the States to the National Government the control over the use of the waters of the stream within the States. Ostensibly, it is proposed to authorize the Government to lease its own lands. To this there are serious objections, as we shall point out further along. But the public lands that may be leased for power sites are of themselves practically worthless. The Government has no ownership or interest in the water flowing in the stream except that of a riparian owner, and that only in States where riparian rights are recognized. In most of the Western States riparian rights are abolished and the ownership of the water vested in the whole people of the State, to be appropriated and applied to beneficial uses, as the laws of the State may provide. The Government owns the land precisely as a private individual owns his land, and with the same rights and privileges as to the use of the water that flows by it—no more, no less. It does not own it in its sovereign capacity, as we have shown, and has no sovereign power over it or over the water that flows past it. But the effect of the bill is to lease, not alone the land it owns, but the waters of the stream upon which it borders, and by conditions and restrictions in the lease to determine how and for what purposes the lessee shall use the water, as well as the land. This is in violation of the principles enunciated by the courts, as above pointed out, and an encroachment upon, and a plain and open violation of, the sovereign rights of the States to govern and control such use.

It is an ingenious effort to fasten upon the private ownership of the land, by the Government, the sovereign right to control the use of the waters, a right that the Government does not possess under the Constitution and can not be given it by statute, and which admittedly does belong to the States. The rental to be paid by the lessee is not based upon the value of the use of the land, but upon the amount of power that can be produced by the water, which belongs to the State, and, as the water, in which the Government has no ownership or interest, is thus leased, the attempt is made to control the use of the thing leased, namely, the water. It may be conceded that the Government, as lessor, and the lessee may agree upon any basis they please in fixing the rental or royalty to be paid. Of this the State could not justly complain. The trouble is that because the Government fixes the amount to be paid for the land by the amount of power that can be produced by the water, over which it can have no right or control, it is attempting to vest in itself the unwarranted power to determine how the water shall be used and what for. Ostensibly, this is done to protect the Government, as lessor, and secure to it a compliance, on the part of the lessee, with the terms of the lease. But the intention and the effect of it is to draw to the Federal Government the right to control the use of the water. And this is the matter in controversy. Of this the States have every reason to complain. The granting of any such privilege is a betrayal of the sovereign rights of the State.

If any private owner of lands bordering on a stream should lease his lands for a power site and impose any such terms and conditions affecting the use of the water as this bill provides for, they would undoubtedly be inoperative and void. And, as the National Government, in this respect, has only the rights of a private owner, such conditions, made by the Government, would be equally so.

Having submitted these views on the general scope and effect of the bill, we proceed to verify what we have said of it by calling attention to some of its specific provisions.

In its first section the bill authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to lease lands of the Government for the "development, generation, transmission, and utilization of hydroelectric power." The effort is to devote not only the land leased, but the water, to a specific and exclusive purpose, namely, the generation of power. This is a direct violation of the right of the States to regulate and control the use or uses to which water should be applied, and in direct opposition to the policies of the States. In nearly all of the States where irrigation is practiced and in which this law, if enacted, will operate, have, either by direct statutory provisions or rules and regulations adopted by utility commissioners or other authorized official bodies, provided what uses of water shall be preferred over others where the water supply from any source is insufficient to meet all needs, usually in the following order: Domestic use, irrigation, development of power. This whole bill proceeds upon the theory that the Government can fix and designate the use to which the water shall be devoted, in spite of contrary rules fixed by the States. But we apprehend that if such a lease as is proposed were made and the power plant erected, the State could at any time require that the water used for the purpose of generating power be applied to domestic use or irrigation, if the water is needed for that purpose, and the lessee's lease and plant rendered valueless. If not, then the Government has, by its lease and the application of the water to a single and specific use, deprived the State of its undoubted sovereign right to determine the uses to which the water shall be applied. No one can doubt under the authorities we have cited that in a conflict of this kind between the two Governments the right of the State to say how and for what purposes water shall be used would be sustained.

The vice of this first section runs through the whole bill. All of its provisions and limitations relate wholly to the use of the water for the generation of power. There is a feeble attempt to remedy this defect by section 19, which provides that the plant may be enlarged by the lessee "for the purpose of impounding and conveying water for irrigation, mining, municipal, domestic, and other beneficial purposes." But this does not correct the evil. It is a mere consent of the Government that the water may be used for other purposes if the lessee desires. It is a consent given in a matter over which the Government has no control and about which it has no power either to give or withhold consent. And its consent, when given, amounts to nothing as affecting the use to which the water shall be applied. That is a matter exclusively within the power and jurisdiction of the States.

There is another apparent effort to avoid this and other void provisions in the bill that we will come to directly, by section 13, which provides that it shall not affect or interfere with the laws of any State relating to the control, appropriation, use, or distribution of water. Either this provision must have no effect at all or it will nullify every important provision of the bill, because the whole scope and effect of the bill, as we have shown, directly interferes with such laws of the States.

We now pass to the consideration of other provisions of the bill equally objectionable.

1. LIMITATION OF LEASE TO 50 YEARS.

Any attempt to limit the life of a plant for the distribution and use of water is wholly at variance with the whole theory of water rights in the Western States. Where water is put to use for irrigation, for example, the use must be perpetual and not for a limited term, otherwise a landowner might have the use of the water until his trees are matured, then lose his supply, bringing destruction upon his trees and his crops. To prevent this it is provided by statute in most if not all of the irrigation States that if a public-service corporation shall once supply water to land for irrigation the right to its continued and perpetual use, as an appurtenant to his land, attaches and passes, like other appurtenances, by a conveyance of the land. This is not so important as applied to the use of water for the development of power, except where the power is used, as it is very generally, for the pumping and other means of supplying water for irrigation. In that case it is equally important with the direct supply of water for irrigation.

2. RIGHT TO USE WATER MUST FIRST BE OBTAINED FROM STATE.

It is provided that no lease shall be granted until the applicant has complied with the requirements of the laws of the State or Territory wherein said project is to be located providing for the appropriation of water to develop or generate the electrical energy intended to be generated by applicant's proposed project. In some of the States this provision will be impossible of execution, because no right to the water can be obtained from the State until the plant to be used in applying it to a beneficial purpose is completed and approved by the State authorities, and then no title to the water is granted, but only a license to use it. For example, in California a water commission is provided for by law. This commission is given complete and plenary power over the appropriation and use of water for any and all purposes. The commission is authorized to investigate all streams and determine the amount of total flow of the different streams in the State, the amount appropriated and in proper and necessary use, and the quantity open to appropriation. Anyone desiring to appropriate water from any stream must apply to this commission and state in his petition therefor certain required facts. Upon a proper showing being made, a permit is issued allowing the construction of proper works for its diversion and distribution.

The statute provides:

"SEC. 16. Every application for a permit to appropriate water shall set forth the name and post-office address of the applicant, the source of water supply, the nature and amount of the proposed use, the location and description of the proposed head works, ditch, canal, and other works; the proposed place of diversion and the place where it is intended to use the water; the time within which it is proposed to begin construction, the time required for completion of the construction, and the time for the complete application of the water to the proposed use. If for agricultural purposes, the applicant shall, besides the above general requirements, give the legal subdivisions of the land and the acreage to be irrigated as near as may be; if for power purposes, it shall give, besides the general requirements prescribed above, the nature of the works by means of which the power is to be developed, the head and amount of water to be utilized, and the use to which the power is to be applied; if for storage in a reservoir, it shall give, in addition to the general requirements prescribed above, the height of dam, the capacity of the reservoir, and the use to be made of the impounded waters; if for municipal water supply, it shall give, besides the general requirements specified above, the present population to be served and, as near as may be, the future requirements of the city; if for mining purposes, it shall give, in addition to the general requirements prescribed above, the nature and location of the mines to be served and the methods of supplying and utilizing the water." (Cal. Stat., 1913, pp. 1012, 1021.)

The statute further provides:

"SEC. 19. Immediately upon completion, in accordance with law, the rules and regulations of the State water commission, and the terms of the permit, of the project under such application, the holder of a permit for the right to appropriate water shall report said completion to the State water commission. The said commission shall immediately thereafter cause to be made a full inspection and examination of the works constructed and shall determine whether the construction of said works is in conformity with law, the terms of the approved application, the rules and regulations of the State water commission, and the permit. The said water commission shall, if said determination is favorable to the applicant, isue a license which shall give the right to the diversion of such an amount of water and to the use thereof as may be necessary to fulfill the purpose of approved application." (Cal. Stat., 1913, pp. 1012, 1023.)

So it will be seen that in California the provision that the applicant must first comply with the requirements of the law of the State can have no effect, because his right can not be passed upon until the whole works are completed and approved by the water commission. And if not approved, the applicant is refused a license to divert and use the water. Therefore it is impossible for him to comply with the laws of the State before the lease is granted. And under the following provision of the statute all water not appropriated in accordance with the laws of the State is declared to belong to the people:

"And all waters flowing in any river, stream, canyon, ravine, or other natural channel, excepting so far as such waters have been or are being applied to useful and beneficial purpose upon, or in so far as such waters are or may be reasonably needed for useful and beneficial purposes upon lands riparian thereto, or otherwise appropriated, is, and are hereby, declared to be public waters of the State of California and subject to appropriation in accordance with the provisions of this act." (Cal. Stat., 1913, pp. 1012, 1023.)

3. PROVISION AS TO TIME AND MANNER OF DOING THE WORK OR ESTABLISHING THE PLANT.

This matter is completely covered by State laws, and the provision conflicts directly with those laws. The California statute to which we have referred places in the hands of the water commissioners the power to determine when, where, and how the water shall be applied and continued in actual use. It provides:

"SEC. 12. The State water commission shall have authority to, and may, for good cause shown, upon the application of any appropriator or user of water under an appropriation made and maintained according to law prior to the passage of this act, prescribe the time within which the full amount of the water appropriated shall be applied to a useful or beneficial purpose."

And certain rules for determining what is a reasonable prosecution and completion of the work are laid down for the guidance of the commission. The statute further provides:

"SEC. 18. Actual construction work upon any project shall begin within such time after the date of the approval of the application as shall be specified in said approval, which time shall not be less than 60 days from date of said approval, and the construction of the work thereafter shall be prosecuted with due diligence in accordance with this act, the terms of the approved application, and the rules and regulations of said commission; and said work shall be completed in accordance with law, the rules and regulations of the State water commission, and the terms of the approved application, and within a period specified in the permit; but the period of completion specified in the permit may, for good cause shown, be extended by the State water commission. And if such work be not so commenced, prosecuted, and completed the water commission shall, after notice in writing, and mailed in a sealed, postage-prepaid, and registered letter addressed to the applicant at the address given in his application for a permit to appropriate water, and a hearing before the commission, revoke its approval of the application. But any applicant, the approval of whose application shall have been thus revoked, shall have the right to bring an action in the superior court of the county in which is situated the point of the proposed diversion of the water for a review of the order of the commission revoking said approval of the application."

Thus we have a complete system of regulation in the State intended to secure an early application of the water to a beneficial use. To this end work is required to be commenced in not less than 60 days and prosecuted with due diligence, under rules and regulations prescribed by the commission.

This bill provides in section 2:

"That each lease made in pursuance of this act shall provide for the diligent, orderly, and reasonable development and continuous operation of the water power, subject to market conditions."

In other words, the State, admittedly the only authority having jurisdiction over the matter, provides that the work must commence within 60 days, be prosecuted with diligence, and completed under rules and regulations prescribed by the water commission. By this act we fix no time when the work shall be begun, prosecuted, and completed, but require it to be done as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe in a lease and subject to market conditions. We have shown that the Federal Government has no power or jurisdiction over this matter of supplying water or power in a State; but if it had this would involve a conflict of authority between the State and Federal Governments that must lead to conflicts and be intolerable.

4. ALLOWING INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION TO FIX RATES AND DETERMINE THE ISSUE OF STOCKS AND BONDS.

It is possible that where a corporation is engaged in transmitting power into another State the Federal Government would, because it is interstate business, have power to fix the rates to be charged against consumers, at least in the State to which it is transmitted. It is submitted, however, that it has no such power respecting power furnished by the corporation in its own State. And in no event could the Government justify itself in assuming to control the issue of stocks and bonds of a corporation as against the laws of the State of its creation. This would be an unwarranted exercise of authority based upon the mere fact that the corporation is its tenant, holding Government land within the State. Referring again to California, the railroad commission of the State has authority, conferred upon it by statute, to fix and determine not only the rates to be charged by a corporation furnishing power within the State, but to determine its bond and stock issue and other indebtedness. In other words, that commission has full and ample power to deal with the whole subject. Now it is proposed by this bill to give the same power to a Federal commission. This necessarily brings the two into direct conflict. The power can not be exercised by both governments. It belongs of right to the State, where it is organized and doing business and dealing with the water that belongs to the State and is being supplied to its people. There can be no just or valid claim that this power belongs to the Government, or can properly and legally be vested in it by statute.

5. PROVISION AUTHORIZING THE GOVERNMENT TO TAKE OVER THE LAND AT THE EXPIRATION OF THE LEASE.

By this provision the Government is authorized to take over not only the land it has leased but a water-power plant to be used, and which must continue to be used, for the generation of power for public use and to become a public-utility corporation, obligated to operate the plant and supply power to the public. When it assumes this function, it becomes at once bound by the contracts and other obligations of the lessee to supply the power. It at once becomes amenable to the State authorities having power to regulate its business. If not, then the effect is to deprive the State of the right to regulate the use of the waters of the State as an exercise of its sovereign power. It may well be asked how, when the National Government becomes a utility corporation, the State can exercise as against it the power it has to regulate rates or otherwise control the use and operation of the plant, even to the extent, as it may, of taking away the use of the water and requiring it to be used for other purposes more necessary for the public good than the development of power. Neither the State nor any consumer under the system could sue the Government or compel it in any way to perform its duty as a public-service corporation. This provision, if not illegal, is, it seems to us, absurd. It would lead to untold and innumerable conflicts of governmental authority and complications.

6. MAKING CONTRACTS FOR POWER.

Section 7 of the bill provides for the making of contracts for power upon the approval of the proper State authority and of the Secretary of the Interior.

We think we have demonstrated above that the Federal Government has no power or jurisdiction over this subject within a State. In this instance the right of the State to deal with it is recognized, but the Secretary of the Interior is given the power to nullify the action of the State in giving its approval by refusing to give his own. So action by the Secretary of the Interior, an officer who has no jurisdiction in the matter, and can be given none legally, is made necessary to any such action on the part of the utility corporation, for no better reason than that this particular corporation rents its power site from the Government. Other power corporations are not subject to any such limitation or double regulation. The State can not thus be shorn of its sovereign power over the subject matter by the Government in its capacity of a real estate dealer. It can not be possible that a renter from the Government must be subject to two regulating powers and two rules of regulation and other corporations owning their power sites or leasing them from some one else subject to but one. The mere statement of some of the results should be sufficient to condemn this provision.

7. OBJECTIONABLE MEANS OF ARRIVING AT RENT TO BE PAID.

The amount of rent to be paid for the land to be used as a power site is not fixed by the rental or other value of the land, but the amount of power produced by the use of the water belonging to the State. The land in and of itself is practically of no value. The profit, if any, resulting from the use of the water depends upon the rates collected by the corporation for the powers, which must be fixed by the State, if by anybody. In fixing the rates the State must allow the corporation the amount of rental it is required to pay to the Government as a part of its yearly operating expenses. The consumers must pay, not the interest on this amount only, as a part of the capital investment, but must pay it all each year as a part of the fixed annual charges of the company. A reasonable charge by the Government for the use of its land may be justified as a real estate transaction. It is not the exercise of sovereign power. It is nothing but a contract of lease, the same in all material respects as a transaction of a like kind by a private individual, with the Secretary of the Interior acting as the real estate agent. This should be kept constantly in mind. But the basis upon which the rental is founded is a false and unjust one. It compels the consumers of water belonging to the State to pay a charge to the Government that it is unconscionable to make. It compels the people of the State to pay the Government for the use of the water that belongs to them and to which the Government has no right and over which it has no power nor jurisdiction. The whole thing is unjust and unconscionable.

8. DISPOSITION OF PROCEEDS OF THE LEASE.

The injustice of the rental founded on the use of the water is made clear and accentuated by the provision, in the eighth section of the bill, that the proceeds shall be paid one half to the State and the other half to the Reclamation Service. This is clearly unjust to the State. The use of the water that belongs wholly to the State is the valuable thing. The Government has no interest in the water and is entitled to none of its benefits. But it assumes to rent it with the practically worthless land, the people of the State pay back the whole of it to the corporation, and the Government provides how the rental shall be divided without the approval or consent of the State. This is extending the power of the Federal Government over the sovereign rights of the States with a vengeance.

9. AUTHORITY TO EXAMINE BOOKS OF LESSEE.

By section 10 the Secretary of the Interior is given authority to examine the books and accounts of the lessees and to require them to submit "statements, representations, or reports, including information as to cost of water rights, lands, easements, and other property acquired, production, use, distribution, and sale of energy; all of which statements, representations, or reports so required shall be upon oath, unless otherwise specified, and in such form and upon such blanks as the Secretary of the Interior may require."

This, again, is a plain usurpation of the power that belongs to the States. Both the Water Commission and the Railroad Commission of the State of California, under its laws, have the right to require all of the information that is provided for in this section. This would subject a corporation that rents from the Federal Government to double examinations and double reports for which the consumers under that particular system must pay, while other corporations, not renting from the Government, would be subject to only one examination and one report. Besides, the Government, as a mere lessor of the property used as a power site, has no interest whatever in any of the things that are required to be reported upon by this section of the bill. As it is proposed to base the rents to be paid for the land upon the amount of power developed—if that be legal and justified—the Government has the right to satisfy itself of the amount of power developed. It has no interest further than that, and any effort to interfere with the business of the corporation or the operation of its plant, which belong alone to the State, is entirely unauthorized.

10. FORFEITURE OF LEASE.

Section 11 provides that this "lease may be forfeited and canceled by appropriate proceedings in a court of competent jurisdiction whenever the lessee, after reasonable notice in writing, as prescribed in the lease, shall fail to comply with the terms of this act or with such conditions not inconsistent therewith as may be specifically recited in the lease."

This would place the lessee in a very unhappy situation. As the State has the undoubted power to regulate the use of the water and the operation of the plant, the lessee might be compelled by State regulations to violate numerous terms provided for in the lease or the regulations of the Secretary of the Interior. Where the power exercised by the Government—and that authority would be exercised by the Secretary of the Interior by this bill—and the State commission should conflict the unfortunate lessee would have to take his chances of being prosecuted by the State authorities and his right to furnish power forfeited, or to comply with the rules, regulations, and orders of the Federal Government whereby his lease may be subject to forfeiture. This perhaps shows quite as clearly as anything else why it is utterly impossible that the provisions of this statute and the rules and regulations that may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior can by any possibility be allowed to stand as against the sovereign power of the State to regulate and control all these things.

11. CAN THE GOVERNMENT BY A SYSTEM OF LONG LEASES PERPETUATE ITS OWNERSHIP IN THE STATES OF UNTAXED LANDS?

We have shown by the decided cases that the Government owns the public lands as a proprietor and not in its sovereign capacity. This is too clearly and firmly established to admit of doubt. In a sense the Government owns the land in trust to dispose of it for use by the citizens of the country. Laws have been enacted from time to time providing for their disposition. Until now the national policy has been to convey the absolute title to the land in whatever way it may be disposed of. But it is now proposed to hold the title to the land in the Federal Government and lease it on long leases. This would be a radical change in governmental policy. It is a very important one to the States. The land in the hands of the Government is not subject to taxation by the States.

In the hearings by the committee this startling statement was made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH]:

"I believe that any leasing bill for the public domain or resources thereof is a direct attack on the sovereignty of the States containing the same, because it must result in a perpetual ownership of the property in the United States Government. Inasmuch as taxes can not be imposed upon property owned by the Federal Government, it means, to carry it to its ultimate result, the depriving of the States of their means of existence.

"I want to call the attention of the committee to a list contained in an article by Mr. W. V. M. Powelson of the number of acres of land in the various Western States now in the ownership of the Government. In Arizona, 92 per cent of the lands within the area of that State are in Government ownership; California, 52.58 per cent; Colorado, 56.67 per cent; Idaho, 83.80 per cent; Montana, 65.80 per cent; Nevada, 87.82 per cent; New Mexico, 62.83 per cent; Oregon, 51 per cent; Utah, 80.18 per cent; Washington, 40 per cent; Wyoming, 68 per cent."

Thus it is shown that lands in the several Western States ranging from 40 to 92 per cent are held in Government ownership and not subject to taxation by the State. And it is proposed by this and other bills pending in the Senate, making up the system of conservation proposed to be inaugurated, to perpetuate this condition and perpetually deprive the States of the right to tax this large percentage of the lands within its borders to maintain and support the State government. Whether the Government has the power to deal with its lands in that way or not, it must be seen by any observing person that it will be a rank injustice to the States in which these lands are situated. But we go further and maintain that the Government, holding the public lands in trust to dispose of them, has no right or authority to thus perpetuate its ownership of nontaxable lands and withhold them from purchase by the people of the country where the title should be vested.

Referring again to the case of Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan (3 How., 212), one of the leading cases on the subject, and from which we have quoted above, it will be seen that as to the public domain, not including lands acquired for permanent use for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards, and other needful buildings in the District of Columbia, the right and ownership of the land by the Government is "temporary," and so it has always, up to this time, been considered. The theory and understanding has always been that public lands are held by the Government temporarily and in trust to dispose of them and vest the permanent fee simple title in those who might acquire them under rules and regulations prescribed by Congress. It was never intended that title to such lands should be held permanently in the Government, and in our judgment any law that vests this right to permanently hold the lands free from State taxation will be an open violation of the trust under which the lands are held and of the sovereign rights of the States.

At the expense of further extending this already long report, we quote again a short extract from the case last mentioned:

"We will now inquire into the nature and extent of the right of the United States to these lands, and whether that right can in any way affect or control the decision of the case before us. This right originated in voluntary surrenders, made by several of the old States, of their waste and unappropriated lands, to the United States, under a resolution of the old Congress of the 6th of September, 1780, recommending such surrender and cession to aid in paying the public debt incurred by the War of the Revolution. The object of all the parties to these contracts of cession was to convert the land into money for the payment of the debt and to erect new States over the terriory thus ceded; and as soon as these purposes could be accomplished the power of the United States over these lands, as property, was to cease.

"Whenever the United States shall have fully executed these trusts the municipal sovereignty of the new States will be complete throughout their respective borders, and they and the original States will be upon an equal footing in all respects whatever. We therefore think the United States hold the public lands within the new States by force of the deeds of cession and the statutes connected with them, and not by any municipal sovereignty which it may be supposed they possess or have reserved by compact with the new States for that particular purpose."

It clearly appears from this decision that the title of the Government in such lands is not permanent, but ceded only for the purpose of disposing of them, and that the Government can not make its title permanent or deprive itself for any length of time of the power to comply with the obligation of its trust to dispose of them.

12. WILL THE BILL, IF ENACTED, BRING THE DESIRED RESULTS?

As stated in the beginning, the purpose of this proposed legislation, as stated by the majority of the committee, is to bring about a speedier development of our undeveloped water power. It may be said that this is a purpose not within the power or jurisdiction of the Federal Government. The whole purpose of the bill, as thus stated, is beyond the power of the Government. It has no undeveloped water power. It is only a landowner in the States and nothing else. The development, as well as the regulation and control of undeveloped water and water power, is a purely State matter. The States alone have power to deal with the subject. The Government may, in its generosity, offer its land to the State, as any other landowner might do, to aid the State to develop its natural resources. It can not constitutionally do anything more. The assumption of some conservationists that the National Government has anything to do, as a Government, with the development of the natural resources in a State is without the slightest foundation. As a landowner it may be interested in such development as a means of increasing the value of the land it holds in trust for the people, but nothing more. It may hinder the State in its efforts to develop its resources by withholding its lands, available for dam, reservoir, or power sites, or by placing burdensome terms and conditions of sale or lease of its lands, if it has power to lease them, as would make it impossible or impracticable to use them for such purposes. But any private landowner might do the same thing and with the same effect.

And we submit that this is just what Congress will do for the Government if it enacts this bill. The terms upon which the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to lease land for power purposes are so unreasonable and burdensome and so clearly in conflict with State rights and State laws as to prevent any prudent business man from investing any money in a power site in any State. He would be unable to determine whether, in constructing and managing his plant, he would be bound by the Federal or State law, or both where they are not in direct conflict. If he obeyed one, in many instances, as we have pointed out, he would violate the other. A compliance with the State law would in some cases forfeit his lease. On the other hand, if he followed the provisions of the lease, particularly as to the time of commencing and completion of his plant, he would, in California at least, forfeit his right to the water, the really valuable thing, and a license to use the water would have to be denied him for failure to comply with the State laws. This would be true in other States as well. We have used California and its laws only as an illustration of the conflicts that would arise between the Government and the States if this bill should pass. The same conflicts would arise in the other Western States.

The present law relating to the use of public lands for power and irrigation purposes is entirely inadequate because of its uncertainty. But this proposed legislation would be infinitely worse, because it is so certainly and fatally wrong. It would, if enacted, soon put an end to any development of water power. Witness after witness, practical and experienced men, appeared before the committee and pointed out that the law would be impractical and unrevokable and prevent investments in enterprises of this kind, and the reasons were clearly pointed out. On the other hand, we had information to the contrary from Government officials who sincerely believed the law would be beneficial, but they could only theorize about a very practical matter. They had no practical knowledge on the subject. There were others who appeared in support of the bill equally sincere, but without knowledge. And the friends of the bill made no effort to sustain its constitutionality or to defend it against the legal objections that we have been pointing out in this report.

We have given but little attention to the merely business objections made to the bill. To our minds the legal objections to it are so numerous and so conclusive that this is unnecessary. As to this phase of it, we refer Senators to the public hearings that were full and fair. The friends of the bill gave its opponents every opportunity to point out and support their objections to it. These hearings on so important a matter should receive the careful attention of every Senator who desires to be informed on the subject.

For the reasons we have pointed out, and for others that may be developed later on, we could not concur in the favorable report on the bill, and submit that it should not pass.

REED SMOOT.
JOHN D. WORKS.
C. D. CLARK.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair). Senators, this finishes the reading of the report.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum. If the debate is going to begin now, it seems to me we ought to have more Senators here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will please call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	James	Oliver	Swanson
Bryan	Johnson, S. Dak.	Pittman	Tillman
Chamberlain	Jones	Ransdell	Townsend
Chilton	Kenyon	Robinson	Vardaman
Clapp	Lewis	Shafroth	Wadsworth
Fall	McLean	Sheppard	Walsh
Gallinger	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.	Watson
Hardwick	Myers	Smoot	Williams
Hughes	Newlands	Sterling
Husting	Norris	Sutherland

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-two Senators having answered to their names, there is less than a quorum present. The Chair suggests the calling of the names of the absentees.

Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. LANE, Mr. COLT, Mr. FERNALD, Mr. SMITH of Michigan, Mr. THOMPSON, Mr. CUMMINS, and Mr. HOLLIS entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The Chair lays before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives further disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10384) to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States, and requesting a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. HARDWICK. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia, if he sees no objection to doing so, suggest to the Senate what the disagreeing votes are?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes. The trouble is this: The House fixed an impossible date—I think it was July 1, 1916—for the bill to go into effect. The Senate fixed a later date—May 1, 1917—and in conference a date later than that named by either House was agreed upon—July 1, 1917. A point of order was raised and sustained in the House of Representatives, and this makes necessary a further conference.

Mr. GALLINGER. The conferees will simply have to adjust the date on which the law is to go into effect?

Mr. HARDWICK. That is the only thing—the date on which it will go into effect. When the bill gets into conference we can have that adjusted, of course.

Mr. WALSH. I wish to inquire if the unfinished business will lose its character as such should the motion be put?

Mr. HARDWICK. Not at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Absolutely not. That would not be allowed. The Senate has heard the motion of the Senator from Georgia.

The motion was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, Mr. HARDWICK, and Mr. LODGE managers at the further conference on the part of the Senate.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes.

Mr. THOMAS addressed the Senate. After having spoken for some time,

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Montana if it is the intention to have an executive session to-night?

Mr. MYERS. I have no such intention. No one has said anything to me about an executive session.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think it would be well to have an executive session of a very few minutes, in order to have some messages laid down and some references made.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MYERS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, January 13, 1917, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 12, 1917.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord God, our Heavenly Father, encourage us in every thought and act looking to the betterment of life and all its conditions by Thy holy influence; and discourage every adverse thought and act, that we may not dissipate our energies in useless or harmful purposes. And help us, we beseech Thee, to bear with patience the weakness and infirmities of others as we desire Thee to bear with patience our weakness and infirmities; for what hurts one, hurts all; what helps one, helps all; so delicately hast Thou woven the fabric which binds us together into one family. Hence the admonition, "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ." Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an article containing information relating to the pecan industry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting an article containing information on the pecan industry. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 703) entitled "An act to provide for the promotion of vocational education; to provide for cooperation with the States in the promotion of such education in agriculture and the trades and industries; to provide for cooperation with the States in the preparation of teachers of vocational subjects; and to appropriate money and regulate its expenditure."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4429. An act to amend the postal laws;

S. 7538. An act authorizing the Western New York & Pennsylvania Railway Co. to reconstruct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Allegheny River in Glade and Kinzua Townships, Warren County, Pa.;

S. 7537. An act authorizing the Western New York & Pennsylvania Railway Co. to reconstruct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Allegheny River, in the town of Allegany, county of Cattaraugus, N. Y.; and

S. 7536. An act authorizing the Western New York & Pennsylvania Railway Co. to reconstruct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Allegheny River, in the borough of Warren and township of Pleasant, Warren County, Pa.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6864) providing for the continuance of the Osage Indian School, Oklahoma, for a period of 10 years from January 1, 1917.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ADAIR rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Indiana rise?

Mr. ADAIR. This is pension day, Mr. Speaker, and I rise to ask unanimous consent that a bill that the Committee on Invalid Pensions has on the calendar be considered at 5 o'clock this evening.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the pension bill indicated by him be considered at 5 o'clock this evening. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I suppose that is based on the improbable contingency that the immigration conference report be not disposed of by that time?

Mr. ADAIR. Well, Mr. Speaker, if that should be the condition at that time, I should like to couple with this request the request that this bill then be considered at 5 o'clock Saturday evening, if we fail to reach it to-day.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to considering it to-day, so far as I am concerned, if the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] does not object.

Mr. ADAIR. It will not take over 15 minutes to dispose of it if the committee is willing to consider it.

The SPEAKER. The situation is this: The Committee on Rules want to bring up that investigation question. That will probably take two hours and a half or three hours. Then, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] is very anxious to dispose of the conference report on the immigration bill. Why not make it to-morrow evening?

Mr. ADAIR. Well, then, I will ask unanimous consent that to-morrow, at 5 o'clock, we consider this bill, H. R. 19937. No; it is suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] that I make it 4 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman suggests 4 o'clock to-morrow afternoon.

Mr. ADAIR. No; Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw that. I make it 5 o'clock.

Mr. MOON. The appropriation bill ought to be on at that time. This is the day belonging to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and they ought to have to-day if they desire it. I do not believe the Committee on Rules or anybody else ought to run in on them if they have only a short bill.

Mr. MANN. Why not make it right after the disposition of the conference report on the immigration bill?

Mr. MOON. I think the Post Office Committee should have the right, then.

Mr. MANN. I suggest, then, that the gentleman from Indiana go ahead now.

Mr. MOON. I have no objection to their using to-day for any purpose at all, because we do not expect to get in.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's request?

Mr. MANN. That it should be considered following the immigration conference report.

Mr. ADAIR. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that following the disposal of the immigration bill we consider the pension bill, H. R. 19937.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to consider the pension bill named by him, following immediately after the conclusion of the conference report on the immigration bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INVESTIGATION UNDER HOUSE RESOLUTION 429.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report (No. 1281) from the Committee on Rules and ask that it be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, having considered House resolution 429, report the same with the recommendation that it do lie upon the table. The committee states that no evidence was adduced sustaining the charges in the resolution.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, before making a formal motion to lay that on the table, I would like to ask the gentlemen on the other side about the debate on this report. How much time would be satisfactory to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, the gentleman from Texas will recall that we agreed upon two hours in the committee.

Mr. HENRY. That is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, I have had demands for much more time than that. If the gentleman from Texas can get the consent of the other members of the committee and of the House to extend the time, I should like to have 1 hour and 15 minutes.

Mr. HENRY. I would suggest to the gentleman that that would somewhat embarrass me, because arrangements have been made to let us get in early this morning, and another matter is coming up right soon; and, believing that would be satisfactory, it would embarrass me.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Can you make it an hour and 10 minutes on a side?

Mr. HENRY. I think so.

The SPEAKER. What is the request?

Mr. HENRY. I make the request, then, Mr. Speaker, for unanimous consent that the debate on this report be limited to 2 hours and 20 minutes, 1 hour and 10 minutes to be controlled by myself and 1 hour and 10 minutes by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], with the understanding, then, that at that time I shall move to table the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the time of this debate shall be limited to 2 hours and 20 minutes, one half to be controlled by himself and the other half to be controlled by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], and at the end of that time he will move to lay the House resolution on the table. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINGO rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Arkansas rise?

Mr. WINGO. This is an important matter. We ought to have full membership. I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Pending the count,

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas withdraws the point of no quorum. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] is recognized for 1 hour and 10 minutes.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, just a moment by way of explanation, in order that the House may understand the exact issue that we are considering to-day.

This is a report on resolution 429, introduced by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] on January 3 and referred to the Committee on Rules with directions to report within 10 days. Prior to that time, on December 22, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] had introduced another resolution, No. 420, which is now pending before the Committee on Rules and has not been disposed of or taken up for consideration.

This resolution that we are considering to-day has in it language which switches the original purpose of resolution 420, which was to investigate an alleged leak, and it proposes to investigate the conduct of Members of Congress in regard to transactions on the stock exchange.

The Committee on Rules sat for six days considering this privileged resolution, and during the entire six days not one particle of evidence was adduced to sustain the resolution or any part of it. No Democrat on that committee will contend that there was any evidence. No Republican will assert here to-day that there was any evidence whatever to sustain the charge made in this resolution. The House is now disposing of that proposition. It is not to consider now the allegations made in resolution 420. That resolution, as I said, is now in the hands of the Committee on Rules, and the Committee on Rules has appointed a subcommittee to consider the conduct of a contumacious witness, Thomas W. Lawson, who refused to answer certain questions that were put to him by the Committee on Rules.

Mr. BENNET. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY. I would rather not be interrupted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. HENRY. Those matters may be considered by the committee and by this House in the future, but here is a libel which has been published against the membership of this House, and not a scintilla of evidence has been placed before the Committee on Rules to sustain it. I submit the report to the House and say that every Democrat and every Republican should sustain that report, because we have been unable to find anything that would warrant this libel against the honorable membership of this House.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD].

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I have no apology to make to anyone for my position in the matter of this investigation. When I introduced the first resolution on December 22 calling for an investigation, I was impelled to do so because everywhere throughout this Chamber there were ugly rumors being passed from mouth to mouth insinuating that men in high places in governmental affairs had used knowledge which they had obtained in advance of what the President's peace note contained for the purpose of enriching themselves financially through stock-market manipulations. Not only were these rumors rife in this House, but the metropolitan newspapers of the country were carrying in their Associated Press dispatches news items boldly charging that the contents of the President's note had leaked out in advance of its being given to the general public, and that certain parties who had been favored with this knowledge, and solely because of it, had made fortunes on the stock market that mounted well into the millions, and that thousands upon thousands of small investors had lost their savings of a lifetime in consequence.

Was not this of sufficient importance to invite and warrant the attention of this House? If these rumors, so openly uttered, and these newspaper charges, so boldly made, were true, would this House be justified in sitting supinely by and permitting them to go unnoticed? Has the time come when such accusations of moral turpitude, made against those who are the very guardians of our country's welfare, are inconsequential? If so, then I ask you if the decadence of our governmental fabric has not already commenced?

It has been said, and no doubt it will often be repeated, that I was prompted by purely partisan motives in introducing this resolution, and that I was endeavoring thereby to embarrass the President in his endeavor to bring about peace among the warring nations of the earth. To deny the first of these propositions would be only to invite the sneers of my critics, but the second proposition I can deny and do deny with all the force of my being, for I am now, and have been ever since I became a Member of this House, in favor of any and every proper effort made and to be made by this Government that has for its purpose the bringing to a close this awful conflict in Europe, and I have so expressed myself a number of times, both privately and publicly. It matters but little what may be said about me and my connection with this resolution, but, nevertheless, the fact remains that there is a general belief throughout the country that there is something wrong somewhere, and that that wrong and those who are responsible for it, if anybody is responsible for it, should be ascertained and made public.

That there was a leak of information concerning the President's peace note some time before it was given by the State Department to the public everyone who has followed the course of events knows, and for such a person to deny that there was a leak of this information would be for him to make himself ridiculous. That there was a leak is a fact, which I think is now believed by every Member of this House. As to whether it was caused purposely, and with a sordid design, there may be an honest difference of opinion among Members of this House, and no doubt there is the same difference of opinion prevailing throughout the country; but whether this leak was caused purposely, to aid a select few to reap a fortune, or whether it was entirely innocent, will never be known without the fullest investigation. Without such investigation, you may be assured, the people will form their own conclusions from what they have already read in the public press.

Is not the good name of a public officer worth anything? Is the good opinion of the people concerning our public officials worth seeking? It occurs to me that they are vital to the very existence of our Government.

It has already been charged in the public hearings on these resolutions that a Cabinet officer, a Member of Congress, and another person "higher up" profited financially by reason of this leak. It has also been promised by the man making these charges that if a committee is appointed by this House, with full power and authority to make an investigation, he will give the names of those whom he has thus charged and give that committee the evidence which will establish these charges.

We can not absolve ourselves from our responsibility in the premises by saying that we have no faith in this man or in the charges he has made, and that because of our disbelief we will refuse to appoint this committee. I warn you now that if we take such a course it will have this effect: It will confirm into belief a feeling now existing in the mind of the public that we do not dare to make this investigation for fear it will involve not only some who are connected with the administrative branch of the Government, but that it will involve Members of this Congress as well. Can we as Members of this House, can the Nation, afford to have such an opinion existing among the people of our country?

There is another reason why this investigation should be had. As I have heretofore stated, a citizen of this country has charged that a member of the Cabinet, a Member of this Congress, and possibly another man "higher up" profited on the stock market by reason of advance information received concerning the President's peace note. Now, there are 10 members of the President's Cabinet; there are 435 Members of this House and 96 Members of the Senate. The individual member of the Cabinet or the individual Member of this Congress, against whom these charges have been lodged, has not been specifically named. If this investigation is not had, the public will be free to say whomsoever it pleases is the guilty man in the Cabinet and in the Congress.

It is, therefore, due to each member of the Cabinet and to each Member of the Congress that this step should be taken in order that his reputation may not be for a single moment tainted even with suspicion. It is due to the President of the United States that this investigation should be made, and above all it is due to this Government.

The country from ocean to ocean is interested in the outcome of this proceeding. The eyes of the people are on this Congress this day, watching to see whether or not we will institute the machinery whereby the fullest possible investigation shall be given to this affair or whether we will whitewash it.

The editorials in the newspapers of this country are said to be a fair index of the sentiment of the people living in the communities where these papers are published. If this be true, there can be no mistake in what the sentiment of the people is with reference to the necessity for the fullest possible investigation of this whole affair.

In order that you may know what the sentiment of the country is, as reflected by these editorial indexes, I will make a few of them a part of my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The following is from the Detroit (Mich.) Free Press:

THE SCANDAL IN WASHINGTON.

Washington is sitting in the shadow of a governmental scandal affecting the honor of the whole national administration. There is accusation of a leakage previous to authorized announcement that Mr. Wilson had dispatched a note to the European powers, and a charge that this leakage enabled certain favored persons to make big fortunes in Wall Street by reason of their foreknowledge of an event certain to depress the stock market. Thus far the report directly affects two Senators and two Cabinet members, one of whom is said to have profited largely in a financial way.

There is no doubt about the existence of the leak; there is no doubt about the manipulation in Wall street; there is little doubt that the first tip was passed out by persons closely in touch with the White House; and there seems to have been gross breach of confidence somewhere by men Mr. Wilson trusted.

The State Department has suggested that newspaper men might be responsible; it has asserted that a number of them received in advance information about the President's note before it was published. Now it is averred that the first intimation in Wall Street of what was going to happen in Washington was passed along as early as Monday, before the President had completed the draft of his writing. Unquestionably high Government officials knew of the President's intention at this time. But on Monday when Mr. Wilson received the Washington correspondents in general audience for the first time since the Bryan régime, he gave a little talk on the subject of peace and told his auditors that while peace was most devoutly to be desired it was not the purpose to urge upon the belligerents irritating importunities to lay down their arms. Clearly Mr. Wilson gave the newspaper men no information on Monday.

The President's communication was given to the cables on Tuesday. Did the leak spring in the cable offices? Insiders on Wall Street seem to have known about the note long before the cable companies received it.

While every possible angle of the situation should be taken into consideration, at present only one hypothesis seems to lead anywhere. It is the hypothesis which connects guilt for the breach of confidence with those in public office who have profited financially.

The whole affair suggests the presence of a horrifying lack of moral sense somewhere in official Washington; it indicates a total inability to understand the responsibilities of high national stewardship, sheer ethical depravity among some of those with responsible parts in directing the destinies of the Nation.

A resolution calling for an investigation has already been introduced in the lower House of Congress. Nothing less than this could be done. Emphatically there ought to be an investigation, a searching of the whole administration to find out where the guilt lies for the disgrace brought on the American Government and to clear up the taint on its honor. But the investigation should be real, not one of those whitewash affairs which have been the common, if not the invariable, rule in Washington these last four years. The probe should be instituted for the purpose of cleaning up, not for the purpose of amelioration or to cloak scandal.

We confess to small hope that there will be any real inquiry. Something may be done, but we fear it will be like all the other probes in late years, a futile, anemic thing, that will eventually die from inanition.

And this from the Fort Wayne (Ind.) News:

A WHITE HOUSE LEAK.

President Wilson evidently has a leak pretty close to the desk on which he composes his nice little notes. This has been broadly intimated several times in the past, but the evidence to this effect provided on Wednesday apparently justifies such a declaration in all particulars. Consider the facts for a moment.

Wednesday afternoon the New York stock market, which had been reviving ever since the break caused by the German peace proposals, suddenly went all to pieces. Stocks tumbled and the bears raided the market in a fearsome fashion. In the stock report published in the News, and which comes over a stock broker's private wire, was carried this interesting bit of information concerning the slump:

"The Dow Jones financial ticker, in offering an explanation of the break, said the Street had received confidential reports that the administration will address to the belligerents 'some suggestions or proposals in regard to peace' in the near future."

What the public would like to know is how and from what source the Street received this confidential information. None of the press associations carried it, and their reports as published in the afternoon papers indicated an opposite condition of affairs, expressly stating that the United States would keep hands off. The Washington correspondents were in ignorance of what was transpiring in the President's private office, yet, strangely enough, a certain coterie of gamblers on the New York Stock Exchange knew all about it and proceeded to clean up handsomely. The real news of Wednesday afternoon concerning the peace situation was not incorporated in the dispatches of the press associations, but was circulated over the country via the wires of the stock brokers.

Who was the man who gave this advance information to stock gamblers of New York? That he was close to President Wilson we know from the fact that the news was guarded so sedulously that even the keenest of the Washington correspondents had no hint of it, and that he must have profited largely by the tip we can readily surmise. It would seem that President Wilson owes it to himself to investigate the matter of this leak and eliminate the possibility of some future incident that might cruelly embarrass him. There is a sinister suggestion even in the story of Wednesday.

And listen to this from the New York Evening Globe:

THE WALL STREET SCANDAL.

For some days Wall Street has been filled with rumors about persons with supposedly close Washington connections making huge "killings" in the stock market by reason of advance information concerning developments in the international situation. The outcome is the resolution introduced yesterday in the House by Representative WOOD of Indiana, calling for an investigation by a committee of five members to ascertain specifically whether anyone high in the administration, or any relative of any such official, profited financially, directly or indirectly, by the fluctuations in the stock market on Thursday growing out of Secretary Lansing's contradictory interpretations of the President's peace note.

It seems incredible that any high official in Washington should be so implicated. When Wall Street loses its head it is liable to talk foolishly. But the present scandal has assumed such proportions as to compel attention. The truth should be got at, and a committee such as proposed should be clothed with ample power to sift the matter to the bottom. If there is a ring of stock gamblers with underground wires into the inner offices of official Washington, the public is entitled to know it. If the rumors are baseless, no one should be more concerned than the administration in having that fact made known.

And this from the Syracuse (N. Y.) Herald:

WAS THERE A LEAK IN WASHINGTON?

The resolution introduced in the House of Representatives by Mr. WOOD of Indiana, calling for an investigation of the charge that advance knowledge of the President's late peace message to the European powers was used for speculative purposes in Wall Street, will in all probability be favorably acted upon. It is clearly a case for careful inquiry. The rumor that a member of the Cabinet was among those who profited by the secret may be absolutely unfounded, and, at any rate, the country will be slow to credit it. But the very gravity of the suspicion this aroused emphasizes the necessity for a congressional investigation.

All that is known in this connection is that some powerful stock speculators were able to anticipate the falling market in a way that suggested that they were the beneficiaries of an official "leak" in Washington. It is possible, of course, that if such was the case the leak was an accidental one or the result of a breach of confidence that was devoid of mercenary intent. But the country ought to know the truth. Mysterious advance tips in Wall Street on impending developments likely to affect the stock market are no novelty. But if these take the form of a betrayal of Government secrets, the public has the right to know the why and wherefore.

And this from the New York Times:

MORE CARE NEEDED.

The administration should not treat as a mere matter of passing interest the current belief in Wall Street that some of the individuals doing business there had advance information of the fact that the President intended to send a note to foreign powers. The administration's intentions, when they are guarded as this one was from the general public, should be guarded from untrustworthy individuals. There should be special precautions against such a leak. Carelessness in a matter involving fortune or disaster to many private fortunes is not to be excused.

The foundation for the big "drive" on stocks on Thursday was laid on Wednesday, and the belief exists in Wall Street that the persons who made the preliminary attacks then and on Thursday morning had availed themselves of information which should have been withheld from them, and would have been if the ordinary amount of care had been exercised.

On the heels of this banging at the stocks, and while gossip was already busy with the story of a leak, Secretary Lansing indulged in his unfortunate habit of soliloquizing in public and completed the demoralization of the stock market. He could not have chosen a more unlucky time for the display of his idiosyncrasy. Nothing except the painful teaching of experience is a cure for this, and he probably regrets what occurred as much as anybody; but for the other matter, the loose guarding of official information, there is a different remedy, which the administration should seek and apply.

And this from the Washington Times:

IT'LL BE INVESTIGATED!

The House has directed Chairman HENRY and his Committee on Rules to report in 10 days on a resolution for investigation of the "leak" charges. It is a bit uncertain whether Mr. Lawson's accusations, or the seeming anxiety of some influences to avoid the investigation, have done most to fix in the public mind the conviction that there must be some fire back of all the smoke.

One thing is very certain, however. The private conferences between Chairman HENRY and the Boston financier, resulting in Mr. HENRY'S decision that there was no need to call his committee together, have not made a pleasant impression. The other members of the Rules Committee could have spared the time, without any great sacrifice of public interest, to attend these conferences. If they had done so, the whole proceeding would have looked nicer. The refusal of the chairman to take the rest of his committee into his confidence has resulted in a condition that brings the whole affair before the House and takes up many hours of the precious time of that body.

Back in the olden days, before it was supposed that the House had been reformed away from the czarship of committee chairmen, it was common enough for the head of a great committee to regard himself as the custodian of his committee's business. He was a sort of ambassador of the House organization to consider its relations with the outside world. That relationship is supposed to have ended; and the action of the House in ordering the Henry committee to perform is a hint that the House does not intend to permit a return to the old system of star-chamber considerations.

As various Members have declared, the things that happened in the stock-dealing world made it very clear that there was a "leak" somewhere. Mr. BENNET, of New York, caused a sensation, we are assured, when he named a name in connection with these charges; yet he merely mentioned a name in a public place that has been in many minds and had been associated with various stories concerning the market movements. It is rather more sensational that the mention of any name, the statement of any specific ground for charges, should have been suppressed so long.

Denunciation of Mr. Lawson and the application of epithets to him does not brush aside the facts which are apparent enough. Somebody knew enough to justify tremendous plunging in the market and permit huge profits to be won. The mere fact that there has been such insistent objection to investigation has left a bad taste.

And the following from the Boston (Mass.) Traveler:

INVESTIGATE.

Thomas W. Lawson in his characteristic manner has dared Congressman WOOD and Congress itself to investigate the leak between the White House and Wall Street. He has done so in a manner that makes it impossible for Congress to neglect the challenge.

It is not necessary to accept Mr. Lawson's screaming statements at their face value. Few people do. But it is necessary to discover just what particular gang of gamblers was able to obtain advance information at the White House and turn it to their own advantage. Such an investigation might prevent some other gang of gamblers from operating successfully by the same method on some future occasion.

It is not a partisan question. It is a question of patriotism. It affects, indirectly, the President himself. The President can procure or prevent an investigation. If he prevents one it will be, presumably, because prevention means protection to somebody who, in the President's opinion, must be protected at any cost.

And this from the Indianapolis (Ind.) News:

THE STATE DEPARTMENT LEAK.

After a conference yesterday with Thomas W. Lawson, Representative HENRY, chairman of the House Rules Committee, said that Mr. Lawson had given no facts in regard to the supposed "rigging" of the stock market by those who had advance information of the President's recent note. Lawson, according to Mr. HENRY, could not give the names of those thought to be responsible for "the so-called leak between the State Department and Wall Street," nor could he give "the names of those charged by him with cleaning up $60,000,000 in connection with the leak."

What Lawson apparently wanted was "an investigation of the entire stock exchange situation." The American people will, we think, be more interested in the admission by Senator STONE, made in a speech delivered yesterday, that "confidential communications with foreign Governments to the State Department have by some means found their way into the hands of men not authorized to receive them." These betrayals of confidence did not, the Missouri Senator said, concern stock-market speculation, but they "did concern the honor of the Nation."

Here is a reason that almost seems to compel an investigation. If, as Senator STONE said "confidential communications concerning the honor of the Nation" have "fallen into improper hands," and if this misconduct is to be traced to departmental employees, surely something should be done to set matters right. It is not necessary to act on Lawson's tip, since we have STONE'S statement that "things have taken place in the departments which ought not to be possible," and that the honor of the Nation is involved. Eliminating Lawson's stories altogether, there is the strongest sort of evidence tending to prove the guilt of some one—the evidence offered by Senator STONE in his speech in the Senate.

As to Lawson, it is to be said that, though he is undoubtedly a sensationalist and an egotist, he does sometimes get things right. So there may be some substance to his charges. If information got out—and this is admitted by Senator STONE—it would be strange if some men in Wall Street did not get hold of it.

This from the New York World:

A CALL FOR MR. LAWSON.

Thomas W. Lawson's theory that a majority of both Houses of Congress profited by the alleged leak to Wall Street respecting the President's peace note to Germany and Secretary Lansing's explanation of it is no doubt an exaggeration. Leaks that are public property are not leaks at all.

Nevertheless, the Boston operator, in his usual picturesque language, throws down a challenge which Congress can not ignore. Besides making the positive assertion that he knows a great deal about the affair, he expresses a willingness to testify. His insinuation that nobody at the Capital cares to pursue the matter should make a searching public inquiry the more certain.

In probing such accusations as have been made in New York and Washington in this case, it is always best to stick to probabilities. If there was a leak, and, as Mr. LAWSON says, those who profited by it made $60,000,000 in two days, it is certain that not many people had the information.

It will do no good to indulge in indiscriminate aspersions upon the character of public men. The World is old-fashioned enough to believe that the preponderance of honesty among them is very great. Holding firmly to that opinion, it is confident that this scandal must be met boldly and intelligently, and since Mr. Lawson is the most vehement among its circulators, that he should be heard first, openly and fully.

This from the Syracuse (N. Y.) Post:

WHO LEAKED?

A Republican Representative wants Congress to inquire how it happened that Wall Street speculators, who have been upon intimate relations with members of the administration, had advance information about the President's peace message; and whether the prompt use made of that information was of profit only to themselves.

The inquiry involves a serious reflection upon some one in the President's official household. If there were no basis for the suspicion, the resolution of Representative WOOD would be studied insult. But the startling fact is that Wall Street operators who have been active in Democratic politics did know that the message was coming. The fact is that they could not have known excepting through one of a few men prominent in public life. The reasonable conclusion is that he who told did not do so without expectation of a share in the plunder.

The Democrats in Congress can not afford to pigeonhole the resolution of inquiry. The administration can not afford to rest under the suspicion that some one who is sufficiently important to be consulted upon its international policy is using his information to play the market. Upon the face of the situation there has been a scandalous union of official information and private profit, and the administration should, in jealous regard for its own reputation, demand a searching inquiry.

And this from the New York City Telegraph:

CONGRESS MUST NOW INVESTIGATE THE LAWSON CHARGES OF A LEAK.

It is proper to thank Thomas W. Lawson, of Boston, for one thing. Whether his charges have foundation in fact or not, he has created a situation from which neither he nor the Congress of the United States can escape without a full, complete, and restrained investigation of the recent Wall Street slump following President Wilson's peace letter. Mr. Lawson asserts that insiders, those who knew in advance that such a letter was to be sent, took $60,000,000 away from a gullible public which has no wires reaching into official departments. Representative WOOD of Indiana has introduced a resolution calling for an investigation, and Mr. Lawson will be a witness before a committee of Congress appointed to take testimony.

Mr. Lawson seems confident that he can make good. He has sent a telegram to Mr. WOOD and to Mr. HENRY, in which he denies that he has tried to evade service, and in which he further asserts that other "leaks" are impending.

The Morning Telegraph in the interest of good sportsmanship insists that the game should be played fair—that all the cards should be spread out on the table, that there should be no hocus-pocus or cold-decking in the interest of an official coterie and their friends. If any group at Washington or elsewhere took a profit of $60,000,000, some other group lost that sum, not because of bad judgment but because it was up against a "sure thing."

By all means let there be an investigation, and, in the language of Gen. U. S. Grant, "Let no guilty man escape."

And the following from the Providence (R. I.) News:

LET THE PUBLIC HAVE THE FACTS.

Congressman HENRY has no Wall Street affiliations, so his demand of the inimitable Thomas W. Lawson to make good his claim that Washington parties profited to the extent of millions by reason of a "leak" in regard to the President's peace note must be met. Congressman WOOD, a Republican, did a very proper thing in introducing a resolution to investigate certain rumors concerning this matter. His resolution is before the Committee on Rules of the House of Representatives, and Congressman HENRY is at the head of that committee which is to decide whether there should be an investigation or not. There are not a few people who believe that the real trouble is not over any leak, but because President Wilson did not first tell some men what he was going to do before he sent his note to the belligerents. Whatever the truth may be it is to be hoped that Mr. WOOD'S resolution will be indorsed by the committee on rules and that Mr. Lawson will go to Washington and tell all he knows. Because Mr. Lawson may be deemed by some folks considerable of a blusterer should not prevent his giving the public any facts that he may have. He does not dislike Wall Street a bit more than does Congressman HENRY, so there should be a showdown.

And this from the Albany (N. Y.) Argus:

Thomas W. Lawson was always apt to talk big with his mouth whenever desirable to impress innocents with his power and skill in the stock market. Whether his boasts that he had tips from Washington for advance "rigging" of the market for the smash following the President's peace note remains for the evidence to show, under the resolution of Representative WOOD of Indiana, for an investigation of the matter. Though WOOD is a Republican, any Democrat will put himself under reasonable suspicion who opposes the investigation. The indications are that there was a "rigging," that Lawson was on hand to partake of the slaughter, and that there must have been a "leak" somewhere. WOOD tells, among many other cases of the kind, how stock brokers in his home town of La Fayette had advices from New York of the forthcoming note several hours before it appeared. The men in Washington that could possibly have had the information must be a small number, and it ought not to be difficult for a searching investigation to locate the guilt; for without any undue sympathy for the victims who were sure to be shorn before long anyway, if speculative traffic in Government information can go unpunished in one case it will be an incitement to multiplication of it, even down into legislation, as in the Sugar Trust scandal 22 years ago.

These are but a few of the hundreds of editorials that have been written upon this subject, but they certainly are sufficient and should be convincing of the absolute necessity for a thorough investigation. Nothing less will satisfy the public. Nothing less should satisfy each individual Member of this House.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, since the hour of meeting has been changed from 12 to 11 o'clock, a great many Members are not apprised of that fact, and in order that we may have a full attendance on this occasion I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and thirty Members present, a quorum.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, this is the most extraordinary exhibition of little politics that the Republican minority has attempted since I became a Member of this House. I had hoped that after the verdict of the American people had been rendered in November the kind of campaign that was conducted by the Republican Party not only of misrepresenting official acts of the administration but at times attacking personal character, would at least sleep for a time; but we find that it is begun again at this early day.

The first Wood resolution, No. 420, was conceived, has been nurtured, and is now attempted to be sustained in a spirit of rank partisanship. Every allegation contained in it, either by insinuation, innuendo, or otherwise, has been clearly and conclusively shown to be without foundation. There is no man upon the minority of the Rules Committee or on that side of the aisle who will rise now in his place on this floor and say he is in favor of reporting it favorably, because those who are familiar with the hearing know the allegations therein contained are inexcusably and unjustifiably made. What is the situation?

Mr. BENNET. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. No; not for the present.

Mr. BENNET. I rise for the purpose that the gentleman said I would not rise for.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I ask the gentleman now if anything transpired in the committee which should induce us to report favorably resolution 420, the resolution that was made privileged and referred?

Mr. BENNET. Does the gentleman ask me?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Yes; I ask you.

Mr. BENNET. Yes; I do. The evidence yesterday morning was that before Mr. Lansing had his conference with the newspaper men at all the information was in Wall Street that the President was going to send out a peace note; and I also call the gentleman's attention to the fact that when that statement came out the majority moved to conclude the hearing without trying to find out where that came from. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. The gentleman has not answered my question at all. I said there was not a Member of the minority who would vote to report out the original resolution, 420, and there is not. You dare not say you will. There was in the committee a substitute motion, changing the language of the original motion in many respects, and we were asked to vote for that. You demonstrated by your action that you had abandoned the original resolution. You did not even suggest favorable action on it. You have abandoned the resolution that was referred to the committee because of its privileged character—the one now before the House. You do not dare to say, after hearing the testimony, that it should be passed; but in its stead you offer a different resolution.

Now, what is the situation? There came many witnesses before the committee. We sat there for a week, trying in every way to obtain the presence of witnesses from all over the country, trying to ascertain if there was a leak, and who, if anyone, was responsible for it and profited by it. There was the greatest liberality allowed in the procuring and questioning of witnesses. Questions that were most irrelevant and only of a political character were permitted to be asked witnesses without objection. Whenever a rumor came to us, we employed the strong arm of the Sergeant at Arms of this House to bring the witnesses before the committee, that the facts might be ascertained and the truth known. Our only desire has been to conduct the investigations in such a way that truth might triumph and justice prevail. Mr. WOOD, the author of the resolutions, came before us and stated that he had a letter in his possession that would show that Mr. Tumulty and Mr. Baruch held a conference in the Biltmore Hotel in New York City shortly before this note was published, and that Mr. Baruch played the market on knowledge obtained presumably from that conference and profited to a great extent. He practically charged the same thing against Mr. Bolling, the President's brother-in-law. He said he believed evidence could be produced of similar import against Mr. Kuhn, of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. But when we brought these men before the committee and they were sworn, we found that Mr. Tumulty had not been in New York, that he had had no conference with Mr. Baruch, that he knew nothing about the note that was being sent by the President until the newspapers had it. In other words, Mr. Speaker, the whole thing could be spelled with three little letters. We had Mr. Baruch before us. He said he had no such conference, and instead of selling stocks, as was charged by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] on the floor of the House, in support of that privileged resolution, on the 20th of December, and insinuated by Mr. WOOD, he was buying stock on that date, and that he had no information concerning this leak whatever.

Mr. Bolling stated under oath that he knew nothing about the leak, had no information of the note, and did not play the stock market at all. Every witness that was brought into the matter by the author of the resolution conclusively refuted the charges and showed them to be without foundation in fact. And upon what did the author of the resolution base it? Mr. WOOD swore before this committee that he based these charges on a letter signed by "A. Curtis," the letter being shown to be without a professional mark or letterhead, without any postmark on it, without any address, and without ascertaining anything about A. Curtis, and mark you, gentlemen, this letter came to him four or five days after he introduced the resolution charging a leak. No one knows who Curtis is, and yet on such information men high in official life are thus assailed and held to suspicion in the eyes of the world. Are you to believe any further statements by men upon such measly testimony as he produced?

Not satisfied with that, he introduced another resolution of a privileged character on words uttered by this irresponsible, frenzied four-flusher, Lawson, and makes it privileged, charging this Capitol with wallowing for 40 years in graft and corruption; charging men who have occupied places during the last 40 years in this House, and in the Senate, and in the White House, and on the Supreme Court bench with corruption, and you are aiding and abetting it when you do not follow the suggestion offered by the majority of the Rules Committee.

Now, what about Lawson? Here he sits in Boston and says, "I defy you to hold an investigation; I will prove that the Capitol has wallowed in corruption and graft for 40 years." He tried to work that bluff, and we said, "All right; we will hold an investigation." We did. We said, "Come to us and we will make you put up or shut up." Ah, the Republican members of the Rules Committee tried in every imaginable way to extract answers from him, but time after time he said in substance, "I have no first-hand knowledge about this matter. I know there was a leak, but what I want is an investigation of the stock exchanges of the country." For two days we pressed him with questions without avail. You men are being duped by him, while he sits in his hotel in this city and pays for advertisements in the papers trying to bluff Congress. I doubt if there is a member of the Rules Committee, either on the majority or minority side, after seeing him perform and hearing his testimony, who would believe him under oath, but you think you can play little, mean, nasty politics in this matter, and reap some partisan advantage from it. There is no one who believes this resolution referred to the Rules Committee ought to be favorably reported. Republicans would not vote for it, and I say to gentlemen on this side of the aisle, as one member who sat and listened to it, who was open to conviction, who desired to get facts, and who wanted the truth to be known, that there was not a scintilla of evidence before that committee to show that anybody connected with the Government had knowledge of a leak or played the stock market and profited by it. I do not believe there was a leak, but there were a thousand ways it could have gotten out through the newspapers and other sources.

Mr. Tumulty, the Secretary to the President, a man whose reputation needs no defense at my hands, who never before has been assailed in such an unwarranted manner, has proved his innocence in this matter. And Mr. WOOD, the author of the resolution, stated before the committee that if these charges, being so infamous, are not proven, we ought to clear the names of the men mentioned in the "A. Curtis" letter. I submit to Mr. WOOD now, in view of the testimony reported in the hearings, that apologies are due to Mr. Baruch, to Mr. Tumulty, to Mr. Lansing, to Mr. Kahn, and to Mr. Bolling, who were brought into the matter through this virtually anonymous letter. [Applause.]

Gentlemen on this side of the House are you going to allow them to play politics in this matter? We have tried to get evidence. For six days we have tried to extract it from the witnesses. Mr. CAMPBELL, a Republican member of the committee, asked questions, stated to Mr. Lawson that the committee had the authority to investigate the matter, and tried to get the questions answered at that hearing. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHIPERFIELD], of the minority, made motions to bring Mr. Lawson up in the House for contempt because he would not answer the questions. Why did you do it, if you did not think we had jurisdiction then to deal with this witness? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 12 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has sought to make his side of the House believe that the action of the minority members of the Committee on Rules and that the action that the minority will take upon this resolution to-day is purely for political purposes. Mr. Speaker, I want to read just a paragraph from an editorial in yesterday's New York World, the leading paper of this Democratic administration to-day. What do they say about this matter? They say:

> When the committee had finished with the responsible witnesses it had nothing to report to the House except that it had made itself ridiculous and permitted Thomas W. Lawson to turn a grave public proceeding into a cheap and degrading farce. If the committee had conspired with the Boston speculator to excite public contempt for Congress it could not have achieved a greater measure of success.

Unless Congress exerts its authority and dignity in the matter of this witness, it will deserve all the public derision that has been heaped upon it.

That is not the view of a Republican; that is the view of the leading Democratic newspaper of the United States. I say to you on that side that when you vote with the majority members of the Committee on Rules to-day on this resolution your vote says to Thomas W. Lawson, "Go home to Boston, you are not in contempt of the House." That is exactly the situation, and nothing more, because when that committee yesterday morning adopted a motion to report this resolution to the House, the only resolution that Lawson was called before the committee on and upon which he testified, when they made and carried that motion they said, and the chairman of the committee has repeated it this morning, that these questions that we attempted to get Lawson to answer in which he defied the committee were immaterial questions and had nothing to do with the case. It could not be anything else, because if they were material it was the duty of the committee to retain jurisdiction of this resolution, to proceed in the matter and either get answers to them or have Lawson committed for contempt. [Applause.]

Now, the gentleman from Mississippi has discussed many things which did not appear in the hearing. He has not discussed the things which did appear. I want to call attention to the matter in issue, so far as Mr. Lawson is concerned. He stated that a Member of Congress had told him certain things, and using his language:

I heard a Cabinet officer's name mentioned by a Member of Congress in connection with this leak, and mentioned in an earnest, serious manner, to show me that the whole subject was a serious affair, was a serious subject and must be treated seriously, and I agreed with him.

Further on he said:

He was mentioned in such a way that was fully as close to the leak as if he had speculated himself. He was mentioned in connection with the whole leak, and the speculation in the leak—not idly mentioned, but mentioned in a very serious way, and because it was so serious and I considered it so serious, I refused to go further with it unless it was necessary.

Mr. Lawson also testified:

I corroborated that. I had more than that. I had a reputable banker, a friend of the other banker, and a friend of mine, and I said, "What do you know about it?" And he said, "I know the banker stated to me that he not only had this account and others, but had such absolute control of a Cabinet member that he could bring him from Washington to New York or on the telephone at any hour of the day or night," and offered then and there to call him up at half past 1 in the morning to answer these questions.

Now, the committee had repeatedly sought to get Mr. Lawson to give the name of this Congressman. He refused. Members tried to get him to give these other names. He refused, and he defied the committee. Will any member of that committee say that this testimony was not material testimony? Suppose these charges are true—should they be investigated and proceeded further with or not? Mr. Speaker, up to yesterday morning, I want to very frankly say, it was my judgment that there was nothing in Mr. Lawson's statement with reference to a Member of Congress; that if that Member had been named and was called upon on the stand, he would have cleared up this matter by a denial; but, Mr. Speaker, I have reluctantly been compelled to come to the conclusion from the action of this committee in taking the course that it did, which will absolve Mr. Lawson at any time in the future without a new investigation by this House, from giving the name of this Member of Congress—I am compelled to conclude that there was a Member of Congress who stated these things to Mr. Lawson, and I am further compelled to conclude that the name of that Member of Congress belongs upon the Democratic side of this House. I do not claim for a moment that if that Democratic Congressman is called that evidence will be produced that will prove that a member of the Cabinet or anyone else was guilty of wrongdoing; but I have a right to conclude from the action of the majority that some Member of Congress did say something to Mr. Lawson, and that that Member of Congress does not care to go upon the stand.

Mr. BOOHER rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. For what purpose?

Mr. BOOHER. To ask a question.

Mr. LENROOT. I yield for a question.

Mr. BOOHER. Will the gentleman name to this House now the Member of Congress upon this side that he has in mind who gave that information?

Mr. LENROOT. I have no Member of Congress in mind.

Mr. BOOHER. Then the gentleman is in exactly the same position as Mr. Lawson.

Mr. LENROOT. Let us see. I will say to the gentleman that I gave to this committee the name of a gentleman and his address to whom Mr. Lawson related this conversation and in which he gave the name of this Member of Congress, and the committee had the opportunity——

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. I do not yield—and the committee had the opportunity to call that man before it and get the name of that Member of Congress and did not do so.

Mr. RAKER rose.

Mr. LENROOT. I can not yield. Mr. Speaker, I apprehend before this debate is over that some one on the Democratic side will state, and he is at perfect liberty to state, that some of the Republican Members, myself included, doubted the jurisdiction of this committee to compel these answers, but I want to say in anticipation of that statement that we repeatedly suggested to the Committee on Rules that in five minutes they could come before this House and be clothed with the fullest authority to ask these questions or any other questions they might think pertinent to the inquiry. They could at any time have brought this matter before the House, and obtained authority from the House to require Mr. Lawson to answer these questions. What is the situation? When the committee reported this resolution, the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rules was lost. When they reported this resolution as they have, by that action they reported adversely upon every motion that was made before the committee to cite Mr. Lawson before the bar of this House for contempt. When they reported this resolution the Committee on Rules lost all jurisdiction over the subject, and Mr. Lawson at this moment is free to leave the city of Washington because of the action of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. Speaker, the Chairman stated that a subcommittee had been created to further consider this matter of contempt. The record will show that that is not true. No subcommittee was created by this Committee on Rules to consider that question. A subcommittee was created for the purpose of preparing papers in case the committee should decide to cite Mr. Lawson before the House for contempt, but when the committee acted upon this resolution, that fell to the ground as did everything else in connection with this investigation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman two more minutes.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I want to say in closing that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] charged this was a matter of politics. I challenge any Member of this House to read the questions asked of the various witnesses by the Republican members of the Committee on Rules, and I say that any one reading that testimony, if he did not know the political affiliations of the Republican members, would not know from the reading whether they were asked by Republicans or Democrats. In the consideration of this question there has been injected into it nothing of a political issue by the minority members of the Committee on Rules.

But in so far as a political issue has been made of it it has been due solely to the amazing action of the majority members of the Committee on Rules in their attempt here and now to stifle this matter to prevent the name of this Member of Congress being revealed and give him an opportunity to testify upon the stand. [Applause.]

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, this is a matter which has many angles and which is viewed from many different standpoints. I think it is well that in periods of stress and excitement there are those who can retain their equilibrium and apply to such propositions as these ordinary common sense. I think this House should understand clearly and definitely the particular, specific thing which is now before it and upon which it will shortly be called to vote. House resolution 429 was presented by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] on the floor of the House with the claim that it was a privileged resolution. It was held to be privileged by the Speaker of the House and upon motion of the gentleman from Indiana it was referred to the Committee on Rules with instructions to report within 10 days. By a subsequent resolution adopted the same day the Committee on Rules was authorized in the investigation to be made by it in the consideration of resolution 429 to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths.

The committee has concluded the preliminary investigation upon that resolution, and in accordance with the instructions of the House has made report. We recommend that the resolution be laid upon the table. The reason for this recommendation is that there has not been found a single scintilla of evidence; there has not been made a single suggestion; there has not been offered a single intimation that any Member of the House of Representatives was in any way connected with stock speculation. There is not the faintest shadow of suspicion thrown upon the House of Representatives or upon any Member thereof as to having committed any act legally or ethically culpable, and therefore there exists no possible reason for further investigation of or under House resolution 429. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We think the time has come when the curtain should be rung down and there should be an end of at least scene 1 of what has been a roaring farce, except that unfortunately it has been shot through with touches of tragedy. If there exists in the mind of any of you gentlemen an iden that you are under suspicion, permit me to assure you now that nothing has developed in the testimony to indicate a ground for your suspicion. [Laughter.] House resolution 429 was held privileged because it referred and related by intimation to Members of the House of Representatives. It was upon that ground alone that it was held to be privileged. If any of you gentlemen desire to hold yourselves under further suspicion by voting against tabling this resolution, why, of course, we have no power to prevent your doing so. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Having said that much, I should like to go a step further. I anticipated that perhaps some such denouement as this would occur when the resolution was presented. I did not like to question the good faith of gentlemen who were sponsors for it and charge that they were endeavoring to use a parliamentary subterfuge, but I did make the point of order and insist that it was not privileged. In that I was overruled, and I do not complain, because I was forcefully struck by the statement of the gentleman from Indiana in answer to a question which I put to him that he believed that he had facts in his possession that would justify an investigation. I repeat I was forcefully impressed by that, and I did not thereafter urge with great vehemence that it be held nonprivileged; but when the gentleman from Indiana came before the Committee on Rules and gave his sworn testimony he left the members of that committee in bewilderment and astonishment as to what possible basis he could have had for the statement made in answer to inquiry on the floor of the House that he believed that he had facts to justify an investigation.

The gentleman from Indiana upon his oath assured the committee that there was no political influence which controlled him in presenting the resolution, and so we were left to guess what the motive could be. I do not know what the other Members have thought, because we have not interchanged views about it, but somehow, in some way, I have been driven to the conclusion that the gentleman from Indiana's motive was his desire to enter into rivalry with another gentleman from Indiana whose occupation is the writing of comedies for the stage and fables for the newspapers. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Of course, the principal actor in this matter which has been staged was Mr. Thomas W. Lawson. Much has been said of Mr. Lawson. Opinions differ as to what should be done with Mr. Lawson. I suppose most people think he ought to be confined, but there is a difference of opinion as to where he should be confined. [Applause.] Some think in a jail, others think in an asylum, but there is this much to be said for Mr. Lawson: Again and again Mr. Lawson said before that committee, "I have no evidence that would be received in a court of justice and I decline to involve the names of men upon rumor." There are those who might profit by the example of even Mr. Lawson. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Mr. Lawson said this. He said that if there was a leak it was of no detriment to the public; that, in fact, it was of benefit to the public if there was such a thing, and he said that his whole motive, all the interviews that he had given out and all the advertising he had been doing, was not in an effort to get an investigation regarding a leak and an attempt to reflect upon any official of the Government, but it was——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HENRY. I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. GARRETT (continuing). But he was using that—I do not quote his exact language, but the meaning—as a subterfuge in endeavoring to obtain an investigation of the stock exchange for legislative purposes. Well, if the stock exchange should be investigated for legislative purposes, and I am not denying that it should be, I have no objection to that; that ought to be done by a legislative committee of the House for legislative purposes and not mingled with idle stories and foolish rumors of scandal for which there is no basis in fact. [Applause.]

Gentlemen, these things come and go in every Congress. Again and again during my experience here we have witnessed these sensational things come, and they are forgotten. We had a few years ago what is commonly known as the Mulhall investigaton. Do you suppose there is one citizen in a hundred thousand in the United States to-day who even remembers that there was such an investigation? We are trifling with small things, with things for which there is no basis. This House can much better maintain its dignity by preserving its calmness and using its common sense. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHIPERFIELD]. [Applause.]

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I quite agree with the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], for whom I have a very affectionate regard, that it is time that the curtain should ring down on the first act of the play, which proves to be a farce, and it is high time that it should rise on the second act, with the people of this country viewing the stage in the full light of day when the drama is produced, "The honor of Congress."

Gentlemen, for years past you have been giving away your prerogatives and powers one by one to boards and to commissions, and to this body and to that, until to-day the Congress of the United States is hardly more than a large town meeting. But, in the name of God Almighty, in this proceeding do not give away the last vestige of the honor of the Congress of the United States, as you propose to do. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] has said that the whole matter can be disregarded and has urged that it be dropped. I make the statement upon the authority of the evidence that I will in a moment produce that if you do that, like Banquo's ghost, it will not down, but it will rise and haunt each and every man who proposes that course of action. You may see the fire smoldering, you may see the smoke arising, you may say, "I propose to close the door of the room, because I see no flame," but in doing so, my friends, you are merely postponing the hour of the conflagration. And the house will burn, the conflagration will be exposed, and the people of the United States will have in the open the hearings that we ought to give them without their demand.

Let me show you some of the evidence in this case. I have no high regard, I am frank to say, for the honor of Thomas W. Lawson. However, I do not think it will advance the cause of this investigation to waste any time in speaking my true opinion of this man. Suffice it to say, that he is not a normal man. There is no question in my mind about that, and I want to tell you that I have put in 25 years of my life weighing evidence. As State's attorney I have sent many a man to the penitentiary until the last day of his life with less evidence than there is in this record, that there was a leak to Wall Street from Washington.

Let me call your attention to statements that were made by Mr. Lawson when he appeared before this committee and when he was put under the solemn obligation of an oath that to any man with a conscience should be binding.

When the gentleman says there is no suspicion, let me inquire, how do you remove it, and when did it vanish, and where has it gone?

Here is the statement that he made. I read from page 83. I will say to you that I will not read consecutively, for it would take too much time to cover the various points, and when I get to another page I will tell you.

On page 83 he—Lawson—said:

> I am going to proceed on that assumption: That this committee is not holding an investigation; it is not equipped to hold an investigation. I do not believe it is equipped to hold an investigation. * * * I repeat it now. One of the commonest things in Wall Street, where all of these things center, are leaks, Washington leaks, meaning by that advance information in regard to things pertaining to the Government; meaning by that those things that are of such import to the country that they immediately affect the price of the country's securities.

And if the statement is not true, then the tongue that uttered it ought to be palsied.

I mean by that—

> leaks from the Supreme Court, advance information upon the decisions of the Supreme Court; advance information upon senatorial matters supposed to be of the most profound secrecy; advance information of the acts of Congress or its committees; advance information of Cabinet affairs; and advance information direct from the White House.

Is there no suspicion? Can it be possible that men can come and make these charges under oath and still the cover be drawn over them by the Members of the House?

It seems to me, gentlemen, that it will be the great mistake of this Congress if that is done. But there was much more to his alleged evidence.

On page 110 he said:

For instance, if a responsible banker friend of mine should say to me, as you would say to Mr. HENRY, "Such and such a banker, such and such a Senator, and such and such a Cabinet man are in an account, speculating in steel, for instance; they sold so much the other day and they split up on profits.

And then turn to page 117, we find he says:

I corroborated that. I had more than that. I had a reputable banker, a friend of the other banker, and a friend of mine, and I said, "What do you know about it?" and he said, "I know the banker stated to me that he had not only had this account and others, but had such absolute control of the Cabinet member that he could bring him from Washington to New York or on the telephone at any hour of the day or night," and offered then and there to call him up at half past 1 in the morning to answer these questions.

Mr. Lawson by that statement impunged the honor and integrity of Members of Congress and of every branch of the Government of the United States, and when pressed for answers and for information like a dishonorable man he refused time after time to give the information to the House, but said:

I have it; I will give it to another investigating committee, and I will give the name of the Senator, the Member of Congress, of the banker, and of one who is in a higher position than any of these men.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Briefly. My time is limited.

Mr. FERRIS. Would the gentleman from Illinois, an experienced prosecutor, believe Thomas W. Lawson on oath if he told the name of any Member of this Congress?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. I would not care to pass on that question. [Laughter.]

Just a minute. I am speaking seriously. On my sense of responsibility I say that I have no partisan motive. I have tried to find the facts.

A MEMBER. But you did not get any evidence.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Very good. If you wish to make that kind of interruption when I am speaking, you can do so. It is all right. Let me say this: I can not pass upon the question of the honesty of Thomas W. Lawson. I was not impressed with it. I was not impressed with his testimony. But is it possible, gentlemen, that a man can come before a committee of Congress and raise his hand to God and swear that he has this information in his possession, that he will disclose to an investigating committee information that involves the honor of every Member of Congress, information that involves the honor of the Senate of the United States, information that involves the honor of a Cabinet officer, and information that involves the honor of one higher than all these, and we still refuse to conduct an investigation and to brand him either as an infamous liar who deserves no place in the company of honorable men or sustain the charge that he has made?

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. I yield.

Mr. GARRETT. I know my friend desires to be absolutely fair in statement. No statement that Mr. Lawson made would involve the honor of any Congressman, any Representative in Congress——

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. It would——

Mr. GARRETT. If a Representative in Congress told him that he knew the name of a Senator and Cabinet officer. There is no charge against any Representative.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. There is no charge, so far as any sufficient evidence is concerned, except the scurrilous generalities of Lawson that Members of Congress are engaged in these things. There was no evidence except that he said a Member of Congress had information of infamous conduct of public officials in his possession, and that he knew his name, and that he could produce him to the committee. Therefore it puts every Member of Congress under the suspicion that he may be the one who is cognizant of these things. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. Before the next Member speaks, the Chair must admonish Members that they must not sit in their seats and interject their remarks into the remarks of the gentleman who has the floor. It does not give the man who has the floor a fair chance. It creates a disturbance, and is a nuisance. That is the rule.

Another thing, the Chair asks every Member of the House to keep order here to-day. Of course everybody knows that there is a very exciting question under discussion. Keep out of the aisles, and if you want to talk, go out of doors. [Applause.]

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that any Member of this House, on either side of this aisle, will contend for a moment that resolution 429 should be adopted by this House. There were three charges, recited in this resolution, made by Mr. Lawson. One was that the Capitol had been wallowing in graft, that Members would change their bank accounts if they knew this investigation was going to come, and that there would be such a crowd at the hearings that there would not be a quorum in the House when it met on Tuesday morning, January 2.

Now, what are the facts? In answer to questions asked of Mr. Lawson he made the statement that what he meant in reference to Members being present at the hearings, with not a quorum in the House, was that they just wanted to hear what was said over there. He had no charge to make against them.

Another charge, that they would shift their bank accounts, was explained by his saying that a Member might invest some money belonging to some one else or make an investment, bought or sold some stocks or bonds, and had the proceeds of such transaction in the bank and would hurry to get that money over to whomsoever it belonged that he was doing business for, and not to his own account. So, gentlemen, I want you to understand that, in my judgment, there is not one scintilla of evidence of a charge against a Member of this House that has been sustained in resolution 429.

The only question, I will say to this House in frankness, that may arise in deciding this question in reference to a further investigation has been whether or not the House should appoint a committee that would call Mr. Lawson before them and ask him that question, "Who is that Member of Congress who told you these things?"—not these rumors that are floating around in the committee and everywhere else. Mr. Lawson says he will give the Member's name.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. I have but five minutes, but I will yield for just a short question.

Mr. IGOE. What I want to find out is, can we punish him for contempt now?

Mr. FOSTER. I am not a lawyer, but I have been listening to lawyers talking upon the question, and, from the experience of this House in the past in the cases that have been had for contempt, it does not seem to me, looking at it from a layman's standpoint, there is much to do with Mr. Lawson in that regard; but I hope there is. In thinking over this matter, I have prepared such a resolution as would permit the Speaker of this House to appoint a committee that would call Mr. Lawson before it and ask him the question, Who is the Member of Congress that will give this information?—not against the Member of the House, because he does not say that, but he says he will mention a Member of Congress who told him about the transactions of a Cabinet officer, a banker, and a United States Senator, We have no right to investigate, as I understand, or to attempt an investigation, if there is wrongdoing charged against a Member at the other end of this Capitol. It is their duty to investigate their own Members, and not ours; so that if Mr. Lawson can state it, and will state it, the only question in my mind is whether we should not give him that opportunity to do so. And with that view in my mind—my own view entirely, not the views of the majority of the Committee on Rules—I have prepared such a resolution in such shape that I hope it may be considered, if necessary, and that Mr. Lawson may be called before that special committee and given the opportunity to answer. But I do say that I believe, from the experience that we have had in the past, that we will get the same results in the future with that kind of a resolution.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. In just a minute. But if he does mention the names, then this committee can proceed and fully investigate whether there is any truth in the charges that this man has made.

Mr. CROSSER. You say you are going to introduce such a resolution?

Mr. FOSTER. I have prepared such a resolution, with the view of introducing it if this matter is disposed of to-day.

Mr. CROSSER. It will be of some interest.

Mr. FOSTER. But I want to say to the gentleman from Ohio and those on this side of the House that, so far as I am concerned—and I think I speak for every member of the majority of the Committee on Rules—that they are willing to consider whatever resolutions may come before it in reference to this matter. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. May I have just a minute more?

Mr. HENRY. I yield one more minute to the gentleman, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. FOSTER. But, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House——

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. I can not yield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. FOSTER. But, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, let us not besmirch the character of men or put a stigma upon men by mentioning them, as has been done in this resolution—men who, I believe from the evidence, have shown that they are innocent. But it goes broadcast to the country that this man's name has been mentioned in connection with these matters. It is a serious thing to bring up a man's name when there is no evidence to show that there is one iota of proof against that man. Let us pay no attention to the scandalmonger, wherever he may be. God knows we have all seen enough of such a creature. Let us have the truth, but not the idle words of the scandalmonger doing his dirty work in the House of Representatives or any other place. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET]. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I decline interruptions during my time.

I desire first to answer the very proper and pertinent inquiry addressed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE]. I heard the gentleman's inquiry, and it is not necessary for him to repeat it.

Mr. IGOE. I just wanted to ask, if the gentleman would permit me to suggest, that some of us are interested in this thing, and we do not think it ought to be confined to the members of the Committee on Rules, and I have some more questions that I should like to ask somebody.

Mr. BENNET. I will answer the gentleman's one inquiry, which is all I can do as a member of the minority. The gentleman asked, in substance, whether the adoption of this report would foreclose any proceedings against Mr. Lawson for what occurred before the committee. From 25 years of legal experience, and having read every precedent in Hinds' Precedents relating to this subject, I say to the gentleman from Missouri and to the House, if you adopt this report, you can not then punish Thomas W. Lawson for contempt for these reasons: First, no man has ever been punished for contempt by either the House or the Senate until he was called before the committee and given a chance to purge himself of contempt; and when we adopt this resolution we lose control of the subject matter of the investigation committed to us by the House. We were directed to report within 10 days. We have reported within 10 days, and if our report is accepted we become functus officio.

In the second place, no man can be convicted for refusing to answer a question unless that question is both pertinent and material. The case of Hallet Kilbourne, the case of Anderson against Dunn, the case of Chapman, all the cases that have gone into the courts hold that.

Now, what does this report say? It says that nothing material was developed. Therefore, if you adopt this report, you adopt a report saying that there was nothing pertinent and material before the committee, and that the questions asked of Mr. Lawson were not pertinent or material to any matter of substance, and you can not convict him of contempt. Therefore, if you adopt the report of the majority of the committee, Mr. Lawson has had his opportunity to tell us where we can go, and we have consented to go. [Laughter.]

Now, I imagine the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] will develop the fact that a leak was proved, therefore I will not take time to demonstrate that; but I will demonstrate, calmly and unemotionally as a lawyer, that the conduct of the members of the majority justify the reasonable deduction that they are afraid to investigate the leak. [Applause on the Republican side.] And from that statement I hasten to absolve by name the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL], because he is not. I am not surprised that not one member of the majority has read to the House one line of the testimony. I am going to read some.

The impression has been given you that Mr. Lawson will not make this public. Mr. Lawson took a proper legal ground. He consulted counsel. He informed our committee that our sole duty was to find out whether that resolution ought to be reported, and that we had no power to investigate, and he was legally correct. Then Mr. CANTRILL, of Kentucky, in a plain, blunt way, asked him this question, which is to be found on page 148 of the hearings:

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Lawson, yesterday, as I recall your testimony, you declined to divulge the name of this Member of Congress or this Cabinet officer to this committee on the ground that this committee was simply holding a preliminary investigation, and that this was not the proper committee to give those names to?

Now, I ask you, in a spirit of all fairness, because your answer might have some bearing on the action of this committee in making its report to the House. In case this committee favorably reports this resolution to the House, and the House adopts this resolution, and in accordance with that resolution the Speaker of the House appoints a committee to make a final and thorough investigation, will you now agree to give that committee the name of that Member of Congress and that member of the Cabinet to whom you referred in your testimony yesterday?

Mr. LAWSON. I will.

Mr. CANTRILL. You will?

Mr. LAWSON. I will.

Mr. CANTRILL. All right; that is all.

And that ought to have been all. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. I have declined to yield to the House.

Mr. RAKER. I wish to ask the gentleman a legal question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FITZGERALD). The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BENNET. We are most of us lawyers. We know that there are witnesses who can prove things and witnesses who can not prove things. The majority called about all the witnesses in Washington who could not prove anything, but they specifically refused, declined, and neglected to call the people who could prove things. [Applause on the Republican side.] Of course, if you leave out all the material witnesses, you can not make out a case. Now, who were the material witnesses? The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] gave their names to the committee, and he gave their addresses. Here is one: Mr. McKinnon, of Thompson & McKinnon, of Chicago. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] stated that he received the following telegram from Oshkosh, Wis.:

Wrote you fully to-day. The message came from R. C. McKinnon, of Thompson & McKinnon, addressed to Ralph R. Hartley, manager of the branch office located here. Message came from outside wire, not from service wire, and submitted in strict confidence. Saw the message myself, but can not give it to you more accurately than stated in my letter.

S. B. FRIDAY.

Mr. McKinnon was not called.

Mr. Baruch was directed by the committee to bring his books, documents, and papers of the 19th and 20th of December. It was not done, and it was not insisted on. The Western Union and the Postal Telegraph Cos. were to bring their messages of the 19th and 20th of December. It was not done, and it was not insisted on. Furthermore, this leak occurred prior to noon on the 20th of December. The note was not given out for publication until along about 4 o'clock in the afternoon of the 20th. At half past 11 in the morning of the 20th of December that information was received in New York. There is no doubt about that. On page 38 of the record is an item which appeared in a news bulletin in New York City that morning. It said:

The renewed selling of the market is due to reports received by brokers' private wires from Washington to the effect that the administration will in the near future address to the belligerents some suggestions and proposals in regard to peace. Nothing definite is obtainable in administration circles.

Now, we brought over from New York Mr. Reilly, the man who wrote that item, and we asked him if he had any information on which to base it. He said he had. He said he received it from a newspaper man, but he was not even asked the name of the newspaper man. He said even before he received the confidential report from his own representative here the market had been commencing to break, showing that the information of this peace note, which had been guarded with the utmost care, with the usual care in the Printing Office, had been received in New York.

Why, Mr. Speaker, the situation is this: That every time the majority members of the committee came to the point where they could start to pick up the bricks necessary to trace the information directly back to Washington they stopped. Why did they stop? The majority has been very generous in exonerating ourselves, but here is what Mr. Lawson charged specifically, and his charge was not directed entirely at us; it was directed toward all the officials in Washington. Mr. HARRISON, on page 162, volume 4, asked this question:

Mr. HARRISON. Now, in this resolution, the latter part of it, it says that in the statement of December 31, 1916, you stated:

"The good old Capitol has been wallowing in Wall Street leak grafts for 40 years, wallowing hale and hearty."

You spelled that word "Capitol" with an "o." Did you mean in Washington, or in the Capitol?

Mr. LAWSON. Capitol?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; in that building over there, or did you mean the whole city?

Mr. LAWSON. No; I meant in Washington.

Mr. HARRISON. In the whole city?

Mr. LAWSON. Yes.
Mr. HARRISON. Including them all?
Mr. LAWSON. Yes.

Here is where we—and not only we, but members of the Cabinet and the Executive—have been charged with bringing about the condition through which the people who traded on the stock exchange in the city of New York on the 19th, 20th, and 21st of December lost over $63,000,000, according to the figures taken from the New York Times. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am ready to instruct the Rules Committee or to raise a special committee to investigate the conduct of Government officials charged with violating the law with regard to "leaks" and speculation. I want an earnest and sincere investigation and not the prolongation of a farcical performance to further the partisan purposes of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD]. He has had six days in which to make good his charge, and he has produced no testimony and given no witnesses who could or would give evidence to the committee. The man who makes a serious charge against a Government official ought to produce the evidence or withdraw the charge. The gentleman from Indiana has involved in his rumors the names of men high in authority in this country, men of high character and unimpeachable integrity, and he has failed utterly to produce one scintilla of evidence against any one of them. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The Rules Committee has a resolution before it now which authorizes an investiagtion of "leak" charges, and if any of you gentlemen on that side have any evidence to offer, come forward with it. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] insinuates that some Member on this side is involved. Any Member of this House who makes an insinuation of that kind owes it to this House and to the country to name that man, and if he fails to do so after making the insinuation he brands himself as a man unworthy of the respect of the membership of this body. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, any man who reads the various statements made by Thomas W. Lawson about this matter must agree that he has failed to furnish any evidence to the Committee on Rules, or to the newspapers of the country.

I call upon the gentlemen here to-day, if you know anything about these charges or anything against any Member of Congress in connection with them, I beg you to come forward and testify. But if you do not know anything, in the name of all that is decent and honest, I beg you not to injure the good names of honorable men by the use of false rumors.

If you have any testimony, give it to this House and to the country; but if you have none, quit trying to deceive the country with a contemptible play at politics.

Are you Republicans trying to embarrass the President in his efforts to bring about peace between the warring nations of the Old World? Would you have him refrain from suggesting to the nations at war that this peace-loving Nation is anxious to see peace restored because you are afraid that peace negotiations would interfere with the business of the stock exchange?

Gentlemen on the other side, let me say to you now, that if it is your purpose to besmirch this administration by such contemptible rumors as some seem willing to peddle around, you will meet with miserable failure. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Woodrow Wilson stands at the head of the majority party in the United States. He is loved and trusted by the people of the whole country, and your puny effort to play politics at the cost of truth and common honesty will be repudiated by patriots throughout the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Let me close with this statement, Mr. Speaker: If you gentlemen, any of you, can produce the evidence to establish the charges that so far rest only on rumor, I beg you to produce it or be honest enough to say that you can not do so. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, if the man who started this propaganda, Thomas W. Lawson, were a responsible, truthful, frank man, it would be the duty of this House to follow this investigation to the very last note and find out if in truth there is anything in his several unsupported and in all probability untrue charges. There is not a man on the Committee on Rules who heard him, and I doubt if there is a man on either side of the aisle who read the testimony, who will rise in his place and say that Thomas W. Lawson dealt either with truth, candor, or frankness in any single statement he made before the committee. The other gentleman, an honored Member of this House, who is responsible in part for this investigation is the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. WOOD, and he acted on an unsupported, uncorroborated, unknown, unheard of letter from somebody named A. Curtis. I pause and ask Mr. WOOD who is A. Curtis, and where is A. Curtis? I pause and ask any Member on the Republican side who is A. Curtis, and where is A. Curtis?

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. FERRIS. I would like to hear what the gentleman has to say.

Mr. BENNET. A. Curtis is a gentleman in New York who wrote a letter to Mr. WOOD, dated six days after Mr. WOOD introduced his resolution, in which he said in the first line—

The Democratic majority of the House will not, I presume, permit the adoption of your resolution of inquiry.

[Laughter.]

Mr. FERRIS. The frankness and candor of the answer of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] is only equivalent to the answers of Mr. Lawson himself. [Laughter.] One word further. The attitude of the Republican side of this House in a word is this: They would ask the Congress at the short session of Congress to leave its well-known duties, the passage of the appropriation bills and getting ready to adjourn on March 4, and follow off in a weird, nonsensical investigation of Thomas W. Lawson and A. Curtis, whoever the latter may be; and fearful that some Member of the House may accept with more seriousness than the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] would have them take his answer as to who A. Curtis is, I want to say that the only A. Curtis found in New York was Mr. Alexander Curtis, who came before the committee and said that he wrote no such letter. It is time to stop following off after false gods and get our appropriation bills through. It is time to ring down the curtain on this entire fiasco.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FITZGERALD). The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I do not care what kind of a resolution we adopt, but if we do not adopt some kind of a resolution which will make Mr. Lawson either "put up or shut up," we shall deserve everything that will be said about us all through this country. There is probably not a Member from the North who has not had the experience of finding among his constituents that there is a suspicion abroad that Congressmen are crooks. I have lectured over and over again to my constituents, and I have told them that in the 14 years of my service I have only three times seen suspicious actions on the part of any of my fellow Members. I have seen looks of incredulity come over the faces of my audience, and I have realized that while they thought I was honest they believed my associates were not. Most of us have had that same experience. Most of us have had people say to us, "Oh, I know you are all right; but a lot of those fellows down in Washington are getting something out of this thing." We know that the fellows down in Washington are doing no such thing; but it is just such stupid chloroforming as is being attempted now which creates that idea in the public mind. Do I think that Mr. Lawson will reveal anything? I do not. I think he will name a Congressman as his informant of the fact that rumor connected a certain Cabinet officer with the leak. He might name me. If he did, I should deny the truth of his allegation. But suppose that it were a fact that I had given Mr. Lawson this information, and that he were to name me as his informant, what of it? I should get up and say, "Yes; I did say there was such a rumor, and what of it? It is the fact." Now, my friends, it would be a very disagreeable thing if I were a Cabinet officer to have my name mentioned in such a connection as this. Very likely a Cabinet officer's name might be mentioned. Even so, I have no doubt that that Cabinet officer would get up and convince the committee and the country at once that he knew nothing about these matters with relation to which Mr. Lawson says that some Congressman told him that some Cabinet officer was cognizant. That would end the whole matter so far as Mr. Lawson's allegations as to that Cabinet officer are concerned.

But, Mr. Speaker, this whole business has not been properly investigated. The testimony shows at least 16 men in the Government pay in Washington who knew the contents of that note before it was given to the newspaper men. Out of those 16 men only two have been interrogated by the committee. I shall proceed to enumerate them. When that note arrived in Mr. Lansing's hands—and we do not know how many people may have been consulted about it before it reached his hands—Mr. Lansing called Mr. Polk and Mr. Woolsey in consultation, and they sent for three stenographers. Those stenographers were Mr. R. C. Sweet, Mr. H. D. House, and Mr. F. E. Vestal. Neither Mr. Polk, Mr. Woolsey, Mr. Sweet, Mr. House, nor Mr. Vestal was called before this committee to find out whether any one of them might have accidentally let something leak. The message was put into cipher by Mr. Salmon, the Chief of the Index Bureau, and his assistant, Mr. J. H. Bean.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman recalls, I am sure, that the Secretary of State made the statement before the committee that he had caused an investigation to be made?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes; but I feel it would be more thorough to have had them under oath. I had forgotten for the moment, however, that the Secretary had made that statement. That makes 8. Then, the galley proof was read by John H. James, Chief of the Information Bureau, and his assistant named Duncan. That makes 10 men who knew the contents of the note after it reached Mr. Lansing and before it went to the Government Printing Office. Mr. William J. McEvoy, of the Government Printing Office, testified that he had read the note, and he is the only other witness of that whole lot who has been called, except Mr. Lansing. Mr. McEvoy said a copy preparer and two division chiefs in addition to himself had seen the note in its entirety, and that a number of compositors had seen it in fractions so small that it would be impossible for them to give an intelligent statement of its contents. There we have 14 men, only two of whom have been examined. We also know that Ambassador Willard knew about that note, because the fact appears in the testimony, and President Wilson makes the sixteenth.

Now, my friends, when I appeared before the Rules Committee I said, "I think this committee ought to go to President Wilson and say, 'Mr. President, do you object'"—at least I think I told the committee substantially this; my recollection is that it is in my evidence—"'to saying with whom you consulted?' Then summon those gentlemen with whom the President consulted and say, 'Did you by any chance let this cat out of the bag by accident?'" I pointed out to the committee that that line of investigation would start us along in the right way from one end of the line. I advised, furthermore, a simultaneous start from the other end. Investigate in New York; find out who has made money out of this fall in prices, and compare the course of the stock-market movement and get experts. One broker will tell you one thing and another broker will tell you another. Make a comparison of their views. You are not stock-market experts on the Committee on Rules. Get some experts to help you.

I understand that you sent for certain brokers' sales slips. You impounded certain accounts of the New York Stock Exchange. I am told that you asked for the commission brokers' bills of a certain party to see what his transactions actually totaled. You had all this evidence at hand, but you never examined the documents which you impounded; and therefore I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that this investigation has not been conducted in a way to find out anything. Even with a thorough investigation you would have the greatest difficulty in finding anything out. That peace note was sent to 43 different capitals—the identical message—but it was not sent in our really secret cipher. It was sent in what is known as the "blue" cipher, and the Secretary of State has told me that the key to that blue cipher is probably held by many individuals not in the service of the United States Government. Now, I am going to read my correspondence with the Secretary of State.

Mr. BENNET. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. I have only a minute left, and I should like to continue.

Mr. BENNET. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the Secretary furnished information showing it could not have gotten across the water and back again in time. That is in the record.

Mr. GARDNER. Very likely; but if the key to the cipher is in the possession of people not in the employ of the United States Government the dispatch could be deciphered here before it ever got across the water. I filed this correspondence yesterday with the Committee on Rules to be printed with my evidence. It reads as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 9, 1917.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: In conversation yesterday I understood you to say that the Government has three ciphers: First, a cipher for use exclusively in communicating with our ambassadors and ministers in person; second, a cipher which is used for communicating with our embassies and legations abroad when the message transmitted is not to be delivered word for word; third, a cipher which is used for messages which are to be delivered to foreign Governments word for word.

I understood you to say that ciphers No. 1 and No. 2, as enumerated above, are well-kept secrets, but the key to cipher No. 3 is probably held by many individuals not in the service of the United States Government. I understood you to say that cipher No. 3 was used in transmitting the "Peace note" to some 43 different legations and embassies of the United States. It was necessary, if I comprehend you correctly, to use this cipher for the reason that the use of either of the other ciphers would at once have resulted in the destruction of their secrecy. I think you explained this as follows, to wit: When a message is delivered to a foreign Government word for word, it becomes an easy matter for that foreign Government to compare the aforesaid message with the coded cablegram by which it was forwarded from the United States. A comparison of the coded cablegram with the actual text of the dispatch would enable experts to discover the cipher code. For this reason, it was necessary to use a cipher about whose secrecy the State Department was not solicitous.

In reply to my question you were good enough to say that I was at liberty to communicate the above information to the Committee on Rules. Before doing so in an official manner, however, I am anxious to know whether the above statement of the case is correct. If so, I should like your permission to furnish this letter and your answer thereto as a part of my evidence before the Committee on Rules.

Very respectfully,

A. P. GARDNER.

Hon. ROBERT LANSING,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington, January 9, 1917.

Hon. A. P. GARDNER,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. GARDNER: I am in receipt of your letter of the 9th relative to the ciphers used by this department. I have read your understanding of our conversation, which is substantially correct. I see no objection to furnishing a copy of your letter to the Committee on Rules, if you so desire.

Very truly, yours, ROBERT LANSING.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to put the rest of this letter and Mr. Lansing's answer into the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman from Kansas that the remainder of the time will be consumed in one address on this side.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH]. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, in spite of the fact that this committee has divided upon partisan lines on this question, in spite of the fact that partisanship has been brought into this debate originally by my good friend from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and later particularly by the brilliant court jester of this administration [laughter and applause on the Republican side], I approach and have approached this question entirely as a nonpartisan, as a Member of the House of Representatives, and one jealous of the honor and dignity of this House and of this Government, dominated, though it is, in every branch by the Democratic Party. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] has suggested that we reason calmly. I agree with him entirely. Let us reason calmly as to where we will be left in the event that the report of the majority of this House is accepted. Now, the facts are, Mr. Speaker, that charges, vague, it is true, but charges which have spread throughout this country, have been made involving the integrity and the character of officials high in the service of this Government. Moreover, the authority and dignity of a great committee of this House has been treated with absolute contempt. Mr. Speaker, can we afford, on the one hand, by inaction to lend any possible color to those charges, and, on the other hand, can we leave these insults unanswered?

It is charged that there was a leak, and I am afraid there has been a leak——

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I regret I can not yield. I have only five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am afraid there has been a leak, if I judge only by the peculiar antics of the New York stock market as a result of what must have been advance information. Now, my friends, it is not a remarkable thing that there should have been a leak somewhere, at some time, and by some one, considering the wonderful opportunity for gain that might come from any advance information looking to a movement in the direction of peace. It was not a question of speculation, my friends, as to what effect such a leak might have upon the stock market. It had been conclusively proven before as to just what effect the merest hint of peace would have upon stocks and the basic securities of this country. It is a regrettable and lamentable fact, but a fact, nevertheless, that to a dominating extent our present prosperity and the value of our securities is dependent upon the prolongation of this disastrous war in Europe. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The merest hint a few days before this as a result of the German note that by some possibility there might be peace resulted in the loss of from 10 to 15 per cent of the value of practically all stocks. Did not any reasoning man therefore know that a proposal of peace or even a mere suggestion of peace coming from the President of the United States would result, as it did, in a loss of from 20 to 30 per cent in the value of the basic securities of this Nation? Now, much has been said about Mr. Thomas W. Lawson, a farmer-financier, as he describes himself, a blatherskite, and fakir, as many men believe him.

But the question we have to decide, gentlemen, is not whether his testimony before the Rules Committee was of value, or even as to whether it was credible; it is to decide whether the testimony he has agreed with a member of this committee to give and the names he has agreed to furnish will not throw light upon whether there has been a leak and who has profited by that leak. I say to you, gentlemen of this House, and I say it from a purely nonpartisan standpoint, that we can not afford to stop where we are now. We have not gained anything practical. We may gain little eventually, but we have all to gain and nothing to lose by letting in the light on this proposition. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to yield two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, there has been some inquiry on the part of Members of the House as to the law pertaining to these so-called congressional investigations, and I desire, therefore, to call the attention of the membership of the House to sections 101, 102, 103, and 104 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, 1878, second edition, which during my time I shall ask to read. They are as follows:

SEC. 101. The President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, or a Chairman of a Committee of the Whole, or of any committee of either House of Congress, is empowered to administer oaths to witnesses in any case under their examination.

SEC. 102. Every person who having been summoned as a witness by the authority of either House of Congress to give testimony or to produce papers upon any matter under inquiry before either House, or any committee of either House of Congress, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the question under inquiry, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000 nor less than $100 and imprisonment in a common jail for not less than 1 month nor more than 12 months.

SEC. 103. No witness is privileged to refuse to testify to any fact, or to produce any paper, respecting which he shall be examined by either House of Congress, or by any committee of either House, upon the ground that his testimony to such fact or his production of such paper may tend to disgrace him or otherwise render him infamous.

SEC. 104. Whenever a witness summoned as mentioned in section 102 fails to testify, and the facts are reported to either House, the President of the Senate or the Speaker of the House, as the case may be, shall certify the fact under the seal of the Senate or House to the district attorney for the District of Columbia, whose duty it shall be to bring the matter before the grand jury for their action.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. If I have the time.

Mr. LENROOT. By taking that course you avoid requiring Mr. Lawson to give the names, but merely arraign him for a misdemeanor.

Mr. GARD. I am simply reading what the law is.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like the gentleman's construction as a lawyer. He can not purge himself of contempt under that proceeding by giving the names.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] has expired. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] is recognized. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I?

The SPEAKER. Fourteen minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, the House is to-day confronted with a grave responsibility and an important duty.

For many days rumors have been afloat and charges made that Government officials had violated the secrecy with respect to grave international questions, and that Government officials and others had profited by violating the confidence the country placed in them.

I have believed from the time these charges were first published that the importance of purging the Government of such a serious scandal was an important duty. I do not think we should rest the charges of the scandal on the statements of Thomas W. Lawson, of Boston. The charges were published and generally believed throughout the country before Lawson became prominent in connection with them. His refusal to testify to important matters that he says came to his knowledge did not leave the committee and does not leave the House without information upon which the House ought now to proceed to order a searching investigation that will clear up this whole matter and purge the Government of the United States of one of the most serious scandals that has had wide publicity with respect to our Government in half a century.

The last witness called before the Committee on Rules, the news editor of the Wall Street Journal, Mr. Reilly, testified that on the 20th day of December, at about 11.30 o'clock in the forenoon, one of his reporters brought him news that the rumor was on the Street, received over the private wire of a Washington broker, that President Wilson was about to send a peace note to the belligerent powers. This information was at once placed upon the ticker and given to the financial world by the Wall Street Journal. That testimony is undisputed and unexplained. It is in evidence that the firm with which he is connected, F. A. Connelly & Co., brokers, of Washington, have a private wire to New York. This shows the leak and imposes the duty upon the House to order the appointment of a committee to make a searching investigation as to who the leaker was and as to who the beneficiaries of the leak were.

Officials of the Government are under suspicion. An investigation should be had that will purge the Government of that suspicion, no matter who it hits.

It is important to the people that public questions should not be so conducted as to yield private profit, and the importance is magnified when such questions grow out of our international relations. Every phase of the conduct of such questions as these should be above suspicion.

The Committee on Rules early in its proceedings took steps to preserve important testimony that might be important to an investigating committee in connection with these charges. Stock exchanges and stock brokers throughout the country have been notified to preserve all their records that would have a bearing upon the names of those who took advantage of the stock market at the time the advance information as to the note was affecting the market. This testimony has not been taken. The committee was informed that records have been ordered preserved that will disclose the names of the beneficiaries of the leak, even though the transactions were not in his proper name.

I am unable to understand, Mr. Speaker, why there should be a moment's hesitation in going to the very bottom of this whole matter.

Mr. Lawson testified that he had information that he would not give to the Committee on Rules, but would give to a special investigating committee. He said the information he had was of the gravest importance. This is what he says:

Mr. LAWSON. But this Congressman, in all earnestness, stated to me the seriousness of these names becoming public, and he stated it to me so strongly that I agreed with him. So much so, that I did not believe that this investigation should go further. Now, there is the one point I want to make, that if there is a drastic investigation to ascertain and furnish these—to ascertain who were the "leakers" and who were the beneficiaries, let the results be what they may, I am willing under those circumstances to say that it would be more serious for me not to give the committee that information than it would be to give it to them.

In answer to questions in the examination, he further says:

Question. Is it the name of an official of the Government?

Mr. LAWSON (continuing). But a name the mention of which might be more serious than either of the other two. Now, when I say to you that a Member of Congress thought the situation was so serious and showed it to me to be so serious, that we should not have these things in public now—even looking at it that perhaps in 30 days they might not be as dangerous—that is the only thing that has influenced me.

Question. In what way were they dangerous—to the stock market, or to the Government, or in what way?

Mr. LAWSON. Oh, no; not the stock market; I said to the Nation and to the administration—or to the administration I will put it. But I mean dangerous in a big, broad way. They might be damaging to our national affairs; they might create situations that would be most embarrassing. Now, I mean that just as fairly as you asked me the question; and I believe now, after going through this investigation as far as we have gone, that it would be a very serious affair, the bare mentioning of it. And that is my only reason for withholding it.

At another place Mr. Lawson states in answer to a question:

Question. Now, I ask you in a spirit of all fairness, because your answer might have some bearing on the action of this committee in making its report to the House. In case this committee favorably reports this resolution to the House, and the House adopts that resolution, and in accordance with that resolution the Speaker of the House appoints a committee to make a final and thorough investigation, will you now agree to give that committee the name of that Member of Congress and that member of the Cabinet to whom you referred in your testimony yesterday?

Mr. LAWSON. I will.

Question. You will?

Mr. LAWSON. I will.

Testimony of this character may lead to other important evidence.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if the motion to lay the Wood resolution on the table is voted down, I will offer, as a substitute, the following resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk:

Resolved, That a committee of five Representatives be appointed by the Speaker of the House to investigate and make report as to whether anyone with the executive or legislative branches of the Government of the United States profited financially, either directly or indirectly, by the fluctuations in the stock market occurring on Wednesday and Thursday, December 20 and 21, 1916, by reason of any advance information as to the President's note of December 18, 1916, or the two interpretations concerning the said note given to the public from the office of the Secretary of State; also, by public officials between November 15 and December 23, 1916.

And for such purpose it shall have power to send for persons and papers and enforce their appearance before said committee and to administer oaths, and shall have the right to make report at any time.

That resolution goes to the bottom of the matter.

Is it not more important that the Government should be above suspicion than that any person should remain in its service?

We can not afford here to-day to shield anyone for personal or partisan consideration by refusing to make an investigation of the charges that saturate the atmosphere and throw suspicion on the conduct of the officials of the Government. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Twenty-nine minutes.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, as a Member of this House I am not willing that this discussion shall go off upon false issues. Let us pause and take our bearings and proceed as becomes Representatives of the people.

Mr. Speaker, in a short time my career in this House will have ended, but I want to testify here to-day that I believe in the integrity and the honor of my colleagues upon both sides of this aisle.

Mr. Speaker, what is the real issue?—and the Democrats are ready to meet those gentlemen and the country on every issue that is involved in this controversy. They are not trying to suppress anything. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] on the 22d day of December introduced in this House a resolution, No. 420, and I want the Members to get it and consult it. In that resolution he said:

Resolved, That a committee of five Representatives be appointed by the Speaker of the House to investigate and make report as to whether or not anyone high in the administration of governmental affairs in the United States, or any relative of anyone high in authority in the administration of governmental affairs in the United States, profited financially, either directly or indirectly, by the fluctuation in the stock market occurring on Thursday, December 21, 1916, following the two contradictory interpretations given to the public from the office of the Secretary of State, concerning the note of the President of the United States, dated December 20, 1916, to the belligerent powers.

Gentlemen, that resolution is still pending before the Committee on Rules, and I turn to Mr. WOOD of Indiana and say now, "Come on with your charges and with your testimony, if you have any, and the Rules Committee is ready to investigate it."

He came and he failed. Then what happened? It occurs to the astute gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] that he will abandon this resolution that was introduced, and that he will use the parliamentary machinery of the House to bring here a privileged resolution which was sent to the Committee on Rules; that he will abandon the charge that there has been a leak at the White House or in the State Department, and that he will turn and put the membership of this House under suspicion.

Now, I am not willing for these gentlemen to turn that investigation to one of themselves. And let me appeal to you Democrats here to-day to hear me while I meet these outrageous charges and this infamous political conspiracy against the Democratic administration and the Democratic Party. Ah, one ex-President, Theodore Roosevelt, in the New York Times, says that he will lend his aid and comfort and power to Mr. GARDNER and Mr. WOOD to press this investigation. Why, gentlemen, the President was answering the note of the German Government and was seeking to bring about peace. These gentlemen want to embarrass him and tie his hands. Are you willing to do it? I appeal to you as Democrats, and I appeal to you as patriotic citizens.

What did this gentleman of great parliamentary skill do? Here is your resolution 420 still pending. Take it and read it, and see how far these gentlemen have gone afield. What is the privileged resolution forced through this House by the prostitution of the parliamentary machinery of this body?

Whereas Thomas W. Lawson, of Boston, gave to the public a statement which appears in the daily newspaper under date of December 28 and 29, 1916, in which he says, amongst other things, that "If it was actually believed in Washington there was to be a real investigation of last week's leak there would not be a quorum in either the Senate or House next Monday and a shifting of bank accounts similar to those in the good old sugar investigation days;" and in another statement which appears in the daily press of December 31, 1916, he says, "The good old Capitol has been wallowing in Wall Street leak grafts for 40 years, wallowing hale and hearty."

That is the only charge to be investigated. No charge against the executive department, but an endeavor to switch it to the House of Representatives.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY. I can not yield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. HENRY. Gentlemen, the committee sat for six days and took testimony, and when it was ended you gentlemen abandoned that resolution, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] offered a substitute which, in effect, said that the resolution should be laid upon the table.

Mr. BENNET. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY. No; I can not yield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] says that the Rules Committee has ended its investigations, and that Thomas W. Lawson——

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman from Wisconsin made no such statement. He said it had ended its investigation with reference to this resolution.

Mr. HENRY. All right. Now, gentlemen, they tried to make you believe that we have abandoned this investigation. What is the real status of this case? If Mr. WOOD has any testimony, or if you have any, bring it before the Committee on Rules; or if any Member wants to introduce another resolution and send it to that committee, we stand ready to take it up to-morrow and proceed with this investigation.

Mr. FARR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY. No. Now, I defy that side of the House. Introduce your resolution, or come forward with your proof if you have it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We defy you. You can not do it. Ah, but the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], for whom I have an affectionate regard, says that he in confidence proposed to name a man to whom Lawson had talked and who would give us the name of the Congressman and the Cabinet officer.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman from Wisconsin did not propose that name in confidence, and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. HENRY. I am glad you release us. Then I say to you, Mr. LENROOT, I am going to give the name; and I say to you now, Mr. LENROOT, bring on Donald McDonald, of Boston, and produce him before the Rules Committee and let him testify.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY. No; I can not yield. I say, bring on your witness and he will prove nothing. I said it in the Committee on Rules, and I say it now.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY. No; I can not yield.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman ought not to make misstatements.

Mr. HENRY. I say more. I say that the Committee on Rules is ready to proceed; and I say that for one, as chairman of that committee, I am ready and willing, and want this House to stand back of me, and we will examine Thomas W. Lawson before the Rules Committee, and if he does not answer and we have the power I am in favor of putting him in the common jail and keeping him there. [Applause.]

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY. No; I do not yield. You know that I have never said for an instant that Lawson should not be summoned for contempt. What is our power? What Member can tell here, after a casual reading of that statute, the power of Congress to deal with contempts? Thomas W. Lawson would come again, and he would say, as he said before the Committee on Rules, "If you do not broaden your investigation and make it so extensive that we can investigate the transactions on the New York Stock Exchange, I will stand mute and not answer your questions." He said, in effect, "I don't care a tinker's dam about your leak from the Executive department. What I want is an investigation of the infamies of the stock exchange." Do you gentlemen want it? Are you willing to vote for it?

MANY MEMBERS. Yes! Yes!

Mr. HENRY. All right.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have got such a resolution, and I will offer it to-day if you vote down this resolution.

Mr. HENRY. Put your resolution in the basket, and the Committee on Rules will be glad to take it up. I am not willing for these Republican Members here to be slandered and libeled by anyone, even——

Mr. FARR. How about Democrats?

Mr. HENRY. Oh, it is hard to slander the Democrats, because they are above suspicion. Now, Mr. Speaker, this Curtis letter came days after Mr. WOOD had introduced his resolution. We must now relegate that letter to the realms of mythological lore. No such a man as A. Curtis has been found. No one has been found who will father that infamous and libelous document produced before the Committee on Rules by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD]. He will not father it. He is ashamed that he introduced it, I am sure. Yet you ask this committee to take such testimony as that, when you can not find your witness, and you ask them to institute an investigation.

Now, let us reassure ourselves of our ground. Here is the resolution that they want you to adopt to-day. We offer to lay it on the table, just as the Committee on Rules, in effect, did in its deliberations; as the Republicans did when they offered a substitute for it. They abandoned it. It is of as much importance to-day as the original authority will be when the moral slanders are ended in this country.

Ah, it is easy enough to say that some good person in the neighborhood has lost his honor, and besmirch the character without giving names, and have every scandal monger in the neighborhood or in the church hunt for somebody of that sort. I have no concealment to make for my colleagues. I have nothing to suppress; I am ready to go forward, if you gentlemen are, and make this investigation. I am ready to let you write any resolution you want to and put it in the basket, and I pledge my sacred word and honor that to-morrow morning the Committee on Rules will be summoned, and we will summon your witnesses and make it as broad as you please. If you have any one witness, produce him, but do not make this contemptible political fight here. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I am standing for the rights of the House. I have no abuse to heap on the head of this poor misguided creature, Thomas W. Lawson. What did he say over and over again. He said, "If you call me before any committee on earth, I can not produce one scintilla of evidence that would be competent evidence that would involve the character of a Senator, a Cabinet officer, of a Representative in Congress, or of any high ambassador to some foreign court." He said he could not do it. He said, "I have no competent evidence to offer; all I can do is to offer you hearsay evidence."

Now, gentlemen, would you have your Committee on Rules report to this House when no evidence has been adduced that you have gambled in Wall Street or on the stock exchange; that you should be investigated and let the author of the original resolution escape from the position in which he has placed himself? What do you want? If you desire an investigation, this is not the way to get it. You can have it; there is no difficulty about that. Resolution 420 is still pending, and these contempt proceedings are still pending before that committee. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], myself, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] are a subcommittee to formulate the procedure. I am ready, Mr. CAMPBELL——

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HENRY. I can not.

The SPEAKER. It is against the rules for one Member to address another Member by his name.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I waive that if the gentleman will yield.

Mr. HENRY. I can not; I am ready when this debate ends to go into conference with you and to summon Thomas W. Lawson, if we have the power to bring him before the committee.

Mr. LENROOT. If we have the power!

Mr. HENRY. Does not the gentleman think we have the power?

Mr. LENROOT. Absolutely not.

Mr. HENRY. Why, then, do you criticize the committee for not trying to punish him?

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY. I will yield for a moment.

Mr. LENROOT. I want to say that the committee lost its power the moment the chairman introduced his motion this morning.

Mr. HENRY. That is the slimmest reason I ever heard. Lost its power! Then introduce another resolution. We will meet you to-morrow. You know it is a quibble and you know that we have not lost the power. We can go ahead with the investigation. I do not want, gentlemen, to burden you with any lengthy argument. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has five minutes.

Mr. HENRY. I do not want to burden you with a lengthy argument, but I want to assure you that when I make a pledge to you I intend to carry it out. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] says we are afraid of an investigation.

Mr. BENNET. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY. Yes.

Mr. BENNET. Yes; I said that and I repeat it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HENRY. Why?

Mr. BENNET. If you are not afraid, you would have summoned McKemman and McDonald, and you would have traced this thing back to its source. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HENRY. Now, gentlemen, let me tell you that when we had finished the testimony of the last witness yesterday morning the Chair said, "Gentlemen, have you another witness that you want to subpœna or produce? And they said, "No; not one." [Applause on the Democratic side.] Why, my friend ought to be ashamed to come before this House——

Mr. BENNET. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY. I can not yield. Look at the record. They were invited again and again to bring the witnesses, and you know it, but you did not do it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Here is what they know. They know that to investigate from now until doomsday they would not be able to prove anything against a Senator, anything against a Cabinet officer, anything against the President of the United States, or any of his subordinate officials, and they do not want any investigation. [Applause on the Democratic side.] They know that they would fail, but they think they have a political advantage backed up by an irresponsible scandal monger who thinks he has driven the House into a fight, and they are hoping that they may get out of this thing in some sort of an honorable way.

Now, gentlemen, in conclusion—and I address my remarks not only to Democrats but to Republicans—let us here now resolve that whenever these slanders and libels are uttered against Members to-day or hereafter, we will write across the brow of the slanderers and libelers in living letters that may be read everywhere, "Slanderer, liar, coward, and villain," as some of these have proved themselves to be. I ask you to put this resolution on the table where it belongs, and any Member that will introduce a resolution and produce the witnesses, we will go forward and punish any witness who fails to answer our questions.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me to ask him a question?

Mr. HENRY. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Is it the purpose of the Committee on Rules to go forward under this other resolution and make this investigation?

Mr. HENRY. As far as the chairman is concerned, it is my purpose to go until the end of the 4th of March if anyone can produce any testimony.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY. Yes.

Mr. FIELDS. Is it the purpose of the Committee on Rules to proceed to punish Thomas W. Lawson for contempt or make him answer the questions that he has refused to answer?

Mr. HENRY. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY. No; the gentleman can not make my speech.

Mr. LENROOT. But the gentleman should not speak for the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HENRY. Oh, yes; you do not want to go any further; you do not think we have the power.

Mr. FIELDS. It is the purpose of the committee to do that?

Mr. HENRY. I think we have the power, and if we can not punish him here, we will send him to the district attorney here and let the grand jury deal with him and put him in jail if we can.

Mr. FIELDS. That is the purpose of the committee?

Mr. HENRY. That is the purpose of the committee.

Mr. FIELDS. Then, as I understand it, the chairman of the committee does not consider that he has surrendered any of the rights of the House?

Mr. HENRY. I surrender them? I would not surrender the rights that belong to this House for anything under the sun. I would not waive any right that belongs to you, I stand by you.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY. I can not yield.

Mr. LENROOT. Just for one question.

Mr. HENRY. Very well.

Mr. LENROOT. By what authority does the gentleman speak for the Committee on Rules in making the statement he has made?

Mr. HENRY. By the authority that I have never known the Democratic members of this committee, or the Republican members either, to fail to do their duty when they knew it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas has one minute left.

Mr. HENRY. Gentlemen, let me adjure you, do not be swept away by these things. Your administration is honorable, these Members are honorable, there is no reason for all of this slander and vituperation. Stand by yourselves, defend your own honor, as I know you will, and as your chairman, as your agent, as your trustee, I give you my confidence, and take you into my confidence, and pledge you my sacred word that we will fight this fight through until we have done every thing that the Democratic Party should do. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, I move that resolution 429 do lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas that House resolution 429 do lie on the table.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. CANTRILL rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kentucky rise?

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a request, and that request is this: I am not in exact harmony with either side of this controversy, and so voted in the Committee on Rules. I rise for the purpose of making a request to the House for not to exceed 10 minutes in which to make a statement to the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky, a member of the Committee on Rules, asks unanimous consent that the motion to table be withheld for not to exceed 10 minutes, and that he be permitted to make a statement in those 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I want to say to the House that I would not ask for this privilege at this time except that I stand in a position alone as a member of the Committee on Rules, and I did not feel that I had the right to ask either side of this controversy for time because, of course, the time should be equally divided. I want to thank the House for the privilege of making this statement. I want to state that in the Committee on Rules I voted against the proposition to lay this resolution on the table. I ought to make that statement, I think, for this reason: This Committee on Rules is not making this investigation upon its own volition. It is making the investigation under the direct order of the House. I will say that as a member of the committee and as a Member of this House, in the beginning I would not have dignified these resolutions with an investigation by the Committee on Rules, but the House of Representatives thought differently and they instructed the Committee on Rules to proceed with the investigation. The Committee on Rules in accordance with the order of the House proceeded with the investigation. It is not my purpose now to criticize any Member of this House or any member of this administration, or to criticize anyone, because there has not been one single bit of evidence, so far presented to the Committee on Rules, which would in any way incriminate any Member of Congress or any member of the administration, and as one Member of the House and as a member of the Democratic Party I am not afraid to have every member of the Democratic administration go on record before the world in any examination, anywhere, as to what he may have done. [Applause.] But the facts in the case are these: The Committee on Rules had not gone into this investigation until by a vote of the House it was directed to do so. The Committee on Rules in proceeding with this investigation has absolutely no evidence, no scintilla of evidence, to incriminate anyone except one witness, Mr. Lawson, who comes before the Committee on Rules and, by insinuations and innuendo and by indirect statements, says that he will give to another committee made in the future the name of a Congressman who said certain things about certain members of this administration, Cabinet officers and others. The motion that I entered in the Committee on Rules and what I think ought to be done is this: This Committee on Rules is your agent, acting under your advice, and it was my idea that the Committee on Rules should report back to this House that they had received absolutely no intimation except from one witness and that witness declined to give the testimony to the Committee on Rules whereby the committee and this House could act intelligently.

Now, I think that report should have been made back to this House and then let the House determine what they would do with this witness, whether or not they would force him by giving to your agent, the Committee on Rules, the power to extract this testimony from him. [Applause.] Now, I think that is the correct procedure. I think so far as the dignity of this House is concerned that there is much more involved here than this mere investigation. Let the American Congress determine to-day for all time to come whether or not some citizen, some individual in the United States, can stand up in the public press with paid advertisements and heap calumny upon Members of Congress, and then a duly authorized committee of Congress to investigate those charges are met with the defiance that he will not testify. Let this Congress to-day, if it has the power, instruct the Committee on Rules to bring back Mr. Lawson before that committee and let that committee submit in writing the questions which Mr. Lawson failed to answer before the Committee on Rules and let that committee undertake to force him to answer them, and if he does not answer them let the Committee on Rules cite Mr. Lawson before the bar of this House and let the American Congress say whether it has more power [applause] than Mr. Lawson. What kind of report do we know to make to the House? We are acting as your agent. You told us to make this investigation. We have examined witness after witness, and there is not a particle of evidence to indict any member of the Democratic administration or any Member of Congress on either side of this aisle, not a particle of evidence; but here is a witness who says that he would tell. Now force him to tell, if you have the power. [Applause.] I am not a lawyer, I am just a plain farmer, but this Congress is made up of a lot of the best lawyers in the United States. Can not you gentlemen who are lawyers draft a resolution? If you can not draft a resolution, then this Congress ought to pass a law now, as soon as possible, to force testimony to be given before the committees of Congress.

Mr. HENRY. Will the gentleman yield just a moment? If the gentleman will ask unanimous consent that that instruction be given, I am perfectly willing that it be given to the Committee on Rules. [Applause.]

Mr. BENNET. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY. I hope my colleague will ask that.

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Speaker, I am simply stating what my views are on this proposition. When I conclude my views, and my time has about expired, the chairman of the Committee on Rules can make that request of the House. I am comparatively a new Member of this House.

Mr. BENNET. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANTRILL. Just in a second. I have only served in this House eight years. It is not my purpose or intention to undertake to override the will of the leaders of the House on this proposition, but I want this House to understand I do not take any stock in this talk that has been handed across the aisle here in a political way or a partisan way. There is much more involved than that, and I am not going to undertake to criticize the gentleman who offered this resolution. I have my individual views on that proposition, but I think it beneath my dignity as a Member of the House to impugn his motives [applause] and to say what any man's individual opinion should be, or any Member of this House. Here are the facts in this case. I for one speak for this side of the House, and I believe it is a mistake to stop this investigation now. [Applause.] I would never have dignified it in the beginning—I want to be plain about that—never in the beginning; but since having gone into it, when a man comes before the committee and says that he will give this information to another committee, I am going to be fair to both sides of this House, if the Committee on Rules, acting as your agent, not on this side but of the House, has authority, it should get that information. If this committee has not got this power, then give it the power. What is the use of us going to another committee or offering any other resolution? The House of Representatives can give the Committee on Rules the power now; and if you do give the committee the power, it will bring this man back before the committee. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended one minute in order that I may ask a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Kentucky be extended one minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I want the gentleman to let me ask in his time unanimous consent that the Committee on Rules be directed to report to the House the records of the proceedings showing the contumacy of the witness, Thomas W. Lawson, and to report forthwith and to invoke the judgment of the House of Representatives.

Mr. CANTRILL. Now, Mr. Speaker, just a moment in my time. The request I made of the House is this, that this witness, Lawson, be recalled before the committee and that the questions that he failed to answer be submitted to him in writing.

Mr. HENRY. I will put it that way.

Mr. CANTRILL. That those questions be put to him in writing, and if he declines to answer them, then let the Committee on Rules report. [Applause.]

Mr. HENRY. I say I will put it that way. Mr. Speaker, I put the request that way.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if the gentleman will include in that request a rereference of this resolution to the committee it will, of course, be in order, but otherwise the committee can have no power even for a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. HENRY. I make that request, too. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas will state his question again.

Mr. HENRY. I want the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL] to hear me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL] will give heed to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HENRY. I ask unanimous consent, then, that this resolution be rereferred to the Committee on Rules, and also that the committee be directed or instructed——

A MEMBER. Authorized.

Mr. HENRY. We have the authority. That it be directed to call before the committee again Thomas W. Lawson and again ask him the questions which he refused to answer, in writing; that those questions be reduced to writing and be again propounded to the witness; and that if he fails or refuses to answer them fully and completely, then the proceedings be reported to the House in order that the Committee on Rules may ask the judgment of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks——

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to make one suggestion.

Mr. HENRY. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman add to that that the committee require said Lawson to answer such questions?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make this suggestion to both gentlemen. It is perfectly proper, in my judgment, under the circumstances of these proceedings to rerefer this resolution to the Committee on Rules with instructions to report the resolution back within a limited time, but if you are going to base contempt proceedings or prosecutions for a misdemeanor upon loose talk like this in the record, you will never get very far with that. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, if the House will permit me, I would like to make a suggestion, because I think there is considerable confusion in the minds of men touching the power of the House to deal with a situation of this kind.

Men talk about contempt proceedings. The proceeding I think that ought to be taken, if you desire to obtain from Mr. Lawson the answers to the questions that he declined to answer, is to see to it that the resolution empowering the Committee on Rules to act is sufficiently broad to make the question or questions pertinent. Then, upon the refusal of Mr. Lawson or any other witness to answer, in my judgment, the House, and probably the committee, could cause such witness to be taken into custody and held until he does answer.

Now, if the House will indulge me a moment further, there is this distinction between that sort of proceeding and what is designated as a contempt proceeding. A contempt proceeding partakes of the nature of punishment, but the other proceeding is what the courts have frequently designated as one where the person imprisoned, holds the keys to his prison, can unlock the doors by doing the thing that he is required to do.

Now, to my mind it is inconceivable that a legislative body has not the inherent power to compel the doing of anything that is necessary to the performance of its proper functions, and on that ground if you will write a proper resolution as to the subject of the inquiry, the Committee on Rules can compel a witness to answer, and, failing that, it probably, or the House certainly, can commit him until he does answer.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit a suggestion, I do not know whether Mr. Lawson took the benefit of the advice of counsel or not. I should have a good deal of doubt about the power of the House to punish Mr. Lawson for contempt, or to require him to testify in answer to the questions that were submitted to him, under the privileged resolution which was referred with instructions to report back in 10 days. And if we are to undertake to compel Mr. Lawson to testify we ought to be fortified where we can require him to testify and not have our proceedings set aside by a court.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I would like unanimous consent to proceed for three or four minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, if this movement——

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, that does not waive this pending motion?

The SPEAKER. No; the pending motion is to suspend.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, if the action which seems to be in the minds of many gentlemen is to be taken, it occurs to me that it might not be a bad idea for the chairman of the committee to ask unanimous consent that this entire proceeding may be passed over until to-morrow. Now, that will give time within which to report this resolution under the instructions of the House. I want to say that I concur as a lawyer in the ideas that have been expressed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. I have not cared to enter into a discussion of those matters so far, because I have not thought that we had reached that question or would reach it at this time.

Gentlemen have come to me day after day while the Committee on Rules has been sitting and undergoing this fearful ordeal which the House imposed upon it, with the suggestion of "Why do you not send him to jail?" When their attention was respectfully called to the fact that there was some doubt as a legal proposition whether it could be done, impatience was indicated, and in some instances Members of the House who approached members of the committee concerning that were almost as insulting as Lawson himself was supposed to be.

Now, I want to say that if this House proposes to instruct the committee on this proposition, and if I am to be charged with any responsibility in connection with the report in that regard, I am extremely anxious that the instructions given by the House shall be very specific and very plain and very full. And I am under the impression that it might not be a bad idea for this matter to be passed over and give to gentlemen who desire to give instructions to the Rules Committee—and I do not want any responsibility in connection with that myself—to give the gentlemen who are desirous of instructing the Rules Committee the opportunity to prepare the instructions that they wish to be given. It is no trifling matter when an undertaking is made by the Congress to send one to prison. Lawson trifled with the House? Of course he did. The House by giving attention to it submitted its committee to his insults. [Applause.] The committee was acting as the agent of the House, and every Member of it felt the humiliation. But when gentlemen come in an effort to criticize the committee because it does not undertake to exercise a power concerning which there is great legal doubt, they should at least remember that some of us have given patient attention and thought to that question, and we hesitate to do it because we do not care to be made ridiculous by a court of the country.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARRETT. I will.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Tennessee appreciates what is apparently the temper of the House with reference to the matter. Does he not think that the committee having this matter under investigation ought to suggest to the House any needed authority that it might have and ask the House to give it by resolution any authority which it may need which it does not now have? And does the gentleman doubt that the House will do that, as a matter of course, without hesitation?

Mr. GARRETT. If that possibly can be done it would be a very good course to pursue to do it. My suggestion is, however, that if that course is to be taken there are 300 men here, many of them lawyers, all of them men of common sense, but men who on the whole can not be expected to deal with this question in the way it is necessary that it should be dealt with here in this large body at this time.

Mr. MANN. Of course, if the gentleman from Tennessee believes that the Committee on Rules can not define the authority that it needs to make this investigation, I should think we ought to send the matter to the Committee on the Judiciary, which has had experience and which knows how.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I ask for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would inquire of the gentleman——

Mr. GARRETT. Of course, Mr. Speaker, I have not indicated that the Committee on Rules can not report to the House what it thought was the power it needed. I would not like that idea to go abroad by anything that has been said by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. I have no objection, however, to referring it to the Committee on the Judiciary. I will say that.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to proceed for two minutes.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. LENROOT. Let me make my statement first?

Mr. HENRY. All right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest to the chairman that he present his unanimous-consent request in the way that I think will give us a solution of this difficulty. If the gentleman will ask now that this resolution be recommitted to the Committee on Rules I am sure that there will not be the slightest difficulty in the committee unanimously agreeing upon a resolution to be presented to this House, giving it the full authority, and thus remove any possible doubt concerning it.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, that is precisely what I rose to do. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that this resolution be recommitted to the Committee on Rules; and, pending the submission of that request by the Chair, I will state that the committee will be called to meet to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock to take up these questions.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, may I make a suggestion to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that it might be well to have the time extended?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; that is what I was getting at. This committee was required to report within 10 days, and those 10 days will expire to-morrow. I suggest to the gentleman that he ask to extend the time for the report to be made to the House.

Mr. HENRY. And that it report within 10 days.

Mr. GLASS rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Virginia rise?

Mr. GLASS. To ask permission to make an inquiry of the chairman of the Committee on Rules. If it is in order, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Rules what is the status of House resolution 420, which was referred to his committee? I make the inquiry, Mr. Speaker, because in my conception of the case Lawson is by no means the chief offender against the dignity and reputation of this House.

Mr. HENRY. I will answer the gentleman's question. The gentleman evidently did not hear my remarks a moment ago. That resolution is still pending, and the Committee on Rules can take it up at any time.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I renew my request.

The SPEAKER. What about; the time of reporting?

Mr. HENRY. And that the time be extended five days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] asks unanimous consent that the so-called Wood resolution, No. 429, together with the report thereon, be recommitted to the Committee on Rules, with instructions to report within five legislative days. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE (H. DOC. NO. 1796).

The SPEAKER. The Chair has a letter from the chief justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia with reference to certain matters submitted to him. It is in the nature of a claim, and by some inadvertence it was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. It ought to be re-referred to the Committee on Claims. Without objection, the reference will be changed.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Speaker, is that the decree in reference to the Anacostia Flats, which was transmitted some time ago—a decree in reference to the title to certain overflowed lands? I do not think that goes to the Committee on Claims. It might possibly go to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. It is the case of the United States against Littlefield, Alvord & Co. et al.

Mr. MANN. That is not a claim at all. That is a case where the Government is seeking to quiet the title of some lands. In quieting the title under the decree it is provided that certain sums shall be paid for buildings of some sort on the land. It is not a claim against the Government.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

There was no objection.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 10384) to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama calls up the conference report on the immigration bill. The Clerk will report it and read the report.

Mr. BENNET rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. BENNET. To make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BENNET. At what stage in the proceedings should a point of order be made against this conference report? My recollection is after the reading of the report and before the reading of the statement.

The SPEAKER. That is correct.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1266).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 10384, "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 6, 7, and 35.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 29, 30, 31, 33, 34, 36, and 37, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed insert the following: "unless otherwise provided for by existing treaties, persons who are natives of islands not possessed by the United States adjacent to the Continent of Asia, situate south of the twentieth parallel of latitude north, west of the one hundred and sixtieth meridian of longitude east from Greenwich, and north of the tenth parallel of latitude south, or who are natives of any country, Province, or dependency situate on the Continent of Asia west of the one hundred and tenth meridian of longitude east from Greenwich and east of the fiftieth meridian of longitude east from Greenwich and south of the fiftieth parallel of latitude north, except that portion of said territory situate between the fiftieth and the sixty-fourth meridians of longitude east from Greenwich and the twenty-fourth and thirty-eighth parallels of latitude north, and no alien now in any way excluded from, or prevented from entering, the United States shall be admitted to the United States"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out insert the following:

"SEC. 11a. That the Secretary of Labor is hereby authorized and directed to enter into negotiations, through the Department of State, with countries vessels of which bring aliens to the United States, with a view to detailing inspectors and matrons of the United States Immigration Service for duty on vessels carrying immigrant or emigrant passengers between foreign ports and ports of the United States. When such inspectors and matrons are detailed for said duty they shall remain in that part of the vessel where immigrant passengers are carried; and it shall be their duty to observe such passengers during the voyage and report to the immigration authorities in charge at the port of landing any information of value in determining the admissibility of such passengers that may have become known to them during the voyage."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed insert the following:

"All aliens coming to the United States shall be required to state under oath the purposes for which they come, the length of time they intend to remain in the United States, whether or not they intend to abide in the United States permanently and become citizens thereof, and such other items of information regarding themselves as will aid the immigration officials in determining whether they belong to any of the excluded classes enumerated in section 3 hereof."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 32: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 32, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate insert the following: "taken up his permanent residence in this country"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 38: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed insert the following: "July 1, 1917"; and the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN L. BURNETT,
E. A. HAYES,
Managers on the part of the House.
E. D. SMITH,
THOMAS W. HARDWICK,
H. C. LODGE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the House bill (H. R. 10384), regulating the immigration of aliens, submit the following detailed statement in explanation of the effect agreed upon and recommended in the conference report:

Amendment numbered 1: Amendment numbered 1 provides that the act shall be enforced in the Philippine Islands by officers of the general government thereof unless and until it is superseded by an act passed by the Philippine Legislature as authorized in the Philippine government act. The purpose of this, of course, is to avoid any conflict between this act and the recently passed Philippine government act.

Miscellaneous unimportant amendments: Amendments numbered 2, 3, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 24, 25, 26, 27, 29, 30, 31, 33, 34, 36, and 37, with respect to all of which it is recommended that the House recede from its disagreement and agree to the same, are merely changes perfecting the text by correcting clerical and grammatical errors and errors of punctuation or improving the language without materially changing its effect or bringing different provisions into textual consonance with each other. These, therefore, call for no special comment.

Amendment numbered 4: The effect of amendment numbered 4, with respect to which it is recommended that the Senate recede, would be to exclude aliens whose intention it is to return to the country whence they come, after temporarily engaging in laboring pursuits in the United States, and those who, after having been admitted to the United States, return to the country whence they came, there to reside or for the purpose of taking part in any war in which such country is involved, unless aliens of the said two descriptions were otherwise qualified for admission and came voluntarily from contiguous foreign territory to seek employment in harvesting crops. Although of apparently but slight practical value because its enforcement would necessitate the accurate ascertainment of the intention of the persons thereby affected, it would not have been difficult for the committee of conference to have agreed to the first part of this amendment (to the second there would seem to be additional obvious objections); but on the attention of the committee being directed to the fact that the entire amendment is in conflict with treaties between the United States and certain foreign countries the recommendation that the Senate recede was determined upon. While amendments numbered 23 and 28 were inserted by the Senate largely because of the insertion of this amendment they both seem useful in themselves and, with the change suggested in that numbered 28, unobjectionable.

Amendment numbered 5: Concerning the effect of Senate amendment numbered 5, with respect to which it is recommended that the House recede from its disagreement and agree to the same with amendments, it should be pointed out that two separate and distinct provisions are involved:

(a) The managers on the part of the House agree to so much of this amendment—inserted by the Senate Committee on Immigration—as substitutes for the provision contained in the bill as passed by the House excluding Hindus and persons who can not become eligible for naturalization, a provision excluding aliens who are natives of certain islands and mainland territory of Asia defined by longitudinal and latitudinal lines; but with an amendment to the Senate amendment by which a parallel of latitude is selected to form the northern boundary of the continental territory defined, so that Siberia will be excluded therefrom.

(b) So much of this Senate amendment—inserted on the floor of the Senate—as purports to be a nonrepealing clause could not be agreed to in the form in which proposed because it was found, on carefully considering its relation to other parts of the act, that much inconsistency and confusion would be created thereby. It is sufficient to point out that the matter proposed would render the next succeeding provision of the act incorrect in its reference to "the provision next foregoing," and would be in direct conflict with section 38 of the act containing a carefully drawn nonrepealing clause. Therefore the recommendation is made for the insertion, not as a separate provision but as a part of the provision excluding by geographical lines, of words calculated to accomplish the purpose the latter part of the Senate amendment has in view.

Amendment numbered 6: This amendment is closely related to the preceding one. The conclusion to recommend that the Senate recede therefrom was reached because the difficulty intended to be met thereby is solved by the suggested amendment to amendment numbered 5 fixing a northern boundary for the territory geographically defined, taken in conjunction with the exempting provision to which amendment number 6 relates.

Amendment numbered 7: The effect of this amendment, from which it is recommended that the Senate recede, would be to require that aliens who might claim exemption from the operation of the "illiteracy clause" on the ground that they were fleeing from religious persecution should show that the persecution had been such as to deny them the means or opportunity to obtain an education.

Amendments numbered 8 and 9: With respect to both of these amendments the recommendation is that the House recede from its disagreement. The principal effect of amendment numbered 8 and of the latter part of amendment numbered 9 is to remove from the law provisions calculated to encourage aliens to declare for ulterior purposes their intention to become citizens of the United States. The first part of amendment numbered 9 strikes from the bill a provision of a retaliatory nature contained therein when it passed the House, authorizing immigration officials to exclude from the United States, whenever any foreign country contiguous thereto excludes certain classes of United States citizens, similar classes of citizens of such contiguous foreign country.

Amendment numbered 22: By this amendment the Senate proposed to strike from the measure all of section 11a. When the immigration bill H. R. 6060 was under consideration in the Sixty-third Congress, the eleventh section thereof was worded substantially the same as section 11a, inserted in this measure on the floor of the House. But it was found advisable to change section 11 of that bill to read substantially as section 11 of the present measure reads, because objection had been made by certain foreign countries to the detailing of inspectors and matrons of the United States Immigration Service for duty on vessels sailing under the flags of such foreign countries. The effect of the amendment now proposed to the Senate amendment will be to authorize the Secretary of Labor to negotiate with foreign countries with a view to accomplishing the principal objects of section 11a as passed by the House.

Amendments numbered 23 and 28: One of the purposes of these amendments was to give effect to amendment numbered 4, from which, for reasons hereinbefore stated, it was concluded to recommend that the Senate recede. However, as before stated, that recommendation regarding amendment numbered 4 does not destroy the value of these two amendments and requires only a slight change in the latter of them.

Amendment numbered 32: The effect of the recommendation that the House recede from its disagreement to this amendment and agree to the same with the suggested amendment is to permit any alien who, after taking up a permanent residence in this country, sends for his wife or minor child to join him, to have such wife or child, if found on arrival to be afflicted with an easily curable disease, treated in the hospital at the station where examined until cured, or admitted if it is found that admission can occur without danger to other persons.

Amendment numbered 35: The recommendation that the Senate recede from this amendment does not involve any change in the meaning of the act. Section 3 provides for the exclusion of aliens convicted or who admit the commission of crimes involving moral turpitude and also for the exclusion of certain other carefully described classes closely related to the criminal class. But a proviso is attached to said section exempting from exclusion all of those who have been convicted, or who admit the commission, or who teach or advocate the commission of political offenses. The clause to which amendment numbered 35 relates makes it a misdemeanor to assist a member of one of the said excluded classes to enter. Of course no one could be prosecuted for assisting in the entry of one who was within the exempting clause, for such person would have a right to enter.

Amendment numbered 38: The effect of this amendment is to fix the date of the taking effect of the act as July 1, 1917.

JOHN L. BURNETT,
E. A. HAYES,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the conference report, on the ground that the conferees exceeded their authority in connection with an amendment to section 38, the amendment being No. 38, found on page 67 of the print of the bill before the House. The situation is this——

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, if there are other points of order to which the gentleman thinks the conference report is subject I hope he will raise them at the present time, because if the Chair should rule out the conference report, it would be a pity to bring it back and each time it is presented have points of order raised against it.

Mr. BENNET. That would be sad, indeed.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise some points of order. Will the Chair have them now?

The SPEAKER. When the gentleman from New York gets through with his point of order, then the Chair will hear any other gentleman.

Mr. BENNET. It is worth while to serve in this Congress to hear the gentleman from Massachusetts raise points of order against a conference report on the immigration bill, and I will not deprive him of that pleasure.

My point of order is this: In line 19, page 67, as the bill passed the House it provided that the act shall take effect after July 1, 1916. When the bill got to the Senate the Senate struck out that date and inserted the words "May 1, 1917." To that in due course the House disagreed. When it got into conference the conferees inserted the date July 1, 1917.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman state those three dates again?

Mr. BENNET. The three dates are these: The House date is July 1, 1916; the Senate date is May 1, 1917; the conference date is July 1, 1917.

The present Speaker ruled on this precise point on the 2d day of March, 1915, the point being raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] on page 5201 of the RECORD of March 2, 1915, being sustained by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] in an argument on page 5202, and also by other gentlemen. The Chair sustained the point of order in a brief but luminous decision on page 5208.

The SPEAKER. Now, does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] desire to interpose any other points of order?

Mr. GARDNER. I desire to raise two other points of order, so that we may have them all determined at once. I do this, not because I wish to delay the consideration of this conference report, but in order to make sure that at some future time these other two points shall not be brought forward to delay us in case the Chair to-day sustains the point of order of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

First, I raise the point of order that the conferees have exceeded their authority by inserting in amendment No. 5 the following words:

> And no alien now in any way excluded from or prevented from entering the United States shall be admitted to the United States.

I raise the point of order that in inserting those words the conferees have exceeded their powers.

Mr. SABATH. What amendment is that?

Mr. GARDNER. Amendment No. 5.

Mr. BENNET. The words are found on page 2 of the conference report. They are not in the printed bill.

Mr. GARDNER. On amendment No. 22 I raise the further point of order that the matter inserted, giving the Secretary of Labor authority to enter into certain negotiations, was not within the compass of the matters of difference between the two Houses.

Mr. Speaker, I believe both the points of order that I am making are unsound. I believe the Speaker should overrule them, but I wish to be heard on them, so that all these points of order may be decided to-day and not strung along on different days.

The SPEAKER. Well, the gentleman is not saving the Chair any trouble in the premises.

Mr. GARDNER. I shall discuss my points of order from the adverse point of view if the Chair so desires.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not need to hear any argument about it.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, taking the first amendment, No. 5, page 2, of the conference report, it is true that the phrase—

> And no alien now in any way excluded from or prevented from entering the United States shall be admitted to the United States—has been inserted by the conferees. As the bill passed the House it provided for the exclusion of Hindus and persons who can not become eligible under existing law to become citizens of the United States by naturalization, unless otherwise provided for by existing agreements as to passports or by existing treaties, conventions, or agreements that may hereafter be entered into.

The Senate struck that provision out and inserted a text in lieu thereof. I desire to call the Speaker's attention to the last four lines of the text inserted, which are as follows:

> Nothing in this act shall be construed to repeal any existing law, treaty, or agreement, in so far as such law, treaty, or agreement serves to prohibit or restrict immigration into the United States or any possession thereof.

In other words, the Senate said: "We do not like the wording of this clause excluding Hindus and other persons. We are going to put the matter in another form, which will not be offensive to anybody." So the Senate, among other things, inserted the four lines which I have just read you. In other words, according to the Senate clause all immigration laws now in existence to-day are to be continued in so far as they are restrictive laws, in so far as they exclude anybody from admission into the United States. It is often stated that at present, under what is generally called a gentlemen's agreement, Japanese coolies are excluded from coming to this country. As a matter of fact, these coolies are excluded by law and not by the gentlemen's agreement. The gentlemen's agreement simply carries out the law without friction. By the act of February 20, 1907, it was provided—

> That whenever the President shall be satisfied that passports issued by any foreign government to its citizens to go to any country other than the United States or to any insular possession of the United States or to the Canal Zone are being used for the purpose of enabling the holders to come to the continental territory of the United States to the detriment of labor conditions therein, the President may refuse to permit such citizens of the country issuing such passports to enter the continental territory of the United States from such other country or from such insular possessions or from the Canal Zone.

It is under that provision of law that certain coolies are excluded.

On February 24, 1913, President Wilson issued a proclamation, in which he said:

> Whereas by the act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved February 20, 1907, when the President is satisfied—

And so forth, and so forth—

> I hereby order that such alien laborers, skilled or unskilled, be refused permission to enter the continental territory of the United States.

That proclamation the President made under the law, not under the gentleman's agreement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman that Mr. Wilson was not President in February, 1913.

Mr. GARDNER. I should have said President Taft. Now, Mr. Speaker, the point of order is as follows: There are those who fear—I do not know how much I express their feeling correctly by saying that they "fear"—the effect of this langunge inserted by the conferees:

> And no alien now excluded from or prevented from entering the United States shall be admitted to the United States.

Their point is that that text will exclude certain parties whom neither the House text nor the Senate text would exclude and that therefore the conferees have exceeded their authority.

Now as to the point of order on amendment No. 22. When this bill passed the House it provided that the Secretary of Labor, whenever he saw fit, should order United States surgeons and matrons on board vessels taking aliens away from this country or bringing them into this country. The Senate felt that such a provision gave the Secretary of Labor power which he had no right to exercise outside the confines of the United States. At all events, the Senate struck out this clause which gave to the Secretary of Labor the power to put surgeons and matrons on board immigrant ships.

When the conferees got together they adopted a provision under which the Secretary of Labor is authorized to enter into negotiations through the Department of State with foreign nations for the purpose of arranging matters so that immigrant ships will, in case of necessity, carry American inspectors and matrons. When these agreements are made inspectors and matrons are to be detailed, and so forth and so on. Obviously it is true that there was no mention in either House or Senate text of any negotiations with foreign nations, nevertheless this new provision is a limitation on the power of the Secretary of Labor, and it does not introduce new matter.

On June 13, 1912, the present Speaker made a ruling, which may be found in section 942 of the Manual. In this opinion he lays down certain general principles with regard to the powers of conferees. Speaker CLARK says:

> There are two general rules governing conferences. The first is that conferees can not inject into a bill an absolutely new subject—

Obviously the question of matrons and surgeons on board immigrant vessels is not an absolutely new subject, since the House dealt with it originally—and the second is that what they do inject into a bill must be germane.

We now come to the point of order of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET], with regard to the date fixed by the conferees when this bill is to go into effect.

I have not as yet had a spare moment in which to examine narrowly the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 2, 1915. If, however, on that occasion I successfully maintained, under similar circumstances, that the conferees had exceeded their powers, I am afraid that I can not make a very good argument in opposition to my own prior views on the subject. [Laughter.] But there is this to be said. In the case in question the House of Representatives passed a bill carrying for a certain purpose an appropriation of $100. The Senate inserted an amendment making it $1,000.

Mr. BENNET. That is not the decision; that is the gentleman's argument.

Mr. GARDNER. This is the argument of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. Will the gentleman from New York state what that precise question was?

Mr. BENNET. The question was this: The House passed a bill in which sections 1, 2, 3, and 4 took effect at a certain time. The Senate amended it and made it two years after the passage of the bill. The matter went to conference, and the conferees struck out two years and inserted three years, and the Chair held, following the very able contention of two gentlemen on the other side of the aisle, that the conferees could not go outside of the dates, that they could not go below one or above the other, and when they extended the time beyond two years they exceeded their powers, and the point of order must be sustained. What the gentleman is stating is the argument that was used at that time.

Mr. GARDNER. You say that the House provided one date for the law to go into effect, and the Senate provided a different date, and the conferees provided a third date more remote than either. When the bill which you cite was sent to conference, had the date fixed by the House or the date fixed by the Senate been already passed?

Mr. BENNET. No.

Mr. GARDNER. But when this immigration bill was committed to the conferees the date for it to take effect as originally provided in the House bill had already gone by. When we sent this bill to conference the House knew that it could not go into effect on July 1, 1916, and yet that was the date specified in the House text. The House knew that fact for the very good reason that July 1, 1916, had long since passed. Consequently, it is clear that the House knowingly sent to conference a bill containing a House provision which was null and void, just as much so as if the date of effectiveness had been left blank. Meanwhile the Senate had proposed that the bill should go into effect on May 1, 1917. The House on the one hand goes into conference with no future date of effectiveness named, and the Senate goes into conference naming the date of May 1, 1917. The conferees decided to make the act effective on July 1, 1917. I submit that this is an entirely different case from that which the gentleman from New York has cited.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, of course the rule is well settled that conferees have no authority to inject new matter into a bill, and they have no authority, as a general rule, to go below or above the amount named in the original text or in the amendment or beyond the date named in the original text or amendment where that constitutes the essence of the bill. The case cited by the gentleman from New York was the shipping bill, where it was of the very essence of the bill whether it should take effect at once or in two years or in three years or some further time. Everyone knows as a matter of convenience in the transaction of public business that it is essential in bills of this character that a date in the near future be fixed for bills to take effect. That is not the essence of the law at all; it is more a matter of convenience.

Now, this bill—I do not remember when it was introduced, but I suppose it was introduced at an early day and passed the House April 8, 1916. At that time it provided that it should take effect July 1, 1916, about three months ahead. It passed the Senate on December 14, and as amended by the Senate provided that it should take effect on May 1, about three months ahead, a convenient time for the preparation of the enforcement of the law. That is not of the essence of the law at all. That does not constitute one of the features of the law. That is more a matter of convenience in the administration of the law and preparing for its administration. The conferees provided that it should take effect on July 1, a reasonable time ahead.

Suppose that the Senate had said that the law shall take effect on January 1, it having passed the Senate on December 14. Would it not be rather foolish to say that nobody had the power to change the date when the law takes effect, if it does not take effect until after January? Yet that is the position we would be left in if the contention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] should prevail. I think that a little common sense injected into parliamentary law is always valuable. It always has seemed to me that propositions of parliamentary law were based upon logic, following out one step after another; and following out in that way, I think the conferees had the power to change this date when this act should take effect, it not being the essence of the act at all; and while I think there are probably no decisions upon that subject I believe it would be wise for the Speaker to make one and hold that the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. BENNET rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York desire to be heard simply upon the point that he raised himself?

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be heard on one of the points raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], and if the Chair has any doubt about the point I raised myself, I would like to be heard upon that. First, upon one of the points raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts. I think that parliamentary law ought to be treated seriously, and with that in view, when I came back to Congress I read and was enlightened by every decision which the present occupant of the chair has made since he came into the chair, and I find that he takes parliamentary law seriously. I am not accusing the gentleman from Massachusetts of not taking parliamentary law seriously. I want to concede at once that one of his points of order, as to which he did me the honor of making me the object of suspicion that I might raise it, is unsound, and that is the point of order that amendment No. 22 as it came from the conference violated the powers of the conferees. It does not. The conferees, I regret to say, clearly had that power, because, as the Chair has ruled three or four times in the last three Congresses, it is the subject matter that governs, and the subject matter there was the placing of immigrant inspectors and matrons on steamers, and where the House put them on definitely and the Senate struck the whole thing out the conferees unquestionably had the right to empower the Secretary to make an investigation. I do not think there is any question about that.

As to amendment No. 5, I think the gentleman from Massachusetts, purely by accident, has made a point of order that is perfectly good. Let us see what this thing is that the Senate put in. What the Senate put in is this:

Nothing in this act shall be construed to repeal any existing law, treaty, or agreement in so far as such law, treaty, or agreement serves to prohibit or restrict immigration into the United States or any possession thereof.

That is what might be called a safety provision, that if by accident they had put anything in this act which could be construed to repeal any existing law, treaty, or agreement, in so far as such law, treaty, or agreement serves to prohibit immigration into the United States or any possession thereof, that it should not have been done. That is rather clumsy legislation, but, nevertheless, the Senate put it there. The conferees adopted another form of English, covering an entirely different subject. Omitting all reference to anything in the act, they made a complete, substantive provision which would be a complete statute if it stood by itself. They omitted that language entirely and inserted a new substantive provision, as follows:

No alien now in any way excluded from or prevented from entering the United States shall be admitted to the United States.

I call the attention of the Chair at the thre hold to the fact that the language that I have read would, standing by itself, be a complete law, while the language stricken out in the bill—

Nothing in this act shall be construed to repeal any existing law, treaty, or agreement in so far as such law, treaty, or agreement serves to prohibit or restrict immigration to the United States or any possession thereof—is a limitation on another act. They are as far apart as the antipodes, as the North and the South Poles.

The SPEAKER. How are they dissimilar? Does not the language of the Senate and the language of the conference report come to the same thing in the end?

Mr. BENNET. No. I shall demonstrate that to the Chair by some documents issued by the Bureau of Labor. I hold in my hand immigration bulletin for November, 1916, in which is contained a list, Table No. 7, of the persons excluded from this country from July, 1916, to November, 1916, under existing law. This language that has been put in here provides, getting it down to a particular man, that no alien—that is, none of these eleven or twelve thousand aliens—now in any way excluded from or prevented from entering the United States shall be admitted to the United States. It makes them outcasts and pariahs, so far as the United States Government is concerned, forever. The law as put in by the Senate does nothing of the sort. It simply provides that nothing in the whole bill shall be construed to repeal any existing law, treaty, or agreement, in so far as such law, treaty, or agreement serves to prohibit or restrict immigration into the United States or any possession thereof. One operates on a statute and the other operates on a person.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BENNET. In a moment. If there was not any difference, why the change in language? If the Chair wants a reason why they made the change in language, on page 8 of the same bill as it passed the Senate we find this language:

> The provision next foregoing, however, shall not apply to white persons.

So they did not need any provision in there keeping out persons; all they wanted to guard against was any change in the law. When the bill went to conference the conferees disagreed about that provision which let in white persons, and so as to make their own law apply only to Japanese and persons who had been excluded they dropped all reference to statutes and used this very apposite language to keep out the Japanese and other excluded persons:

> No alien now in any way excluded from or prevented from entering the United States shall be admitted to the United States.

The provisions are absolutely different. I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman state a single class of immigrants that is excluded by the wording of the conference phrase that is not excluded by the wording of the Senate phrase?

Mr. BENNET. Yes; I will. A person who comes to this country charged with being liable to become a public charge and is excluded for that reason can go back abroad and at the expiration of a year he can come again, and he is not excluded if at that time he is not liable to become a public charge. A person who comes to this country suffering from a contagious disease and is excluded for that reason can and does, as the records of the Immigration Bureau will bear out, go back to the country from which he came, is treated for the disease, recovers from it, and comes again to this country. There are two cases. Every alien who sailed out of New York Harbor to-day or yesterday, or who sails to-morrow, excluded under existing law because he is liable to become a public charge or afflicted with a contagious disease, if this law is adopted is forever excluded. We all know why this language is here. It has been brought out there is a desire on the part of certain persons in this country that the number of Japanese in this country should not be enlarged. Now, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] detailed the history of the existing statute under which the Japanese people do not come to this country, and I want to say the fact they do not come in in a larger measure than they do is a source of high credit to the faith-keeping pledges of the Japanese Nation. This provision is very cleverly worded so as to put the forbidding clause against persons: "No alien now in any way excluded from"—that is the "gentleman's agreement" the gentleman from Massachusetts cited—"no alien now in any way excluded from or prevented from entering the United States shall be admitted to the United States"; and so it is a provision against persons absolutely and not merely a limitation upon a legislative provision. The act says:

> Nothing in this act shall be construed to repeal any existing law, treaty, or agreement in so far as such law, treaty, or agreement serves to prohibit or restrict immigration into the United States or any possession thereof.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BENNET. I will.

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman says that if a diseased alien comes to this country and is excluded under the present law he goes back abroad and recovers and is entitled to admission he can come again. The gentleman is an able lawyer and we will suppose that this law passes as it comes from the conference committee. Does the gentleman think that the Commissioner of Immigration will put any such construction on that clause as would exclude a healthy laborer merely because at some prior attempt to gain admission to this country he had been suffering from a contagious disease?

Mr. BENNET. It would depend upon how good a lawyer that Commissioner General was.

Mr. GARDNER. Suppose he is as good a lawyer as the gentleman?

Mr. BENNET. If he is as good as I am, he will do what I say.

Mr. HAYES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HAYES. I want to ask the gentleman if he has read the statute and does not know this statute, if it becomes a law, provides in the case the gentleman mentions that this man would not be excluded at all?

Mr. BENNET. My friend from California——

Mr. HAYES. The law permits, in another place, such persons of both classes to which the gentleman refers to make application to the immigration authorities and permits their admission. Now, no lawyer or administrator of law is going to construe one part of a statute, which is plainly not intended to reach that at all and does not with any sort of reasonable construction, to nullify another positive provision of the statute.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, my friend from California was a good lawyer before——

Mr. HAYES. I do not claim to be a good lawyer like the gentleman from New York, but I do claim to have a little sense in matters of this kind—horse sense.

Mr. BENNET. I started to say the gentleman from California was a good lawyer before he started in on his present highly successful business and legislative career. I do not even say he has ceased to be a good lawyer, but the gentleman is somewhat biased by locality. There is a prejudice against—I will not say that—I will stop there. I do not think the people of California are highly anxious to have the Japanese people come in, and I think the gentleman from California always well represents his people. He can take that as a compliment or a criticism, as he pleases. But anyone who studies this language must say that if the two things mean the same thing, why do they change the language, and can it possibly be contended that the language of the bill as inserted by the Senate, which is the commonest sort of limitation applying to the laws and legislation, can be taken to be an equivalent of the language of the conference report, which, by the use of well-chosen words of the briefest kind, applies grimly and decisively to persons and to persons only? The gentleman says language in the other parts of the bill will let these people in, anyway. That is rather a hard criticism on the bill if you let in people in one part of the bill and keep them out in another. I think the construction of the statute, although I do not stake my reputation as a lawyer on this, is that the court would be very apt to give effect to that part of the law that was last placed in the statute as disclosed by the journals of the two Houses. I think that is a fairly reasonable construction.

Mr. Speaker, I have concluded. I know the point of order I made is well taken. If it were worth while to argue it the gentleman from Illinois is answered by the Chair. The argument of the gentleman from Illinois is in a suppositious case that this Congress might not be able to act except by a concurrent resolution.

That is what the Chair said a prior Congress was driven to by law. The Chair said:

> Unless the memory of the Chair is badly out of condition, this thing happened when the Payne bill was passed: There were certain amendments in controversy. The House fixed the rate on shoes, and so forth, at 15 per cent, and the Senate fixed it at 20 per cent. I have heard—I do not know that it is true, but from what happened afterwards I believe it to be true—that President Taft notified the conferees that if they did not cut that rate on boots and shoes to 10 per cent he would not sign the bill. I know that the House passed a resolution in order to enable the conferees to cut the rate down to 10.
> As far as the suggestion made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] is concerned, that where everything after the enacting clause is struck out, then the conferees have carte blanche to bring in a bill; but that is not this case here. The House never did strike out everything after the enacting clause in the Weeks bill. It practically agreed to the Weeks bill, which has really been in conference only technically. But the limit of time was fixed at two years, and the conferees extended it to three years. If they could extend it beyond two years, they could extend it until the end of time. Their limit was from zero to two. In the nature of things they could not go below zero; under the practice of the two Houses they could not go higher.

Furthermore, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] says this change in date is not a matter of substance. The facts of the bill have escaped the recollection of the gentleman from Illinois, evidently. This bill raises the head tax on aliens from $4 to $8. This change in the conference puts the time when the bill goes into effect back two months beyond the further date, that placed by the Senate. At the same time in those two months there has come into this country, and those are good months, May and June——

Mr. HAYES. The gentleman does not want to make a misstatement. The conferees extended the time two months. They gave two months more time.

Mr. BENNET. They gave two months more time to the $4 men. And, as I was about to say, assuming in those two months, May and June, there should come into this country 50,000 aliens, the conferees' change would cost the Treasury of the United States $200,000. If there was only one alien to come in, it would cost the Treasury $4. Now, $200,000 may not be a matter of substance. It is to me; it may not be to other gentlemen. At any rate, I submit it is not within the province of the Chair, and I submit it respectfully, and the Chair will agree with me, to pass on the weight of the different portions of the bill. The Chair is empowered to pass on the question of whether the conferees inserted in the bill language which they were not given the power to insert in the bill. And on this almost precise point the Chair ruled and sustained a point of order which was almost exactly similar, under almost precisely the same conditions as that raised by me. Now, in concluding, I think the point raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] as to amendment No. 5 is a well-raised point, and I know that the point that is raised by myself in connection with amendment No. 38 is well raised.

Mr. KENT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, unless the Chair does not desire it, I would like to address a few words to the point of order raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] on amendment No. 5. I think I am making no improper statement when I say that the conferees did not insert the language which has been objected to in the place of the language to be found in lines 18 to 21, page 8, of the bill. The language inserted by the conferees, which has been read, was inserted in place of a part of the House provision which was stricken from the bill by the Senate, at the bottom of page 7 and at the top of page 8:

> Hindus and persons who can not become eligible, under existing law, to become citizens of the United States by naturalization, unless otherwise provided for by existing agreements as to passports, or by existing treaties, conventions, or agreements, or by treaties, conventions, or agreements that may be hereafter entered into.

As I have said, that language the Senate has stricken from the bill, and the conferees inserted in place of part of it the following:

> And no alien now in any way excluded from or prevented from entering the United States shall be admitted to the United States.

The purpose and the effect of the House language was to exclude all orientals. Those are the only aliens that could possibly be operated upon by that provision. Now, the Senate struck this out and incorporated a geographical exclusion provision, which excluded all Asiatic people excepting only the coolies of Japan, and left the laboring people of Japan to be excluded by the gentlemen's agreement now in force between this country and Japan. The House conferees objected to leaving that possible avenue of immigration open in case the gentlemen's agreement should for any reason be annulled, either by the agreement of the parties, or by the act of one party, or by lapse of time; therefore we added to the language of the Senate making the geographical exclusion the words that I last read, in order to provide for exclusion in case the agreement now in force between the two nations should for any reason come to an end.

The language of the House, if the Speaker will notice, would exclude all Asiatics except those who are excluded by agreement or by treaty, and the language is so worded that if the treaty should for any reason be annulled or come to an end, immediately the language of the House bill would become effective and exclude under the law; and the language which was inserted by the conferees has precisely the same result, and no other.

The language used by the conferees is supposed to be less objectionable to those proposed to be excluded, but does not affect any class of aliens not affected by the House bill. It is therefore clearly not subject to the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule on all three of these points. He overrules both points made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Now, on this other point, about this trouble as to time, it is unnecessary for the Chair to state that he dislikes exceedingly to knock a conference report out on a point of order, especially a conference report that involves great and interesting subjects. But it seems to the Chair that it is better to have a rule and stick to it than to have a variety of decisions about the very same point involved.

This case on the question of time is almost exactly on all fours with the decision the present incumbent of the chair rendered on the shipping bill. That was a question about time. That was a very important subject, too, and so is this one.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, will the Chair hear me for a moment there?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. That was an impossibility—the date fixed by the House and the time fixed by the conference. Therefore, it seems to me, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, that it is not a question of going between the lowest date and the highest date, because there is a date that does not exist. It is an impossible date with reference to the time the Senate acted upon it, and it does not fall within the rule under the decision of the Chair previously.

The SPEAKER. If any date had not been named, of course everybody knows the bill would go into effect on the day it is signed by the President.

Now, as to the shipping bill, the Chair had on his side the luminous opinion of both the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER]. That was a well-considered opinion, and the Chair does not think he can improve on it, so he will read it. In this case the House fixed this date of July 1, 1916. The Senate fixed it at May 1, 1917. The conferees fix the date as July 1, 1917.

Well, it may be true, as the gentleman from Illinois states, that it is a sort of immaterial matter; but you can not have a ruling one way because the Chair or somebody else thinks the matter is immaterial and have it the other way when you think it is important. I agree with the gentleman thoroughly that there ought to be common sense injected into parliamentary law, as in everything else.

Now, on that shipping bill there were three points made against it, but there is no use to read about the two. But on the third point there was this same identical question of time, so in rendering that decision I said:

He—

That is, the Chair—

> overrules the second proposition about American citizenship in section 9. He thinks that is a limitation. He sustains the point of order as to time.

And he gives these reasons:

> If there is anything settled about conferences between the two Houses it is this: Where two amounts are named and the question is referred to the conferees they may oscillate as much as they please between the two extremes, but they can not go below the lower amount and they can not go above the higher amount. That applies to sums of money in appropriation bills. This has been ruled so often that it is as familiar as the multiplication table. In tariff bills, where the one House suggests one rate on any given article and the other House suggests another rate the conferees can not go below the lower and they can not go above the higher rate.

Now, everybody will admit that it is a simple regulation as to a tariff bill. If that were not true, the conferees can go out and actually make a new tariff bill.

> Unless the memory of the Chair is badly out of condition, this thing happened when the Payne bill was passed: There were certain amendments in controversy. The House fixed the rate on shoes, and so forth, at 15 per cent, and the Senate fixed it at 20 per cent. I have heard—I do not know that it is true, but from what happened afterwards I believe it to be true—that President Taft notified the conferees that if they did not cut out that rate on boots and shoes to 10 per cent he would not sign the bill. I know that the House passed a joint resolution in order to enable the conferees to cut the rate down to 10.
> As far as the suggestion made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] is concerned, that where everything after the enacting clause is struck out then the conferees have carte blanche to bring in a bill, that is not the case here.

It is not the case now.

> The House never did strike out everything after the enacting clause in the Weeks bill.

There is no use to read the rest of it. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill be sent back to the committee of conference. I move that we disagree to the amendments of the Senate and ask for a further conference.

Mr. BENNET rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. BENNET. To call the attention of the Speaker to the fact that the House having disagreed to the conference report—because under the decisions the sustaining of a point of order is the same as disagreeing—under section 6396 of the fifth volume of Hinds' Precedents the right to make a motion passes to the opposition; and I desire the floor for the purpose of making a preferential motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that applies to the point of order. This morning, on that other matter that we had up here, if they had voted on that resolution to table the resolution and the motion had been defeated, then unquestionably the control of that resolution would have passed to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL]. But that was a different sort of thing.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a further conference.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be recognized for the purpose of making a preferential motion.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SABATH. Would not a motion to postpone the consideration to a certain day be in order?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman should move the previous question.

Mr. SABATH. I move the previous question on the motion to ask for a further conference and disagree to the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves to insist upon the disagreements of the House to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BENNET. Is it proper, when a Member of the House is on his feet to make a preferential motion, to take him off his feet to permit another Member of the House to move the previous question on a motion of lesser degree? I notified the Chair that I desired the floor to make a preferential motion.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will state his preferential motion, the Chair would have some idea of what should be done.

Mr. BENNET. I will do that. I move that the House agree to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6. That motion takes precedence over the motion to disagree, because it tends to bring the two Houses together.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that is not preferential over a motion to disagree and ask a further conference.

Mr. BENNET. Oh, yes; it is.

The SPEAKER. Yes; it is.

Mr. BURNETT. But I had moved the previous question on my motion.

Mr. MANN. The previous question would not cut out a preferential motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York will state his motion again.

Mr. BENNET. I move to agree to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, which reads as follows:

White persons nor to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes a preferential motion to agree to Senate amendment numbered 6, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment 6. Page 7, line 11, after the word "to," insert "white persons nor to."

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on that motion.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] to agree to Senate amendment numbered 6.

Mr. BENNET. I ask unanimous consent that it may be again reported.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will report it again.

The amendment was again read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, now I move the previous question on my motion to disagree and ask a further conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves the previous question on his motion to further disagree to all the Senate amendments and ask for a further conference.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama to disagree and ask for a further conference.

The motion was agreed to, and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. BURNETT, Mr. SABATH, and Mr. HAYES.

COMMITTEE ON THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Territories may have leave to sit during the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the Committee on the Territories have leave to sit during the sessions of the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

R. 19937) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. FOSTER took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Hanbill Combs, late of Company D, One hundred and eighty-eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, I offer a committee amendment. On page 3, line 3, strike out the figures "40" and insert the figures "50."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend on page 3, in line 3, by striking out "40" and inserting "50."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAIR. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman explain to the House the reason which actuated the committee in making that change, and what policy it pursues when making these increased allowances above the amount provided by the general law?

Mr. ADAIR. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that when the committee considered this bill there was some evidence on the way that had not reached the committee, and the Member introducing the bill was instructed to present to the committee as soon as it arrived the additional evidence showing that this claimant required the constant attention and care of another person, and after the bill was printed that evidence was placed in the hands of the committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then, as I understand the gentleman, every soldier requiring the constant attendance of another person for his care receives a pension of $50?

Mr. ADAIR. That depends on the length of his service, but if the service was reasonably long, we give him $50 a month.

Mr. LANGLEY. If the gentleman will permit me, the testimony shows that this soldier is totally blind, and has been for a number of months, in addition to being otherwise physically disabled.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Hold old is he?

Mr. LANGLEY. Seventy-five years old.

Mr. STAFFORD. How long must a man have served in order to obtain $50 under these circumstances?

Mr. ADAIR. If his service was a year or more, the committee have been giving $50 a month, if he has no other income and his condition is such that he requires the constant care and attendance of another person.

Mr. STAFFORD. What other amounts are allowed, where an applicant is in such a condition?

Mr. ADAIR. From $40 a month to $50 a month, depending upon the length of service.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is not this an unusual amount to give?

Mr. ADAIR. No; it is not an unusual amount in cases where a man is helpless and requires the attention of another person, and is blind.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Has this been the practice?

Mr. ADAIR. It has been the practice right along.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. ADAIR, the following committee amendments were offered, severally considered, and agreed to:

Page 8, strike out lines 9, 10, and 11, as follows:

"The name of Robert Daulton, late of Company K, Seventh Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

Page 23, strike out lines 19, 20, 21, and 22, as follows:
"The name of William Dolson, late of Company C, Twenty-ninth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman or some member of the committee if it is true that the Committee on Invalid Pensions has adopted a rule under which the committee will not consider special bills for members of soldiers' homes?

Mr. ADAIR. There is no rule of that kind adopted by the committee.

Mr. ANTHONY. Why does your committee, then, refuse to consider bills for soldiers who are members of the soldiers' homes? I have had several bills turned down on that pretext. If your committee has adopted a policy of refusing to do it, I think you ought to include it in the printed rule so that this House and the country may know.

Mr. ADAIR. I have just stated that so far as I know no rule of that kind has been adopted.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have had communications from the committee regarding bills which they claimed were turned down on that ground.

Mr. ASHBROOK. There has been no rule adopted to that effect, but we have adopted that policy; that is the policy of the committee.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is the understanding on the part of the committee?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. Why should it not then be printed in the rules of the committee?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I think it should.

Mr. ANTHONY. Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to protest against a rule of that kind, because it works unjustly against deserving soldiers who are members of soldiers' homes. On the face of it it looks as if it was all right, that these men are receiving certain privileges from the Government and are apparently from that standpoint not deserving of increased pensions, but I want to say to the House that the majority of the members of the soldiers' homes are there suffering from ailments, or crippled to a degree which incapacitates them from earning a livelihood, and makes them more deserving of pensions than many who are outside the homes. I think it is unfair and unjust.

Mr. ASHBROOK. If the gentleman will permit me, does he not believe that inasmuch as the soldiers are occupying homes, getting their board and lodging and the attendance of a physician, that they ought not to be entitled to as large pensions as those who are outside the homes?

Mr. ANTHONY. There is some justice in the gentleman's argument in some instances perhaps, but most of them come to the home because they can not maintain themselves outside on the pensions they receive, and they come for medical treatment. They would like to live outside. I would like to see the most deserving members of our soldiers' homes receive sufficiently increased pensions so that if they wished they could live outside instead of being forced to stay in a soldiers' home, and then be deprived of an increase of pension for that reason.

Mr. ASHBROOK. So far as my knowledge goes the majority of the soldiers who are inmates of the homes have no families that could care for them; they go there because they have no homes of their own. It seems to me that the soldiers in the homes are better cared for than those who are not there.

Mr. ANTHONY. If you granted the members of the soldiers' homes the same pensions that you do the man outside in the majority of cases they would leave the home and no longer become a burden on the Government.

Mr. ASHBROOK. If there could be some guaranty that the soldier would do that I would be in favor of granting him the same pension.

Mr. ANTHONY. Let me put it this way. If the veteran would state that if he is granted an adequate increase of pension that he would leave the home, would that make any difference?

Mr. ADAIR. It has not been the experience at Marion, Ind., that those who receive the larger pensions leave the home after they receive the pensions.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think it is unjust discrimination, and I am in hopes the committee will liberalize its position in reference to many deserving soldiers who have been compelled to enter a soldiers' home.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I will say that so far as my observation is concerned—and I have been on the committee some time—that substantially all of these men when in the homes, if they were given the pensions that they ought to have, would take care of themselves outside. They do not like to be held as prisoners or paupers. It has been my effort to raise the pension to what it ought to be and let them take care of themselves if they want to. They are entitled to their rights here, and should not be told that they are to be shut up somewhere else, and that they are just as well off. Perhaps some of us would be better off shut up somewhere else, but as a matter of fact it is an iniquitous way to do business.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to hear the gentleman from New Hampshire say that, and I believe it is the right policy for the committee.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FOSTER). The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAIR, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGES ACROSS ALLEGHENY RIVER, PA.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 7536) authorizing the Western New York & Pennsylvania Railway Co. to reconstruct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Allegheny River, in the borough of Warren and township of Pleasant, Warren County, Pa., which is on the Speaker's table, and ask the Chair to lay it before the House, a similar House bill being upon the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair lays before the House the bill S. 7536, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Western New York & Pennsylvania Railway Co., a railroad corporation organized and existing under the laws of the States of New York and Pennsylvania, be, and it is hereby, authorized to reconstruct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Allegheny River on the location of the existing structure and suitable to the interests of navigation, partly in the borough of Warren and partly in the township of Pleasant, county of Warren, and State of Pennsylvania, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled, "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters, approved March 23, 1906."

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

By unanimous consent a similar House bill (H. R. 19296) on the House Calendar, was laid on the table.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, there is another bill of the same nature on the Speaker's table (S. 7538) authorizing the Western New York & Pennsylvania Railway Co. to reconstruct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Allegheny River, in Glade and Kinzua Townships, Warren County, Pa., and I ask the Chair to lay that before the House, and that a similar House bill (H. R. 19297) on the calendar be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair lays before the House the bill S. 7538, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Western New York & Pennsylvania Railway Co., a railroad corporation organized and existing under the laws of the States of New York and Pennsylvania, be, and it is hereby, authorized to reconstruct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Allegheny River, on the location of the existing structure and suitable to the interests of navigation, in Glade and Kinzua Townships, county of Warren, and State of Pennsylvania, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A similar House bill, H. R. 19297, was laid on the table.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bills were passed was laid on the table.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 19410, the Post Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill, with Mr. CRISP in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the bill was last under consideration there was an amendment pending, offered by the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. COX, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 23, strike out all of lines 23, 24, 25, on page 10, and lines 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and down to the word "grade" in line 8, page 11.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, on yesterday I inserted in the RECORD a letter addressed to me by the Postmaster General as to what the cost would be if this amendment is not agreed to. That letter will be found on page 1229 of the RECORD. It is proposed to increase the salaries of 7,610 clerks in the first-class post offices, at a cost of $705,825, and of 2,037 clerks in the second-class post offices, at a cost of $176,350, making a total increase of $882,175. The post-office clerks are a very competent and efficient class of men. They do splendid work; but I undertake to say that as a class they are the most favored class of all of the employees in the Government. They are paid higher salaries than the employees working in any other department of the Government. They are paid salaries from 15 to 30 per cent higher than are paid to the employees by private employers in that line of work. I do not guess at those figures at all. I speak authoritatively on the point when I make the statement, especially if men in the high financial world know what it costs them to run and operate their business. It is only a few years ago—four or five—that the Committee on Appropriations called in before it the heads of some of the largest concerns in the United States, heads of railroads and great banking and manufacturing institutions, and heard those men compare the wages they were paying to their employees with what the Government was paying its employees; and I make the statement that the employees of the Government, and especially in the Post Office Department, are paid from 15 to 30 per cent higher wages than the private employers pay for a similar line of work. I do not know as yet whether this 5 and 10 per cent increase will be added, because I do not know whether a rule is coming in, nor do I know what the Senate will do when the bill gets over there. In order to meet that proposition, and in order to get something into the RECORD that some one somewhere, either at this end or the other end of the Capitol, will read, as well as over the country, I shall put into the RECORD a letter written to me by Mr. Koons, the First Assistant Postmaster General, as to how much the 5 and 10 per cent increase, if incorporated into this bill, will add to it. The amount it would add is $13,195,940.

This bill carries automatic promotions to the amount of $2,800,000, and that, together with the 5 and 10 per cent increase, if added to the bill, would increase the appropriation for the Post Office Department by the sum of approximately $16,000,000. That letter, with the permission of the committee, I shall insert at this point:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, January 6, 1917.

Hon. W. E. COX,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. COX: In response to your recent inquiry as to the amount of money it will require if the amendment which has passed the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads to increase the salaries of all postal employees whose salaries do not exceed $1,800 is enacted into law, I wish to advise in order to meet this increase in compensation it will require approximately $25,000 for the office of the Postmaster General, $6,320,940 for the Bureau of the First Assistant, $1,650,000 for the Bureau of the Second Assistant, and $5,200,000 for the Bureau of the Fourth Assistant, or a total of $13,195,940. In addition to this, the bill already provides for increases to the amount of $2,800,000 to take care of the automatic promotions, or a total of approximately $16,000,000 will be needed to take care of both items.

Sincerely, yours,

J. C. KOONS,
First Assistant Postmaster General.

The argument has been made here time and again, session after session, that the Government ought to be a model employer; that it ought to at least pay its employees as much as private concerns pay theirs, and for the benefit of the Members of the House who have heretofore made that argument I am going to ask leave again in a few moments to incorporate another tabulation in the RECORD which completely overthrows that argument. The Member of this House who believes for one moment that the Government does not pay its employees higher wages, at least at initial employment, than do private manufacturers is totally mistaken.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I asked the Second Assistant Postmaster General to give me a tabulation showing what the railway postal clerks and department clerks were earning at the time they went upon the eligible list—that is, in private employment. Of course, he could not give them all, but I have in my hand the names of 150 men who are now upon the eligible list from the States of Texas, Missouri, California, and Pennsylvania, four representative States, in different sections of the country, representing different economic conditions. These men are now on the eligible list, waiting to be called as departmental clerks in the post offices of the first and second classes and city letter carriers in cities of the same classes.

Now, to the Members who believe that the Government should be a model employer, I think if you will read this statement after I put it in the RECORD, you will come to the conclusion that the Government is a model employer if you mean by that term the Government should pay its employees as much as private employers pay them. When they take the civil-service examination for these places of railway postal clerks and departmental clerks they are required to state the amount of wages they were earning at private employment. Mr. Chairman, but few—you can count them on the fingers of one hand—of these 150 men were getting as much in private employment as they get at the initial employment when they go to work for the Government. This report shows that these 150 men were earning at the time they stood the civil-service examination and went upon the eligible list from $1.50 a day to $15 per week. Now, this list is the highest one upon the eligible list from these four States, and the wages they were earning in private employment at the time they stood the civil-service examination, I repeat, ranged all the way from $1.50 per day to approximately $15 per week. Now, I am not saying that is enough. No; I wish it were possible that all the laborers of this country could receive higher wages and higher salaries than they do in private employment. But as a rule I take it that employers are humane, that they pay their employees all they can afford to pay. That is my notion about it. I put this in or make this statement to meet the argument that has been made upon the floor of the House for the increase of these salaries upon that ground.

Now, gentlemen, are we prepared to deliberately vote out of the Treasury of the United States $880,000? Are you prepared to do it? Do you propose to get any better service for it? Oh, no; that is not the purpose that you vote it, for you are getting as good service as you will ever get, and you are getting good service, there is no question about that. Upon what ground, then, do you propose to vote this increased salary to-day of $880,000? Upon the ground of the high cost of living? Is that the ground upon which you put it? Do you believe you are doing justice or right to the laboring people back in your districts who are working for $1.50 a day by imposing this tax upon them to pay these increases in salaries?

Mr. EMERSON rose.

Mr. COX. I can not yield. There is not a Member on the floor of this House but if you look back to the respective districts you can count by the scores if not by the thousands people who are earning $1.50 and $2.50 a day. Why, the average farm laborers of this country are only earning $120 a year, or $10 per month. The average wages paid to school-teachers throughout the United States is only $456 a year, and yet the proposition comes before this House to increase the salary of 7,000 or 8,000 employees to the extent of passing a charge upon the Treasury of the United States of upward of $880,000. Can we Democrats consistently vote it? Can any Democrat, charged with the responsibility of collecting and disbursing the revenues of this Government, run his arm into the Treasury of the United States to that extent?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has again expired.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting the matter indicated.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask permission to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the men who enter the Postal Service in the class of employment provided for in the section to which the gentleman has just referred do so through the passage of an examination. After passing the examination they are appointed as substitute clerks or carriers. As a substitute every man is obliged to report every day for duty for a period of not less than three years on an average. During his period of substitute service he may report every day for a week without obtaining any employment, and every day that he is obliged to report, if he lives in a large city where he lives any distance away from his employment, he must pay car fare back and forth. The average compensation earned by these men during their period of substitute service is about $400 a year. After they are appointed regularly they begin at $800, and if the record of the man justifies it at the end of another year he gets $900, and then at the end of another year he gets $1,000, and at the end of another year $1,100, and it has been the policy of Congress to appropriate for 75 per cent of the men in the $1,100 grade to go to $1,200 in first-class offices and in the second-class offices it has been the policy to appropriate for 75 per cent of the men to go to $1,100, and the average compensation earned by those men in the first nine years of their service, including their substitute service, amounts to $742 a year, not a very large sum. During all the period of their employment in the Postal Service they are obliged to give from two to three hours of their time without pay after they have done their day's work to the study of schemes which will enable them to distribute the mail. They distribute to every section of the Union. When a man has studied a scheme and committed it to memory, covering a county, he is compelled then to take on a new county and so on until they study a scheme for an entire State, and ultimately he is obliged to have memorized every post office in the United States in order that he may be able to perform the functions of the office to which he has been appointed.

I submit that this is not ordinary employment. It is extraordinary employment. It is an employment that requires tenacity of purpose, it requires physical force, it requires mental ability, it requires patriotism, and, after all, with all these studies, these men are required to work 8 hours within 10 hours of a single day. They are required to be on call for 10 hours, during a period of which they are obliged to work 8 hours. They are not only obliged to work for that length of time, but 70 per cent of all the work of the men in the department is night work. They are obliged to work under artificial light. They never see the sunlight. During years of service these men are hidden away in the darkness of these great post-office buildings, working under artificial light. Many of them lose their eyesight as the result of their service. They become proficient in the work in which they are employed and they lose knowledge that is of any use to them in any commercial pursuit outside of the post office. They are valuable to the Government of the United States on account of their long experience, and they are of no value whatever to themselves in any other work whatever. And it is because of the fact that they learn nothing in their employment that makes them useful in the commercial life of the Nation that the Government of the United States ought to give more consideration to them than it has given in the past. The law of 1907 provided for the compensation which is carried in this section of the bill. It left the matter of promotions discretionary with the Congress. The Congress has not exercised that discretion until within the last year; then for the first time it exercised the discretion to the extent of 5 per cent promotions of the men from $1,200 to $1,300 and from $1,300 to $1,400 in the first-class post offices; and for the first time since the enactment of the classification act, in 1907, last year it exercised the discretion which the law gave to it to promote 5 per cent of the men from $1,100 to $1,200 a year in second-class offices. This provision of the bill is not only just but it is humanitarian. It ought to go further, and it would be more just if it went further. We are conferring no favors on the men who are to receive the salaries provided for in this section of the bill.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLACK. You stated the section of the bill last year provided for a portion of 5 per cent in second-class offices from $1,100 to $1,200 and 5 per cent from $1,200 to $1,300 in first-class offices. That provision that is incorporated in the bill provides this year for a 25 per cent promotion as to these respective classes?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, sir; that is what it does. I believe it ought to go further. I believe that all the men in the $1,200 grade who are entitled to promotion ought to go to $1,300. Instead of 25 per cent of them, I believe all the men in the $1,300 grade ought to go to $1,400.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. You have introduced a bill that raises everybody that is getting $1,200 to $1,500, have you not?

Mr. MADDEN. I have introduced the bill which reclassifies the men in the Postal Service, and I believe that if that bill could be enacted into law it would be beneficial to the Postal Service.

Mr. GORDON. Answer the question. Does not your bill provide for raising all the $1,200 carriers to $1,500?

Mr. MADDEN. It provides that the men shall enter the service, when they become regularly appointed, at $1,000; that they shall go automatically to $1,100, $1,200, $1,300, $1,400, and $1,500, and I believe the compensation provided in that bill is just and reasonable. It is justified by the work they do.

We ought to popularize the Postal Service. It reaches every home in the land. The American people think of the Post Office service as the most popular service in America. They have confidence in the men who carry the mail, confidence in the men who distribute the mail. There is no more patriotic class of men in America than the men who are employed in the Postal Service. They are entitled to the best consideration that the Government can give, and I regret that this item does not carry more recognition of the merit of these men than is provided in the section now under discussion. I believe the item is meritorious, because it does long-deferred justice to a patriotic class of men who, in season and out of season, have uncomplainingly responded to the call of duty. These men never grumble. They are on guard all the time. They are ready to give everything there is in them to the Government service and to popularize the postal branch of the Government to such an extent that everybody in the United States will say "All hail to the men of the Postal Service." [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I agree with all that my colleague on the committee [Mr. MADDEN] has said in relation to this amendment. I believe it is a just one, and I believe it does one thing that should be done in every branch of the Federal service, in that it wipes out the preferential class, those who may have power enough, those who may have friendship enough, with the ones who are to control the promotion in the different branches of the service. And that is accomplished in this bill, Mr. Chairman. Now, the question has been brought up here about the comparison of the service rendered with that of private capital. Mr. Chairman, there is no comparison. When a man enters the service of the Post Office Department of the Government of the United States, and after he has once reached the maximum wage, he can never go higher. He can never advance. He is there, if he stays in the service, for all time, or until Congress sees fit to raise the maximum wage.

Comparison has been made by my colleague from Indiana [Mr. Cox] as to the amount of wage he receives when he enters the service. He says the average entrance salary of those who apply for service in the Government is $1.50 a day.

Mr. COX. The gentleman wants to quote me right. I said it ranges from $1.50 a day to approximately $15 a week.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I will make the correction. He said from $1.50 a day to $15 a week. The men entering the service are young men, from the ages of 18 to 21, just starting out in life. He neglected to bring out the point that these men are ready to labor and to labor earnestly, that they are obliged to pass a physical as well as a mental examination, and then give a test during the entire service in the Government employ that would never be requested or exacted of them by any private employer.

Where is there a private employer who will take his employees and compel them to take home, night after night, tests, as the men in the Post Office Service are required to do? Where is there an employer who will register the work of those men upon tests that they are compelled to make in their own time?

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAGUE. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Do you think these post-office employees are required to submit to a higher test than the school-teachers?

Mr. TAGUE. Yes, Mr. Chairman; I assert that the men who work in the post offices are required to undergo tests more severe than are imposed upon those who are required to labor in private employment, no matter what it is.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. TAGUE. Yes.

Mr. MEEKER. Does not the gentleman think that the salaries that are paid to the public-school teachers are a national disgrace?

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I do not know what they pay in the gentleman's city, but we took from the gentleman's State of Ohio a man who was drawing a salary of $5,000, and in our city we pay him a salary of $10,000 a year.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman know that the average salary paid to school-teachers in the State of Massachusetts is $456 a year?

Mr. TAGUE. No. I am not ready to believe that until it is shown to me in figures, and round figures.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAGUE. In a moment. I know this much, Mr. Chairman, that in the city which I have the honor to represent in part the average wage of the school-teacher is nearer $900 than $456.

Mr. COX. I am taking the average for the State of Massachusetts. If the gentleman will read the RECORD of December 21 he will find a bulletin put in the RECORD of that date concerning the salaries paid to school-teachers in his own State.

Mr. FESS. If the school boards fail to recognize the service of school-teachers, is that a reason why the Government should fail to recognize the services of its employees?

Mr. TAGUE. No. That is one instance where the Government does not give sufficient recognition to the value of the services of those who faithfully perform their duties, and there is no class of people who perform more faithful and honorable duties to the public than do the school-teachers. I am ready to vote to that class of our public servants the same as I am ready to do in the case of the employees in the Postal Service. I would give to them a deserved wage, and a wage which they should receive from the date of their entrance. [Applause.]

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, all debate under the rule on this section, as I understand it, is exhausted. I call for a vote.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] will not not prevail. These salaries are not too large, and then I think the gentleman has overlooked——

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, did the Chair rule on the point made?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offered an amendment to the amendment, by moving to strike out the last two words.

Mr. MOON. Oh, very well, if he offered an amendment.

Mr. BENNET. As I was about to say, Mr. Chairman, these salaries of themselves are not too large, and I feel sure that the majority of the committee will vote down the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Indiana. I think that he feels that way also. I give him the credit of having a goodness of heart which he sometimes successfully conceals [laughter], and I feel that he will really not feel badly if we vote him down.

Mr. COX. I want to say to the gentleman that I am sincere in this amendment. I do not want the Members of the House to have any other idea.

Mr. BENNET. The gentleman is sincere, but sometimes his real tenderness of heart enables him to withstand with equanimity the defeat of an amendment of that kind. [Laughter.] Not only is the section itself right, but it is necessary, because——

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Tennessee rise?

Mr. MOON. I just want to make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to his amendment.

Mr. BENNET. Oh, yes; I am.

Mr. MOON. I will leave it to the Chair to decide.

Mr. BENNET. And I leave it to the Chair. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOON. The gentleman's amendment was to strike out the last two words. Let us have the debate on the last two words, then

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York will proceed.

Mr. BENNET. The last two words, Mr. Chairman, as I am told, are the words "as follows." I desire to speak two or three moments on the words "as follows." The word "follows" is a very important word. As I started to say to the gentleman from Indiana and to the committee, the really important thing about this section is what follows. [Laughter.] What does follow? I will tell you what follows.

Mr. MOON. Does not the gentleman think the important thing about this matter is the last two words, "as not"? That is the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. BENNET. Some one told me that my amendment was to strike out the words "as follows." [Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana reported again.

Mr. BENNET. And I ask to have my amendment again reported.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may proceed for five minutes. I do not want this rule violated and the debate extended beyond five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that, as it is well known, under general debate the Member entitled to the floor is permitted to discuss any subject he sees fit to discuss under the rules of the House. Under the five-minute rule there can be allowed one speech in favor of the amendment and one against the amendment, and under the five-minute rule the Member must confine himself to the amendment pending before the committee.

The Chair can do nothing except call the attention of the membership to the rules of the House and to ask the Members to observe those rules. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] be permitted to address the committee for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENNET. I thank the committee. As I was about to say when I was struggling with some difficulty to ascertain what my amendment was, the important part of the whole situation is what follows after an employee runs up the ladder on this particular provision. This provision applies to special clerks and salaries up to $1,400. In and above $1,200 are what are known as the supervisory grades, and without at all mitigating my friendship for the grades below the $1,200 grade, I want to call attention to the fact that if you do not keep this provision in, you close the door of hope for ultimate promotion to every clerk below the $1,200 grade, and you deprive the clerks who are to be promoted here from enjoying their opportunity for ultimate promotion above $1,200.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Certainly.

Mr. COX. Does not the gentleman know that these employees are automatically promoted, $100 a year until they get to $1,000, one class of them, those who work in the second-class post offices, and those who work in the first-class post offices are automatically promoted until they get to $1,100, and the whole body of them are gradually promoted in that way?

Mr. BENNET. I do not think the 75 per cent part is in the classification act.

Mr. COX. Of course it is in the classification act.

Mr. BENNET. I was not aware of it. But that has nothing to do with what I was calling attention to, and that is the absolute lack of attention that is given to fairness, decency, and justice in connection with the salaries in the supervisory grades above $1,200. I come from a large city, in which there are many of these men who occupy positions where they literally handle millions for $1,300 and $1,400 in salaries, a service for which, if they were working for the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], who is known to be an employer of high-priced men, they would receive as their pay anywhere from $2,000 to $5,000. If these men are not promoted from $1,200 to $1,300 and from $1,300 to $1,400, you cut off all chance for promotion. There has not been half enough done in any year for the supervisory force in any of the large post offices, and we are leaving the large administration of the greater affairs of our post offices throughout the land to the fidelity, which is seldom abused, of men who stay in the service, where they are underpaid, far more underpaid, than in any other branch of the Postal Service.

I realize that this will not be an entirely popular speech with my friends, the letter carriers, and the clerks who get anywhere from $800 to $1,200. But I will have to take a chance on that. I am in favor of increasing them, too, and always have been; but no one up to this time—possibly because the supervisory employees are few—has laid their case before the House, excepting the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], while I was out of Congress, and I had forgotten that for the moment. As representing in part the largest postal city of this country, I want to say frankly to the House of Representatives that however we may reasonably and honestly differ, and we do, as to the compensation paid to men receiving $1,200 or less, for the kind of positions that these clerks are promoted to fill from these grades of special clerks at $1,200, $1,300, and $1,400 a year, the pay that they get for the work they do as compared with what men get for similar work outside, is a disgrace to the Government of the United States; and there is no Government that I dare mention in public with which we can compare our conduct.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. Cox) there were—ayes 7, noes 68.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

And provided further, That hereafter when the needs of the service require the employment on holidays of "special clerks" in first and second class post offices, they shall be allowed compensatory time on one of the 30 days next following the holiday on which they perform such service.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois: Page 11, line 26, insert: "Provided, That when emergencies or the needs of the service require letter carriers in the City Delivery Service and clerks and special clerks in first and second class post offices to work in excess of eight hours a day, for such additional services they shall be paid at a rate of 50 per centum higher than their salaries as fixed by law."

Mr. COX. I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe the point of order would be well taken against this amendment. The Congress has passed laws for the purpose of creating an eight-hour day. This amendment is for the purpose of having that eight-hour day applied. The effect is to stop unnecessary overtime work by employees. I maintain that this will not increase the expenditure of the Government, but perhaps it will reduce it, because when you permit men to work 10, 12, and 14 hours it does not tend to efficiency of workmanship, and is a poor business method.

Mr. Chairman, the fact is that this will add to the efficiency of the service of the Post Office Department, for the reason that it can be shown that unnecessary overtime work decreases efficiency. I do not care much about the emergency part of it, if it is an emergency; but unfortunately the Post Office Department has seemed to desire to practice that sort of economy which presses down the hardest on the back of the man who is the hardest worked and the poorest paid.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Can the gentleman cite a single instance during the present Democratic administration where the salary of a single postal employee has been reduced?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I was not talking about their salaries being reduced. I was talking about their being overworked and speeded up; and there are instances where they have been reduced, for that matter. I can not name them, but I can recall this to the mind of the gentleman, that in the first session of this Congress we passed a resolution to restore to their positions—that is, from $1,100 to $1,200—post-office collectors who had been reduced by the Postmaster General. There can be hundreds of cases cited. I do not happen to have them at hand.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. In regard to the question of the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BLACK), there was called to my attention not long ago the case of an old gentleman who had been working in the Post Office Department for 25 years as a mail clerk, whose salary had been reduced from $1,400 to $1,200 a year.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. If I can get my time extended I will yield; yes.

Mr. BLACK. I want to ask the gentleman from Ohio if he knows anything about the administrative reasons for that reduction in salary?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. It seems that the old gentleman whom I spoke of could not pass a certain examination that the department required him to take. Therefore, after being in the service for 25 years, they reduced his salary $200 a year.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. MOON. I do not like the suggestion in the question of the gentleman from Ohio, that the department has reduced improperly the salary of any man. Evidently the case the gentleman has referred to is the case of an inefficient clerk who had passed the period of life where he was of no value to the service. It might have been proper to dismiss him, and it was a mercy to reduce his salary.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Does the gentleman think that the Government ought to throw a man into the scrap pile after he has served 25 years?

Mr. MOON. It is not a question of the salary that we should give him, it is a question of discipline and the efficiency of the service, and it is nonsense to talk about reducing his salary when he has passed the period of efficiency.

[The time of Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois having expired, he was granted 5 minutes more.]

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to challenge the motive of any Member of Congress or any official of the administration, but those who are exercising their efforts to keep the Government employees from receiving an adequate wage, and especially those who prevent the laws being applied that have been passed by this Congress, such as the eight-hour-a-day law, which was passed for the purpose of securing an eight-hour day, ought not to succeed. We ought not to permit any department of the Government to employ men over eight hours, not even for economy, except in cases of emergency. On the question of the eight-hour day I would like to call your attention to what the President of the United States says, and while it is true that this was said some time before the last election and he may lose interest in regard to this matter at this time, and I doubt if he would if he understood the administration of the Post Office Department, yet this is what he said:

> We believe in the eight-hour law because a man does better work within eight hours than he does within a more extended day, and the whole theory of it, a theory which is sustained by abundant experience, is that his efficiency is increased, his spirit in his work has improved, and the whole moral and physical vigor of the man is added to.

This amendment that I have offered is for the purpose of securing the application of the eight-hour day, and instead of working postal employees overtime—which they are opposed to—they could put the substitutes to work, which would give them a greater income and would be beneficial both to the regular employees of the Postal Service as well as to the substitutes. Therefore I contend that this is an important amendment and should be adopted by the House. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 9, 1916.

Hon. FRANK BUCHANAN, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BUCHANAN: I wish to enlist your support of an amendment to the postal appropriation bill which has for its purpose the minimizing of overtime work for clerks, special clerks, and city letter carriers, and giving these Government employees the benefit of the eight-hour law enacted by Congress August 24, 1912.

The amendment embodies the same idea as that contained in your bill (H. R. 19293). It proposes to establish a wage scale of time and a half for all work in excess of eight hours, solely for the purpose—and I wish to emphasize this—of eliminating unnecessary overtime.

Under no circumstances should this amendment be confused with the salary-increase agitation. It is not an effort to obtain additional wages by increasing the rate of overtime pay; it is an effort to confine the day's work in post offices to eight hours by fixing a penalty for work in excess of that period.

Existing law provides that overtime work be paid at a proportionate rate of the daily wage. In many instances this rate is lower than that for substitute and auxiliary clerks and carriers. As a result the regular clerks and carriers are forced to work overtime while the substitutes are deprived of work which is rightfully theirs. This injustice would be corrected by establishing a wage rate of time and a half for all regular clerks and carriers for work in excess of eight hours. The department would then restrict overtime to actual emergencies, which the law originally contemplated, and the regulars and substitutes would both be benefited.

The following editorial in the July, 1916, issue of the Union Postal Clerk, states the facts on the subject of overtime:

"Just as we fought for our eight-hour law, the antigag law, the workmen's compensation law, and now for retirement, so will we strive to confine, as far as practical, the day's work for every clerk in the service within eight hours.

The necessity for a wage differential in favor of overtime work is apparent in offices like Chicago and Cleveland, where periodically the regular clerks are forced to toil excessively long hours. Apparently, in the absence of having to pay the penalty of a higher wage rate, the department prefers to work its distributers overtime rather than employ an adequate substitute force. This operates to the disadvantage of both classes of employees—one is compelled to work too long and the other gets little or no work. A higher rate of pay for overtime would insure the regular clerk an eight-hour day and insure the substitute a larger and steadier income. Both classes of employees would benefit and the service efficiency would be improved.

"Until a premium is put on overtime the temptation to work the expert clerks excessively long hours will always be present. It is unjust to penalize a man for his expertness; yet that is what is done when skilled distributers are kept at their tasks for more than eight hours. But there is no use for us to moralize about the injustice of it. Neither does it profit us to argue that a man's efficiency wanes after eight hours of mail distribution. The boss would rather have a tired regular at 40 cents than a sub at 35 cents an hour. If, however, he must pay the regular 60 cents—almost the price of two subs—then the regular will go home on time and the sub will get the emergency work to which he is rightfully entitled.

"When we make overtime expensive it will cease. A 50 per cent wage differential for work in excess of eight hours will minimize this service and insure an eight-hour day to the clerks. The fight for it is on!"

An editorial in the November issue of the same paper cites the deplorable conditions existing then, and still existing, in the Chicago office:

"Damaging proof of the baneful effects of overtime on postal workers is shown in the increased sick benefits paid by the Chicago Post Office Clerks' Union during those periods when the department forces its clerks to work extra hours.

"Taking the month of March, 1915, as an example, we find that the Chicago union paid approximately $450 in sick benefits. The overtime for that month amounted to 50 hours. In March, 1916, with 65 hours' overtime, the sick benefits totaled $590.

"These financial statements of the Chicago union are the best barometer of office working conditions. When conditions are normal sick benefit payments drop to a minimum, but when the speeding up and the extra hours of duty are added the clerks break under the strain, requiring enforced lay-offs and medical attention to recuperate.

"Mr. Koons, First Assistant Postmaster General by the exigencies of politics, has dismissed the complaint of the Chicago clerks as of no consequence. 'It is just another attack on the department by Flaherty,' is his retort.

"If he would take his eyes off the departmental balance sheet and his mind off the expected surplus long enough to examine the Chicago mailing division time sheets and the union's sick-benefit payments he might realize the seriousness of our overtime complaint. He would find that he, a political adjunct of an administration that is seeking vindication at the polls largely on its labor legislative record, is denying, because of indifference or stupidity, an eight-hour day to at least 1,000 clerks in Chicago and thousands in other large offices.

"While the Chicago situation is most aggravated, a similar condition exists in many other offices. We find the harassed, overworked, speeded distributers being driven to physical exhaustion by as hard and implacable a set of administrative taskmasters as was ever given temporary authority over humans."

SOUGHT AID OF PRESIDENT.

The excessive amount of overtime demanded of the postal employees was so great and the complaints so widespread that I, realizing the futility of further appeals to the department, addressed an open letter to President Wilson, under date of October 6, 1916, asking his aid in bringing relief from the intolerable condition. The letter follows:

"DEAR SIR: After fruitless efforts to have the officials of the Postal Department relieve thousands of post-office clerks of excessive overtime service, I am making this appeal to you.

"The working hours of post-office clerks are governed by a law passed by the Sixty-second Congress on August 24, 1912, which provides in substance that clerks in first and second class post offices shall be required to work not more than 8 hours a day within 10 hours, and for work in excess of 8 hours a day within 10 hours, and for work in excess of 8 hours, they are paid in proportion to their salaries as fixed by law.

"This law contemplated that only in emergencies should more than 8 hours be required. Yet in many of the large post offices, notably New York, Chicago, Boston, Cleveland, etc., the clerks are forced daily and nightly to work 10, 11, and even 12 hours.

"One need not, I am sure, point out to the injustice of this. You very happily expressed yourself on this subject in a recent speech to a gathering of New Jersey business men, saying: 'We believe in the eight-hour law because a man does better work within eight hours than he does within a more extended day, and the whole theory of it, a theory which is sustained now by abundant experience, is that his efficiency is increased, his spirit in his work has improved, and the whole moral and physical vigor of the man is added to.'

"These words have a direct application to a post-office mail distributer. He works mostly at night, at top speed, at high tension, performing an important work requiring constant vigilance. To compel long hours of overtime service from this class of workers is inhumane; it is also poor business policy, resulting in errors in distribution when the overtaxed brain refuses to respond and in the physical breakdown of the worker.

"In the Chicago post office alone, 800 clerks have averaged 105 hours overtime during the first six months of this year. The bulk of this was crowded into the last four months of that period. Since July the conditions have grown steadily worse, until at the present time, with the preelection and the usual heavy fall mailings in full swing, thousands of clerks are complaining of their hardships.

"The responsible department officials are seemingly indifferent to the plight of the clerks. The remedy is within their hands to apply if they so desire. The current appropriation measure for the Postal Service made possible the appointment of 1,300 additional clerks. Despite the boasted gain in receipts and the ever-increasing volume of work, but few of these appointments have been made. Postmasters are clamoring for help, the clerks are longing for relief, and yet the department officials refuse to recognize the need of keeping the working force recruited to an efficient working standard.

"If possible I ask you to have an investigation made, independent of the Postal Department's influence, of the working conditions of the clerks in the post offices I have mentioned. While no reasonable objection can be made to overtime work in the Postal Service when actual emergencies exist, there is very strong objection to the habitual violation of the spirit of a law designed to give to post-office clerks the benefits of an eight-hour day. Your investigation will disclose a condition to which I know you are opposed. The Postal Department officials have placed you in the untenable position of advocating a principle in private employment—the eight-hour day—which is not in effect in Government employment, solely because of a desire for a greater postal surplus.

"Asking you to take action to relieve the post-office clerks of this intolerable, undesired, and arduous overtime service which is sapping the strength and vitality of thousands of faithful, trained service experts, I am,

"Respectfully, yours,

"THOS. F. FLAHERTY,
"Secretary-Treasurer."

SECOND PROTEST SENT.

My letter to the President was referred to the Postmaster General, but no noticeable effort was made to correct the abuses of which the complaint was made. Under date of October 24 I again wrote the President:

"President WOODROW WILSON,
Asbury Park, N. J.

"DEAR SIR: With further reference to my letter to you of October 6, receipt of which was acknowledged October 8, I have to inform you that the Postmaster General, to whom my letter was referred, has made no noticeable effort to correct the abuses to which I called your attention, namely, the additional hours of labor forced upon post-office distributers in violation of the spirit of our eight-hour law and in contravention of your own admirable views on the advantages of confining the workday to eight hours.

"The post-office distributers in many of the larger offices are compelled to work excessively long hours under exceedingly trying conditions, frequently at night and always at high tension. This overtime work imposed upon these men is due entirely, I insist, to the unwillingness of the Postal Department officials, because of a mistaken zeal for a larger postal surplus, to recruit the clerical force up to a proper standard.

"Congress has made it possible for the department to increase the clerical force of the service by the appointment of 1,300 additional clerks, yet, despite the obvious need of augmenting the force before the holiday rush, less than half of this number have been appointed.

"I again respectfully urge you to make an investigation independent of the Postal Department officials, who have been aware of these conditions for months but have failed to act. An examination of the time sheets of the New York, Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Memphis, and many other offices will impel you, I think, in view of your stand on the eight-hour-day principle, to insist upon the administrative officials of the Postal Department correcting this grievance by confining overtime for distributers to actual emergencies.

"Respectfully, yours,

"THOS. F. FLAHERTY,
"Secretary-Treasurer."

ANOTHER APPEAL TO THE DEPARTMENT.

In a memorial submitted to the Postal Department on November 15, 1916, the executive committee of the National Federation of Post Office Clerks asked that unnecessary overtime be eliminated and suggested the establishment of a higher wage rate for work in excess of eight hours as the surest preventive of overtime. The memorial reads:

OVERTIME.

"Due to the recent rapid expansion of the Postal Service and to the failure of the department to recruit its clerical force to the proper strength, thousands of clerks, especially distributors, are forced to work excessively long hours. While it is true these men receive overtime pay, prorated according to their salaries, it is equally true that they prefer a straight eight-hour day, except only in emergencies. To force men to work in excess of eight hours day after day is contrary to the letter and spirit of our eight-hour law.

"Inasmuch as distributors must devote time after working hours to scheme study, it necessarily follows that excessive overtime works to the disadvantage of the service in interfering with the study of the clerks and also works to the disadvantage of the clerks in subjecting them to penalties for failing to qualify on scheme examinations when there is no time for preparation.

"We heartily indorse the declaration of President Wilson made in reference to this subject, 'We believe in the eight-hour law because a man does better work within eight hours than he does within a more extended day, and the whole theory of it, a theory which is sustained now by abundant experience, is that his efficiency is increased, his spirit in his work is improved, and the whole moral and physical vigor of the man is added to.'

"These words have a direct application to a post-office mail distributor. He works mostly at night, at top speed, at high tension, performing an important work requiring constant vigilance. To compel long hours of overtime service from this class of workers is inhumane; it is also poor business policy, resulting in errors in distribution when the overtaxed brain refuses to respond and in the physical breakdown of the worker.

"We ask the department to issue explicit instructions to postmasters to observe the letter and spirit of the eight-hour law by confining overtime to actual emergencies.

EXTRA PAY FOR OVERTIME.

"We believe that in order to insure the proper administration of our eight-hour law, there should be a penalty for all work in excess of eight hours in the form of added compensation. This is not an attempt to secure an additional wage, but rather an effort to insure an eight-hour day. Under the present law it is less costly to require extra service of the regular employees than to put on auxiliary men, thus working a hardship on both classes of employees—the substitutes and the regulars. If extra compensation had to be paid to the regular men, there would be less disposition to work them overtime. We therefore urge the establishment of a time-and-a-half rate of pay for all work in excess of eight hours."

You will see from the foregoing that we have made every effort to minimize overtime service and to confine it to actual emergencies, but seemingly without success. In practically all of the large post offices the regular clerical force, especially the distributors, are at this time working in excess of eight hours. We feel this condition will continue to exist unless the Congress enacts the legislation embodied in this amendment—the establishment of a higher rate for overtime service.

Asking your earnest cooperation in this attempt to insure to the postal workers the benefits of an eight-hour workday, I am,

Very truly, yours,

THOS. F. FLAHERTY,
Secretary-Treasurer National Federation of Post Office Clerks.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, the point of order has been reserved, and I ask that the amendment be again read.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. MOON. I think, Mr. Chairman, that is subject to the point of order.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I would like to ask the gentleman on what ground?

Mr. MOON. Because it changes existing law.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. In what way?

Mr. MOON. If it does not change it, why does the gentleman want it?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. It only provides for overtime pay.

Mr. MOON. Yes; it is an increase of salary; and, then, again, it is not germane to this section.

Mr. COX. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment in question changes existing law in that it increases the pay of the employees working in excess of eight hours. It is not in order on an appropriation bill, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to inquire of the chairman of the committee if under the compensatory provision it was ever intended that a man who takes this time should be made in reality to perform an equivalent amount of service in some other way. Let me illustrate. I have been informed by carriers in my home office at Atlanta, for instance, they work on Sunday or a holiday, and the superintendent of mails comes and says you take your compensatory time on such and such a day. He takes that time, but instead of employing a substitute, an extra man, which I understand the law intended, they divide the route of this man up among two or three different carriers and make them perform the service. He goes back to work the next day, and one of the others is designated for his compensatory time, and the man off the day before will perform extra service. In reality, if the law is administered in every post office in this country as it has been in the city of Atlanta, the compensatory time provision in the postal laws has been absolutely nullified by the administration features imposed in this office by the superintendent of mails, probably without the permission of the postmaster.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] must know that the chairman of the committee does not know whether the law has been violated in Georgia or not.

Mr. HOWARD. I do not mean that. I meant to ask the gentleman, so that I could get it into the RECORD, whether or not he had any information in respect to the matter. He has been so long upon the committee and is so familiar with this legislation that I wanted an expression from him as to whether or not the framers of that law ever intended that men who received compensatory time for working on Sundays and holidays should in reality pay it back to the Government by extra service.

Mr. MOON. The intention of the law was that they should have exactly what is provided; that when they did work for a specific time they should have compensatory time therefor. That I understand has been the policy of the administration. That is the regulation of the department and the intention of the law, and I presume it has been carried out.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, my object in making this observation at this point was to call the attention of Congress to the fact that of my own knowledge, obtained from reliable men in the service, that law has been violated and is being violated, and I do not say that it is being violated with the knowledge of the executive heads in the city of Washington; but I know that men who receive compensatory time in the office in the city of Atlanta are made to really repay that to the Government in extra services performed instead of their employing substitutes.

Mr. MOON. If the gentleman or any of his constituents are having trouble along that line, it is purely a matter of administration and should be referred to the department at Washington, for it is not a question for legislation.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation to printers, mechanics, and skilled laborers, 22, at $1,200 each; 4, at $1,100 each; and 31, at $1,000 each; in all, $61,800.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting, after the word "holidays," the words "or holy days," on page 11, line 23.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 11, line 23, by inserting, after the word "holidays," the words "or holy days."

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question. In the large cities there are a number of clerks of the Jewish or Hebraic people, who have certain holy days like Yom Kippur and others, which days they observe strictly. By the necessities of the service some of them are required to work on their holy days, and always will be so long as there are so many Hebrews in the service. Would there be any practical way of working out a proposition by which a man who is required to work on one of his holy days and has no particular objection to working on our Sunday could get some compensatory time if he is required to work on his own holy day?

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I do not know of any way by which the Government can arrange to settle these religious questions as between the people who work for it. I think we had better let them alone to settle that question themselves. If they do not want to work on certain days, they need not work on those days, but that would be a question between the Government and them. I do not think we ought to provide by statute that a man who believes that Saturday is Sunday and who does not want to work on that day, or who believes that Wednesday is a holy day—something like unto the Congressmen here in respect to "Holy Wednesday"—ought to expect to have the matter adjusted for him by statute. I do not believe that that is a question with which we ought to deal.

Mr. BENNET. I am not dogmatic about it. I am simply asking for information.

Mr. MOON. I do not know of any way by which we can handle the question and inject a religious feature into the statute.

Mr. BENNET. I knew of no way, but I hoped that probably the gentleman might. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation to watchmen, messengers, and laborers, 1,825, at $900 each; in all, $1,639,500.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph, consisting of lines 4 to 6, inclusive, on page 12 of this bill. And in this connection I wish to make the following statement: At the meetings of our Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, which were held when we were framing the appropriation bill for the fiscal year of 1917, the Post Office Department submitted for our consideration an estimate of 900 watchmen, messengers, and laborers, at $720 each, and 900 at $840 each, aggregating an expenditure of $1,350,000. In connection with this item and during the course of the hearings we had before our committee a gentleman representing this class of postal employees, and we accorded him a full hearing, and after hearing that representative of these employees we changed the item which had been submitted by the department so as to make all of the 1,800 of these watchmen, messengers, and laborers receive $840 a year each, thereby increasing the appropriation bill $108,000. This was at the last session of Congress, and was, as I have stated, a part of the appropriation bill for the fiscal year of 1917. Now, there was no objection to it in the House and no point of order was made at the time the bill was considered, and it went through, with the approval of the House. I wish to state I favored the item and advocated it in our committee, and as I now recall the matter, it met with the unanimous support of the members of our committee. But now this year, for the appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1918, the Post Office Department did not submit any estimates for any increase in this item as to salary, but asked for $1,530,000 to pay these men $840, same as we provided in the bill at the last session of Congress. Not only did the Post Office Department not submit any estimate for any increase, but so far as I have information, these employees were not asking for any increase. But our committee took judicial knowledge of the high cost of living and upon our own initiative and without being asked to do so increased this item to $900 a year for each of these employees. Since that provision was voted upon and made a part of this bill an amendment has received the favorable consideration of our committee providing a horizontal increase of all these salaries carried in the bill of from 5 to 10 per cent, the same as was put upon the Agricultural appropriation bill and the legislative, judicial, and executive appropriation bill. This 5 and 10 per cent amendment is familiar to the membership of the House, and I will not pause to discuss it at this time.

Now, let us analyze this situation as to the item I am discussing. We increased the salaries of 900 of these men last year 16⅔ per cent, as I have previously explained. If we go ahead and increase these salaries again this year from $840 to $900, this is 6¼ per cent more increase. Then if we add on the 10 per cent which is provided in the amendment which is to be offered, what will be the result? We will have 900 of these men receiving an increase of 33 per cent in the last two years; we will have 900 more receiving an increase of 16¼ per cent; and I feel constrained, Mr. Chairman, in view of these facts, to make this point of order. I feel it my duty to do this, because when the committee acted favorably upon the increase of $840 to $900 for each of these men we did not have before us the 5 and 10 per cent horizontal increase. We did not have that in mind, and it had not even been mentioned in the committee. If we go ahead and increase these employees from $840 to $900 each, it will amount to an increase of $108,000, and then if we go ahead and increase the item 10 per cent more under the horizontal raise, that will be $163,950 more, making this one item of increase $271,950, and therefore I feel it to be my duty to make the point of order. I am in favor of making one increase, but not both of them.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman kindly state his point of order?

Mr. BLACK. My point of order, Mr. Chairman, is that this paragraph of the bill changes the existing law. The law now provides that these employees shall consist of four classes, graded in even hundreds of dollars from $400 to $700 a year; but these salaries have been increased in appropriation bills from year to year, without any point of order being made, and I would not make the point of order now, except that a double increase is about to be made, which even the employees themselves are not requesting. I therefore make the point of order.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, as to the number of clerks changed and the total amount of this section the point of order is probably well taken, and I do not care to discuss that, but I want to appeal to the conscience and good sense of my friend from Texas [Mr. BLACK] and to that regard and sympathy he ought to have for his fellow men in reference to questions of this sort. Here are men getting $840 a year. Well, everybody knows, particularly in the large cities, that that is a very small amount of money for them. It is but a pittance that this committee raised the amount—just $60 a year—giving it to all instead of a few. It does not amount to a great deal. The gentleman suggests that we will pass the 5 and 10 per cent increase. Now, the gentleman perhaps knows that that will be subject to the point of order and that a point of order will be made upon it unless we have a rule, and of course that will go out. I want to say this to the gentleman from Texas, that I believe that he ought to withdraw his point of order in the interest of these laboring people here. It is wrong to make a point of order where so little is involved to the Government and so much to the poor laboring people of this country. The gentleman ought to allow that to pass, and this little pittance of a few dollars ought to go to them. Now, I will say this to him. If when we reach the other section containing the 5 and 10 per cent increase and that increase is made I will be willing to go back to this section and ask that it be stricken out. For the present I want him to withdraw that point and let these laboring people, who are getting less than any other class of Government employees, at least get pay enough to live upon, particularly in these great cities. [Applause.]

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly agreeable to any one of these increases being made, either the one from $840 to $900 or the increase of 10 per cent, which I have heretofore mentioned as being sure to be offered as an amendment to this bill later on; and if I can get unanimous consent that this item be passed without prejudice to my point of order, and that I may have the privilege to renew it in event the 10 per cent provision goes upon the bill before it is finally adopted, then I will gladly pass it for the present, because I want these men to have one or the other of these increases, but I do not feel justified as a member of this committee in consenting to both of such increases; and unless I can get that unanimous consent I shall have to make the point of order right at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit any request of the gentleman.

Mr. BLACK. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this item be passed without prejudice to my point of order, and that I may have the privilege of renewing the point of order in the event that the 5 and 10 per cent increase amendment is incorporated upon the bill before final passage.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I would ask him to put it in different shape. Let this item pass the House now, and let us have a unanimous-consent agreement to go back to it and reduce the amount back to what it is now in the event the 5 and 10 per cent proposition passes.

Mr. BLACK. All right; that suits me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], the chairman of the committee, asks unanimous consent that this item be considered as passed, with the understanding that if an amendment be added to the bill adding the horizontal increase of 5 and 10 per cent, the gentleman from Texas shall have the right to recur to this item and make a point of order against it. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. AYRES: Page 12, line 20, after the words "one thousand," insert, as a new paragraph, the following:

"That to provide, during the fiscal year 1918, for increased compensation at the rate of 10 per cent per annum to employees who receive salaries at a rate per annum less than $1,200, and for increased compensation at the rate of 5 per cent per annum to employees who receive salaries at a rate not more than $1,800 per annum and not less than $1,200 per annum, so much as may be necessary is appropriated: Provided, That this section shall only apply to the employees who are appropriated for in the act specifically and under lump sums or whose employment is authorized herein: Provided further, That detailed reports shall be submitted to Congress on the first day of the next session showing the number of persons, the grades or character of positions, the original rates of compensation, and the increased rates of compensation provided for herein."

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that on the ground that it changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. AYRES] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. AYRES. I do not, Mr. Chairman. I presume it is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. It changes existing law.

Mr. MOON. Then, I understand, we do not recur to this section?

Mr. BLACK. The rule may be brought in.

The CHAIRMAN. The understanding of the Chair, and the way the Chair stated the request of the committee was, in the event an amendment was adopted to this bill providing for a 5 and 10 per cent increase, they should recur to this item and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] should be permitted to make a point of order against it.

Mr. BLACK. That is true.

Mr. MOON. That is the way I understood it.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation to clerks in charge of contract stations, $1,170,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I regret to find that this appropriation has been increased only $10,000. All of us coming from the large cities who are acquainted with this character of work know that the work of these clerks in contract stations, usually in drug stores, has multiplied enormously with the increase of the postal business of the country. When you inquire at the department whether there is any available fund for establishing new ones they inform you that they are without funds; and yet the department estimates but $10,000 additonal for the pay of these employees in contract stations when the work in many instances has multiplied ten, twenty, thirty, and, in some instances, fifty fold. I recall that this item has not been a favored item with the Post Office Department. Their policy has been to shave down the allowances accorded to these proprietors of drug stores who perform work of a much greater value than is paid for by the small allowances they receive of from $50 to $1,000. There are but a few who receive the high allowance of $1,000. Those are mostly in the larger cities of New York, Chicago, and Philadelphia. The majority are below $300. And yet the department does not recognize the efficient work performed by these proprietors in charge of stations, but each year changes the rule of payment by requiring more service for the same allowance. It is not fair to them. They are doing work five and ten times the value of what they are paid. If the work performed by these drug-store proprietors was performed by Government clerks, it would require an appropriation of $10,000,000 or $15,000,000 a year. The department fails to recognize fairly the services of these drug-store proprietors.

Mr. MOON. I take it, Mr. Chairman, that the department is pretty well acquainted with the value of the services of the drug-store clerks, as well as any other employee. The truth about it is that they are generally all a little overpaid—everybody that works for the department, except a few laborers.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman were at all acquainted with the character of work performed at these drug-store stations, he would not make that bald statement.

Mr. MOON. I have this to say about it, Mr. Chairman: I reckon I know as much about that as the gentleman from Wisconsin. If I did not, I would know precious little about it. [Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. I accede to the last proposition.

Mr. MOON. There was an unexpended balance of $54,000 on this item last year, and the First Assistant Postmaster General, testifying before the committee, asked for an increase of only $10,000, and said that that was all that was needed. Our committee is not in the habit of giving this department more money than it has asked for.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, many times at the hearings before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads it has been stated by the First Assistant Postmaster General that their policy was to cut down the allowances made to these proprietors of contract stations and to get them at the very lowest possible rates. It has been conceded that the work performed by these drug-store proprietors could not be performed by Government employees for less than five times what is being paid to them. And yet the gentleman from Tennessee, just because they do not have any of these stations in the little district represented by him, makes that statement, which is unfounded in fact.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman from Wisconsin, I presume, is speaking from his experience in the city where he lives?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; I am relying on the testimony that has been given before the Post Office Committee in years past.

Mr. MOON. I do not know as to the years past, but in the present year only $10,000 more is asked, and last year the department had $54,000 left over.

Now, that is a question of administration and policy that we can not settle here by the increase of an appropriation or the decrease of it. We must look to what the department says it needs, unless somebody can show otherwise.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not criticizing the committee. I commenced my statement by criticizing the department for not recognizing this service and for cutting down the allowances.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For temporary and auxiliary clerk hire and for substitute clerk hire for clerks and employees absent with pay at first and second class post offices and temporary and auxiliary clerk hire at summer and winter resort post offices, $2,300,000.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BENNET: Page 12, after line 17, insert the following:

"Provided, That hereafter the Postmaster General is authorized to grant to post-office clerks and other employees in first and second class post offices and letter carriers in the City Free Delivery Service and letter carriers in the Rural Free Delivery Service not to exceed two weeks' sick leave in any one year with pay."

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee makes a point of order on the amendment. The Chair will hear the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, the amendment just read was offered for the purpose of granting a measure of relief to postal employees who are compelled to give up their work on account of sickness. These employees live on a wage from which they can store up but little to protect them against disease and mishap. Proper convalescence is necessary to the sick individual that he may regain his damaged health and be again of the value equal to his former value to the service in which he is engaged.

When the Post Office appropriation bill was under consideration in the first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress, I offered an amendment to that bill similar to the one I have now proposed. A point of order was raised against the amendment, which was sustained by the Chair, and the House did not have an opportunity to vote on it.

Senator WADSWORTH, of New York, offered this amendment to the Post Office appropriation bill in the Senate, and it was agreed to by that body but omitted from the bill by the conference committee. Senator BANKHEAD, chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, wrote the Postmaster General for an opinion on the amendment and received the following reply:

* * * The employees of the executive departments in the District of Columbia and certain employees of the Federal Government outside of the District of Columbia as well are entitled under the law to leave of absence with pay on account of sickness, in addition to the leave of absence with pay authorized for the purpose of vacation. In the case of the employees of the executive departments within the District of Columbia, the law authorizes 30 days' leave of absence with pay for vacation and a maximum of 30 days with pay in addition on account of sickness. The different treatment of the two classes of employees has no basis of logic or reason, except that in conferring additional benefits and privileges to the employees of the Federal Government Congress is guided by the condition of the Public Treasury. With particular reference to the employees of the Postal Service, new benefits and privileges in the way of increased compensation and improved conditions of employment have been authorized by Congress gradually during the recent years, in accordance with the same principles and tendencies which have governed the improvement of working conditions in private employment, and these additional benefits and privileges have been accorded in proportion as the condition of the postal finances and the increasing efficiency of the postal organization would permit.

It seems to me that, although the provision for leave of absence with pay on account of illness, as provided for in Senator WADSWORTH'S proposed amendment, is sound in principle, it would be inexpedient at this time for Congress to give favorable consideration to it because of the condition of the Public Treasury.

This statement of the Postmaster General should be sufficient proof that this amendment should be enacted into law.

The Canadian letter carriers are paid for all bona fide sickness up to 12 months in any one year, and if unable to resume their duties at the end of 12 months it is usual to pension them.

Sickness among postal employees is responsible for an annual wage loss that is enormous. It is a deplorable condition, and when properly understood and given full publicity will result in a public demand for a remedy. The whole burden of sickness now falls on the employees, and the only relief they get is through the fraternal organizations of the employees that maintain sick-benefit relief funds. The city letter carriers are paying benefits to the members of their association of approximately $6,000 a month. In the city of New York the local association of letter carriers paid to its members in that city during 1916 in sick and death benefits a sum in excess of $30,000.

Wage studies show that the slender savings of workingmen are inadequate to meet the burden of sickness. A recent investigation of 700 sick wage earners by the Russell Sage Foundation disclosed that, in addition to using up savings, the deprivation of income was met (1) by relief societies; (2) by relatives and friends, who were undermining their own health and strength in order to help others; (3) by employers and trade-unions; and (4) by borrowing money, taking in lodgers, sending the wife to work, committing children to institutions, and moving to cheaper quarters—all of which tend to reduce the standard of living and to multiply sickness.

It is contended that to a great extent the conditions under which postal employees perform their work is largely responsible for the sickness which assails them. Insanitary, poorly lighted, and badly ventilated workrooms, the speeding-up system, and the working of overtime undermines the vigor and resisting power of the employees and lead to illnesses which are purely occupational.

The enactment of the Federal workmen's compensation law will stand to the credit of the Sixty-fourth Congress as one of the most constructive pieces of progressive legislation ever placed on the statutes. If the history of this class of legislation in the several States is followed out, it will result in safeguards being thrown around the Federal employees that will reduce from one-half to two-thirds of the accidents that were formerly considered inevitable.

It is my opinion that in order to protect the health of these employees it will be necessary to enact legislation that will insure their earnings against sickness. Pending the enactment of health insurance legislation I believe it is the duty of Congress to remedy existing and aggravated conditions that menace the health of the postal employees, and for this reason I am sorry that the gentleman from Tennessee insists on the point of order.

I think I might possibly persuade some chairmen, but I have my doubts about persuading the present chairman; he is so well versed in parliamentary law. I would like to contend that it is a mere limitation, but I fear it is an attempt to control the discretion of the Postmaster General. Therefore I am constrained to concede the point of order. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BENNET. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent, light, and fuel for first, second, and third class post offices, $5,900,000: Provided, That the Postmaster General may, in the disbursement of the appropriation for such purposes, apply a part thereof to the purpose of leasing premises for the use of post offices of the first, second, and third classes at a reasonable annual rental, to be paid quarterly for a term not exceeding 10 years; and that there shall not be allowed for the use of any third-class post office for rent a sum in excess of $500, nor more than $100 for fuel and light, in any one year: Provided further, That hereafter the Postmaster General may establish, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, one or more branch offices, stations, or nonaccounting offices of any post office for the transaction of such postal business as may be required for the convenience of the public: Provided further, That no first, second, or third class post office shall be made a nonaccounting office: And provided further, That the Postmaster General shall have authority hereafter, in his discretion, to reestablish as a post office of the second or third class any post-office station which has been heretofore or may hereafter be established by reason of the discontinuance of such post office; and the appropriations made in this act are made available for the necessary expense of conducting such reestablished post office of the second or third class. The salary of the postmaster at such office shall be based on the gross receipts of the station for the previous calendar year.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that section, on the paragraph from and after line 20, on page 13, and including all the rest of the paragraph, as being new legislation and not in accordance with existing law and in contravention of existing law. I presume that the chairman will admit that it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. MOON. I want to suggest, Mr. Chairman, that this is a section that will save the keeping of about 115,000 accounts of the Government, and save probably a million or two dollars. But it is new law. If the gentleman does not want to make that saving by refusing the consideration of it, let the section go out of the bill.

Mr. TOWNER. I know that the gentleman claims that.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman knows that.

Mr. TOWNER. No; I do not know anything of the kind.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled.

Mr. MOON. I ask that the Clerk read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of letter carriers at offices already established, including substitutes for letter carriers absent without pay, and for the promotion of all of the letter carriers in first-class post offices from the fifth to the sixth grade and for the promotion of all of the letter carriers in second-class offices from the fourth to the fifth grade and for the promotion of 25 per cent of the letter carriers in second-class offices from the fifth to the sixth grade, City Delivery Service, $40,550,000.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend in line 22, page 14, by changing the figures "$40,550,000" to "$44,605,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. EMERSON: Amend, on page 14, in line 22, by striking out the figures "$40,550,000" and inserting the figures "$44,605,000."

Mr. COX. I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Indiana on the point of order.

Mr. COX. I think it changes existing law. This item is for the pay of letter carriers, including substitutes, and for the promotion of letter carriers in first-class post offices from the fifth to the sixth grade, and in second-class offices from the fourth to the fifth grade, and so forth. The act of 1907 classified these carriers and divided them up into so many classes, from one to five. This amendment can only serve one possible purpose, and that is to increase their salaries.

Mr. EMERSON. About 10 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair understands the amendment, it simply increases the total amount appropriated from $40,550,000 to $44,605,000.

Mr. COX. That is true. This is a lump-sum appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana take the position that if this amendment is adopted the department will be required to expend this amount?

Mr. COX. I do not know whether they will be required or not. They may. I am not willing to let them have that chance unless the Chair overrules the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment does not require the department to expend that amount. If the Chair believed that they would be required to expend it, he would sustain the point of order, but he does not think the amendment will require the department to expend the amount, and therefore the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman who offered this amendment why he wants that $4,000,000 more?

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the chairman of the committee why he asks me that question?

Mr. MOON. I am asking the gentleman the question because I want to get at the sense of his proposition.

Mr. EMERSON. To be honest about it, Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment so that the department may use this money to increase the salaries of letter carriers 10 per cent.

Mr. MOON. We have not passed any proposition of that sort yet. Suppose we wait until we do that.

Mr. EMERSON. No; I think the time to make the appropriation is now.

Mr. MOON. If we do not put into the bill any authorization of the increase, what is the gentleman going to do about it then?

Mr. EMERSON. If the House votes in the $4,000,000, we will have the money to do it with.

Mr. MOON. I hope the gentleman will not indulge in that sort of argument, because the increasing of this amount without doing anything else will not be of any effect. If the House should adopt a rule making the 5 and 10 per cent increase in order, and then should adopt that amendment to the bill, the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads would undertake to have this bill adjusted so as to meet that legislation. I want to say to the gentleman, though, that if that is what he wants to accomplish, this $4,000,000 will not be enough to cover this bill. It is going to take about $16,000,000 to cover the appropriations throughout the bill that will be needed if we pass the 5 and 10 per cent horizontal increase. So I think it would be better to wait until we see whether we pass that or not, and if we do, authorize the Clerk to adjust the figures to meet that emergency. I hope the committee will not vote for this amendment.

Mr. EMERSON. I take this position, that if any class of Government employees deserve an increase, it is the letter carriers. They work in a revenue-producing department, a practically self-sustaining department. I understood the gentleman from Tennessee to say that there is a surplus in the Post Office Department. Now, this is brought in entirely in the interests of these letter carriers, who work long hours and work overtime without extra compensation.

Mr. MOON. I know what the gentleman is after; but suppose he gets that $4,000,000 put in here, it can not be expended unless we provide by law for its application.

Mr. EMERSON. That can be taken care of later on.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman ought not to undertake to provide in advance for an appropriation until we agree that we are going to need it.

Mr. EMERSON. There is nothing in this paragraph that states how this money shall be spent; it can be used to increase the salaries of the letter carriers, who deserve it.

Mr. MOON. No; but there is no use in adding that $4,000,000 to the bill unless there is some further action which makes it necessary.

Mr. EMERSON. I think we should provide for it now, and thus show our friendship for the men who do the hardest work in the Government service.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. EMERSON) there were—ayes 1, noes 30.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of substitutes for letter carriers absent with pay and of auxiliary and temporary letter carriers at offices where city delivery is already established, $4,100,000.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the bottom of page 14 insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"That paragraph 2 of section 5 of the act approved August 24, 1912, entitled 'An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes,' be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read:

"'That in cases of emergency, or if the needs of the service require, letter carriers in the City Delivery Service and clerks and special clerks in first and second class post offices can be required to work in excess of eight hours a day, and for such additional services and for all services performed after the lapse of 10 consecutive hours between the starting time and finishing of their schedules of duty, they shall be paid at double the rate of their salaries as fixed by law.'"

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. HULBERT. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. MOON. Very well.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, this amendment differs from that offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] in that the amendment he submitted provided for an increase of 50 per cent of the salary paid to any carrier or clerk for such period as he might be compelled to work over the regular eight hours. The carriers and clerks are honorable, patriotic, and conscientious men, who have no disposition to shirk their duty or avoid any proper responsibility, but they want an assurance of fair treatment. It is unavoidable and proper that they should be expected to work overtime under conditions of emergency. This proposed amendment provides that a carrier or clerk who shall have worked in excess of 10 consecutive hours shall be paid double time for such excess. It is an "economical penalty," designed to compel the department to authorize the employment of substitutes to dispatch the increasing business that can reasonably be anticipated.

On December 19 last I introduced H. R. 19187, which is, in substance, the amendment that is now offered to accomplish a reduction of the minimum of unnecessary amount of overtime required of postal employees, because the complaint has become general that excessive overtime is demanded of clerks and carriers. The very purpose for which the eight-hour law was enacted is being defeated by the manner in which it is being ignored. I understand, for instance, that it is a common practice in certain post offices—provoked, I suppose, by this wave of departmental economy—to request the men to appear at the office in advance of their regular reporting time and put in from a half to two hours before "ringing in" and to continue after they have "rung out" at the end of eight hours, until the particular work in hand is finished. As no record is made of this "overtime," the men receive only their normal pay for the regular hours registered. A protest from a carrier or clerk would minimize his prospects of a favorable recommendation for a promotion or increase of pay.

It would be better and less expensive if the department would adhere to the strict letter of the law and employ substitutes for the necessary overtime. They can be secured at less cost than would be paid to the regular employees for the overtime, if properly accounted for; the great army of substitutes would obtain beneficial training and experience; and a better spirit would be created among the men regularly employed. So that, as a matter of fact, this amendment, instead of placing any additional burden upon the Government, is in reality a means of saving money and promoting efficiency.

Of course, I do not expect the point of order will be waived, and therefore no opportunity will be afforded the Members of this House to express themselves upon this amendment at this time; but it will have served the purpose of bringing this deplorable condition to the attention of Congress, and I give notice that I propose to follow it up and demand a full hearing before the committee. It was not long ago that we were called upon to legislate what was supposed to be an eight-hour day for certain railroad employees. It seems to me that Uncle Sam would do well to set a more noble example by compelling his departmental chiefs to observe the provisions and enforce the eight-hour law heretofore adopted for their guidance. During the recent holiday rush the clerks in one station in the New York post office worked 36 hours overtime in 5 consecutive days, an average of 7¼ hours overtime daily. They stuck without a murmur, like the fine fellows they are, but at the end of the rush they were physical wrecks.

During the past year, in another station, the clerks, making allowance for Sundays and holidays, have averaged 1½ hours overtime on each and every one of the 307 days of the year just ended.

Will your humanitarian instincts not prompt you to waive a legal quibble over a point of order and put this amendment to the consideration of the sober judgment of the House?

Mr. MOON. This is a matter which has not had the consideration of the committee, and I think the point of order had better be pressed.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment, in the opinion of the Chair, changes existing law and does not fall within any of the accepted classes provided for in the Holman rule. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For vehicle allowance, the hiring of drivers, the rental of vehicles, and the purchase and exchange and maintenance, including stable and garage facilities, of wagons or automobiles for, and the operation of, screen-wagon and city delivery and collection services, $5,965,000: Provided, That the Postmaster General may, in his disbursement of this appropriation, apply a part thereof to the leasing of quarters for the housing of Government-owned automobiles at a reasonable annual rental for a term not exceeding 10 years.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. This is new legislation.

Mr. MOON. What is new legislation?

Mr. TAGUE. Providing for the housing of Government-owned automobiles. It carries an increase of $400,000 over the appropriation of last year.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman to please state to what part of the paragraph his point of order is directed.

Mr. TAGUE. I make the point of order against the amount, which is an increase over the appropriation of last year of $400,000.

Mr. BENNET. And the leasing of quarters for the housing of Government-owned automobiles.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, the law does not fix the amount of the appropriation. If you could not change the appropriation at all you could not have a bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I simply reserved the point of order for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Tennessee a preliminary question. I wanted to ask the gentleman from Tennessee how long we had been pursuing the policy of buying automobiles for the service, and under what statute the authority was found for the leasing of quarters for automobiles that were bought under whatever authority of law there may be?

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman insist that that does not follow under the statute, both chapters 2 and 8, on the subject of the transportation, postal law, which gives the Postmaster General the power to employ vehicles for the transmission of the mail and requires it to be done? The word "automobile" does not mean anything but a wagon, a vehicle in which to carry the mail, and if he can buy one vehicle or another to carry the mail, he has authority under the law, and the law requires it to be done.

Mr. BENNET. I agree thoroughly with that statement of the gentleman. The gentleman is a highly capable lawyer, but the only question I asked him I think entirely through inadvertance he did not answer.

Mr. MOON. Perhaps I overlooked it.

Mr. BENNET. And that is, What portion of the postal statutes gives the Postmaster General the antecedent power to purchase automobiles or vehicles?

Mr. MOON. The statute that authorizes the carrying of the mails and the employment of vehicles would carry with it necessarily the means to obtain them. The appropriation that authorized the transportation of the mail in a general way, the gentleman will realize, would carry that, and if you could not secure it in this way it could not be done at all.

Mr. BENNET. My friend will pardon me, but it seems to me that if his logic is good that the mere requirement in the statute that the Postmaster General shall carry the mail, if it gives him the power to buy automobiles, also gives him the power that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] would like to see him have without further legislation, namely, the power, if he is not satisfied with railroad rates, to buy the railroad.

Mr. MOON. I understand all this proposition now, for following right after this paragraph is the one respecting pneumatic-tube service. We will take care of that when we get to it.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of personal privilege. I want to say to the gentleman from New York that he will have to guess again about railroads, and matters of that kind. I do not thank him for his gratuitous remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole can not entertain a question of personal privilege. The gentleman from New York has the floor.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. HULBERT. I would like to suggest to my colleague that if he is not informed upon the subject, it might be profitable to inquire whether the Postmaster General has the power under this provision to purchase pneumatic tubes, if they are vehicles?

Mr. BENNET. Oh, of course.

Mr. MOON. I should think he would have if it were absolutely necessary to carry the mail in that way, and the purpose of the law could not otherwise be accomplished.

Mr. BENNET. I should think that would be rather an extreme construction.

Mr. TAGUE. I would like to ask the gentleman if the Postmaster General, at the hearings in answer to a question, did not answer that it was the intention to use this appropriation in lieu of the pneumatic tubes?

Mr. MOON. I do not know; but I think if the Postmaster General is as wise an executive as I believe him to be, in view of the proof in this record, he would do that very thing.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, allow me to make this suggestion. It is a quarter of 6, and possibly if we rise at this time I might not make the point of order in the morning.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not control that proposition. The Chair understands the point of order to be lodged against the paragraph on the ground——

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania rose.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I have offered an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has sent up an amendment, which the Clerk will report. After that the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 15, line 12, insert the following: "Provided further, That chauffeurs and mechanics employed by the Post Office Department in the operation of screen wagon and city delivery and collection services shall be granted pay for services in excess of eight hours and compensatory time for Sunday and holiday service in the same manner as provided by law for clerks and carriers in first and second class post offices."

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I would like to ask the grounds upon which the gentleman makes the point of order?

Mr. MOON. That it is new law entirely.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Does not the eight-hour law apply to Government employees?

Mr. MOON. But this has no analogy whatever to the eight-hour law.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, this is for the purpose of applying the 8-hour day, and it reduces the expenditures, because when men work 10, 12, and 14 hours a day it interferes with their efficiency. I do not see where it changes the existing law, because we certainly have sufficient law for the 8-hour day. This does not change the law in regard to the overtime pay; therefore it seems to me the point of order should not be sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. Under the law now do these chauffeurs and other employees named in the amendment, when they perform extra services, receive pay for it?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. No; they do not receive extra pay.

The CHAIRMAN. Does not this amendment provide pay? Therefore does it not change the existing law?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Not if we have an eight-hour-day law.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that his amendment does not have anything analogous to the eight-hour-day law. The gentleman had better undertake to get in a rule on that question than try to get it in here, because it is out of order.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Why raise the point of order against the applying of the eight-hour day to these men?

Mr. MOON. Because this bill has been very carefully considered and hearings had by the committee and agreed upon by the majority, and it is not a wise thing in legislation to take anybody's amendment, unless it is apparently thoroughly correct and in accord with the law and policy of the Government, without a hearing about it. We can not allow this bill to be broken into by a matter that is neither germane nor acceptable under the rules of the House as an amendment. That is the reason.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I understood the chairman to be in favor of the eight-hour day.

Mr. MOON. I am.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. And to be in favor of the employees of the Post Office Department; and therefore why oppose this amendment by making a point of order against it?

Mr. MOON. I am very much in favor of the eight-hour-day law and very much in favor of an increase to the laboring class of the department, but I am not in favor of increasing the salaries of those who have higher positions, because they have, perhaps, enough. We can not, because we happen to be in favor of certain things, agree to everything that comes along.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. But this is not everything that comes along.

Mr. MOON. Perhaps I should not have said that; but such things as this.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. It seemed to me it is so fair I did not expect anybody to object, even by making a point of order, and especially the chairman of the committee. I will urge the gentleman to withdraw the point of order. The purpose of the amendment is to secure an eight-hour day for the men who are doing work for the Government, which work is increasing enormously from day to day, and they are certainly entitled to the eight-hour day as much as any other employees of the Government.

Mr. MOON. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, in that connection, that that may be true, and probably is true; but we can not let this bill be invaded from every side, and we can not allow new legislation to be put into it not considered by the committee.

The rule under which we are operating prohibits this legislation, and it takes a special rule to put it in order. If there were a special rule granted so that we could proceed in an orderly way to the consideration of this matter, I think I would vote for the gentleman's proposition, but not now.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I would like to call the Chair's attention to the fact that this is a limitation upon the expenditure of the money appropriated, by directing the manner of how it shall be spent within the law. Therefore, it seems to me it is in order.

With the rapid motorization of the Postal Service in its delivery and collection and screen-wagon service there is a constant increase in the number of chauffeurs and mechanics employed. These men, although performing a function similar to that of the carriers and collectors in the City Delivery Service, have not the protection of the eight-hour law; neither do they get compensatory time for Sunday and holiday service. The purpose of my amendment is to place them on a par with other postal workers in respect to their hours of employment and their days off. It is simply an effort to wipe out the existing discrimination.

At present the chauffeurs and mechanics employed in this service are forced to work excessively long hours at times. Their hours are fixed by a departmental regulation on the basis of 8 hours within 12 hours. My amendment would fix the hours as 8 within 10 hours. In the absence of any penalty—they receive no pay for overtime—they are frequently compelled to work many hours in excess of 8.

The collectors in the City Delivery Service justly have the benefit of an 8-hour day within 10 hours, a guaranteed weekly rest day, and compensatory time for holiday service. These chauffeurs perform almost an identical function. It is rank discrimination to deprive them of the protection of the laws governing the other employees doing a like service.

Both the chauffeurs and the mechanics perform arduous service. They are Government civil-service employees, and should have the same consideration as is shown their fellow employees.

Mr. MOON. I will say in reply to that, if the limitation is in order——

The CHAIRMAN. Even were the amendment a limitation, and the limitation interfered with executive discretion, it would be subject to a point of order. And the Chair is of the opinion that the amendment contravenes existing law, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I would like to ask the Chair if I understood him to rule a little while ago that a point of order would not lie against the amount of the appropriation, $5,965,000, which is an increase over the amount of the appropriation made last year?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will not state how he will rule until the point of order is made and it is up to him to pass upon the matter. The Chair ruled on one point of order some time ago that an amendment changing the amount of appropriation did not require the department to expend the appropriation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the appropriation provided for in this bill is $5,965,000, and that it is for vehicle allowance, the hiring of drivers, the rental of vehicles, and the purchase and exchange and maintenance, including stable and garage facilities, of wagons or automobiles for, and the operation of, screen-wagon and city-delivery and collection services.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield to me there?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. All the screen-wagon service performed by the Government now is performed by Government-owned machines in most of the cities. You can not meet trains with anything but either automobiles or wagons, and it is necessary to increase the amount of this appropriation to meet the growing needs of the service.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In the cities?

Mr. MADDEN. In the cities—and it does not make any difference as to what is done with pneumatic tubes—this service must be continued and increased from time to time to meet the increasing demands of the service.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The chairman of the committee has indicated that we are approaching the pneumatic-tube item, which is a fact, and I wanted to call attention now to the situation that confronts us.

The Postmaster General asks here for $400,000 more this year than he had last year for the purchase of screen wagons, automobiles, and so forth, to be used in the city postal service. And by a rather interesting coincidence it developes that that is very nearly the amount of the cut of the appropriation recommended by the Postmaster General in the matter of the pneumatic-tube service. Therefore, instead of saving an enormous amount of money by attempting the destruction of the pneumatic-tube service, the Postmaster General is simply transferring the amount that he pretends to save on the pneumatic-tube service to the purchase of screen wagons for city use. There is very little saving in the philosophy of the Postmaster General. I want the gentlemen to know that, because it is an interesting fact now that we are approaching, as the chairman of the committee has reminded us, the item of the pneumatic-tube service.

Mr. MOON. That is what makes you so nervous—the fact that we are approaching that item. This has nothing to do with the pneumatic-tube service.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is to be used in the city service where the tubes are to be displaced; but we are not nervous.

Mr. MOON. If we are to buy automobiles we will give a few automobiles to your city.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We are trying to get them off the streets, because instead of a rural service in the city we would like to have a modern and sensible service underground. I repeat, it is interesting to observe that while the committee and the Postmaster General pretend they are saving a lot of money to the Government by abolishing the pneumatic service they are transferring what it costs to the automobile service.

Mr. MOON. That is not correct.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I wanted to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] perhaps this has something to do with the proposed abolition of the pneumatic tubes, even though my friend from Tennessee does not think so. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I have just received a telegram from Boston. It comes from one of the most distinguished citizens of my city, and it says this:

> As evidence of the insolent disregard of the action of Congress upon question of retaining or abandoning pneumatic-tube service, post-office employees, Inspector Charles P. Stearns and I. O. Keen, of Koons's office, here arranging for autos to perform work now done by tubes. This insolence should be called to attention of Congress; generally believed, since Government established, that departments were creatures of Congress, not its masters. This action illustrates attitude of present post-office régime, that Congress should follow its wishes rather than it must obey the mandates of Congress.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks that his time be extended for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has taken his seat, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I understood that I had a minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; the Chair submitted the gentleman's request, and the committee granted it, but the gentleman from Pennsylvania took his seat; whereupon the Chair directed the Clerk to read.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the Chair will permit me to take advantage of half a minute, and so long as the word "insolent" has been used——

Mr. MADDEN. The telegram refers to the "insolence of the department" in disregarding the action of Congress.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman for stating the fact. Congress might sometimes be misled, unless duly and independently informed upon this subject of the pneumatic-tube service.

Mr. MOON. Oh, yes; that is the opinion of almost everybody from Philadelphia and Boston and a few other places.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We still have some rights and are doing the best we can to maintain them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For mail-messenger service, $2,243,000.

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Chairman, I suggest the absence of the dollar mark before the figures "2,243,000," on line 13 of page 15.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, the dollar mark is already in this bill.

Mr. McARTHUR. I will state to the gentleman from Tennessee that it is not in my copy.

The CHAIRMAN. If the chairman of the committee will turn to line 13 of page 15, "For mail-messenger service," he will find that the dollar mark is omitted.

Mr. MOON. It is not omitted in this copy. Let it be there, for that is what they want. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say to the chairman of the committee that I believe we are now approaching that contentious clause, the pneumatic-tube service, and before the gentleman from Tennessee moves that the committee rise I would like to address the committee for five minutes in regard to the correction of the RECORD as to some remarks delivered yesterday.

Mr. MOON. Why do you not just expunge that speech and let the rest remain. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] might object to that. The gentleman from Indiana has changed the remarks he made to which I replied yesterday, thereby making my reply appear without real reason. I hold in my hand the Official Reporter's minutes of what the gentleman from Indiana did say, and what I had a colloquy with him about, and the Official Reporter's original minutes show that he referred to the remarks that I had made in my speech in which I said that the report of the Auditor for the Post Office Department showed that there was a deficit for the last three fiscal years.

Mr. MOON. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that there is nothing before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee makes the point of order that there is nothing before the House.

Mr. STEENERSON. I would like to have unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. MOON. Wait a minute. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that that is a matter that can not come up in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, but can only be taken up in the House.

Mr. STEENERSON. I am not seeking to correct the RECORD, but I simply want to call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] to the fact that the remarks that I replied to are not the remarks that he has put into the RECORD. I am correct in what I said and he puts into the RECORD something that makes my statement incorrect.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] asks unanimous consent to address the committee for five minutes. Is that the gentleman's request?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. COX. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I simply want to say that I secured, by unanimous consent, leave to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. STEENERSON. Even if the gentleman did, he would not have the right to make those changes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I think the purpose of the gentleman from Minnesota has been satisfied by the statement he has made, and I would request him not to press his request now, but that he will let it come up in the morning after we inserted the pneumatic-tube service item.

Mr. STEENERSON. No; I will do it before then. I will do it as a matter of personal privilege in the House to-morrow, if that is insisted upon. But I have just been handed the minutes of the Official Reporter, in which the gentleman from Indiana is shown to have changed the statements in which he criticized me. I said the RECORD proved one thing, and the remarks of the gentleman says something else.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not in order. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to address the committee for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, that would require a reply of five minutes, would it not?

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I object. I move the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the committee do now rise. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is agreed to. [Cries of "Division!"] Several gentlemen have demanded a division. Those in favor of the motion that the committee do now rise will rise and remain standing until they are counted. [After counting.] Twenty-seven gentlemen have arisen in the affirmative. The ayes will be seated, and the noes will rise and remain standing until they are counted. [After counting.] Forty-two gentlemen have arisen in the negative. On this question the ayes are 27 and the noes are 42. The committee refuses to rise.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Pending the count,

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraws the point. The Clerk will read.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CRISP, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the Post Office appropriation bill (H. R. 19410) and had come to no resolution thereon.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the subject of Government manufacture of munitions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the subject of Government manufacture of munitions. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing in the RECORD a résumé of documents pertaining to peace.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a résumé of documents in the interest of peace. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, January 13, 1917, at 11 o'clock a. m.

WHITE-PINE BLISTER RUST.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I have a letter from the State inspector of nurseries and orchards of Michigan which bears upon an important subject before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. As it is very brief, I ask that it may be read for the information of Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Michigan?

There being no objection, the letter was read and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as follows:

EAST LANSING, MICH., January 9, 1917.

Hon. WM. ALDEN SMITH,
Sendte Chamber, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SMITH: The report has reached me that the House Committee on Agriculture refuses to allow more than $35,000 to be placed in the Agriculture appropriation bill to be used for the suppression of the pine-blister rust in North America, and that in order to secure a larger sum than this for the purpose the bill will have to be amended after it reaches the Senate, and I am writing to call your attention to the importance of this matter to your State.

You are doubtless aware that this disease is practically fatal to pine forests and that, although but a few years in this country, it has obtained a foothold in a number of places in New England, New York, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and Ontario, and probably Ohio and Indiana. Although we are thus surrounded by infected regions it has not as yet, so far as we know, obtained a foothold in Michigan. Hence we are not only anxious to keep it out but to be prepared to suppress wherever and whenever it appears. In order to do this work effectually a large expenditure of money will be necessary, not only in suppressing it in the neighboring States, but also if it should obtain a foothold in Michigan.

While our State law with a few amendments which we expect to secure this winter will enable us to do good work, we shall require the assistance of men connected with the United States Department of Agriculture, and with the disease now present in a dozen or more States and likely to spread to others you can see that the sum mentioned will not provide very much assistance for Michigan.

While the greater part of our pine forests have been swept away, we still have considerable areas of virgin pine and several hundred thousand acres where the second growth is beginning to have some value upon land which is of little value except for growing timber. We have also in the State several thousand acres which an attempt is being made to reforest and upon which millions of white pine have been planted at a large expense.

The disease also attacks currants and gooseberries, and if it obtains a foothold in the State the same will certainly cause immense loss, especially in the Michigan fruit belt.

Trusting that you will use your best efforts to secure an increase in the above appropriation, I am

Yours, very truly,

L. R. TAFT,
State Inspector of Nurseries and Orchards.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I desire to offer a proposed amendment to the water-power bill (H. R. 408). I am not going to ask that it may be read at this time, but I desire to have it printed in the RECORD.

I should like to say a word in explanation of its purpose. As is well understood, the pending bill provides for the lease of water-power sites. This amendment proposes the sale and granting of those rights for a price either to be determined upon between the Secretary of the Interior and the purchaser, or, if they are unable to agree, then by proceedings in court. It is provided that the sale may be made to any person who has acquired the right to divert and distribute and use the waters under the laws of the State. It distinguishes from the other measure particularly because it provides for the sale rather than the leasing of water-power rights.

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered to be printed in the RECORD and to lie on the table, as follows:

Amend the amendment of the committee by striking out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That subject to the limitation and provisions in this act contained, the right of way is hereby granted to construct, develop, maintain, and operate all necessary or convenient dams, reservoirs, canals, conduits, pipe lines, tunnels, transmission lines, roads, power houses, and all other works or structures necessary or convenient for the appropriation and beneficial use of water and the power or other products generated thereby and for the utilization and beneficial use of the same on, over, under, and across any part of the public lands of the United States (including Alaska) reserved or unreserved, including national forests, national monuments, and Indian reservations, to any State or municipal subdivision thereof, or to any mutual or public-service corporation organized for the purpose or to any person or persons authorized by the State or States in which any portion of such works, structures, or appurtenances are situated: Provided, That as to any such rights or uses that are located within any national monuments or Indian reservations the same shall be located subject to the approval of and under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and in such a way as not to interfere with said national monuments or Indian reservations or the uses or purposes for which the same are created.

"SEC. 2. That any applicant for a grant hereunder may file with the Secretary of the Interior, or of the department having jurisdiction of such lands, proof of his right to the appropriation or use of water, together with plans and specifications for such works, together with such maps and drawings of the proposed canals, works, reservoirs, and other structures as may be required for the full understanding of the same, which plans and specifications and drawings shall be approved by the Secretary, subject to the laws of the State with respect to and controlling the appropriation and beneficial use of water for the purposes for which the same is being appropriated. If said proposed canals, works, reservoirs, or other structures are located within any national monument or Indian reservation, no work upon or in connection therewith shall be commenced or proceeded with until the location of the same is approved by the Secretary of the department having jurisdiction thereof, as hereinbefore in this act provided, and if within a forest reserve may be required to be so located as not unnecessarily to interfere with the purposes for which such reserve is created: Provided, That no grant shall be made under this act until the applicant shall have obtained and filed with the officer to whom the application is made a certificate from the State board, commission, or other body or officer having jurisdiction over the use of the waters of the streams of the State that such applicant has the lawful right to divert and use the water for the purpose or purposes for which the application is made. If no such body or officer exists in any State, then the officer to whom such application is made shall, in case of conflict, make the grant to the person having the legal right to the use of the water: Provided further, That within 90 days after the approval of such plans, specifications, and drawings said grantee and said Secretary shall agree upon the then fair market value of the lands proposed to be occupied or used and which are owned or controlled by the United States; and in the event of their failure to agree within such time, then such grantee shall have the right to and may bring proceedings in the district court of the United States for the district in which such lands are situated, or in which any part thereof may be located, for the purpose of determining the then fair market value thereof. Such district court is hereby given jurisdiction of such proceedings for such purpose and service of process may be had on the clerk of said court, and, upon service being made and within 30 days thereafter, the Attorney General of the United States shall enter his appearance for the United States. Such proceedings shall be conducted according to the laws and rules in force in such jurisdiction at such time for the exercise of the right of eminent domain for public purposes, with the right of appeal as in other cases. Upon an agreement being reached as to the fair market value of said land between said Secretary and the grantee, or, in the event of failure so to agree, then upon the bringing of such action in said court of the United States and upon the giving of a sufficient bond by the grantee, required and conditioned upon his complying with the order and judgment of the court and approved by the court, or upon the final adjudication of the value of said land, the grantee shall have the right to occupy the same for the purposes above set forth so long as and during such period or periods of time thereafter as the said grantee, its successors or assigns, shall be possessed of the right of appropriation and beneficial use of the waters appropriated and used in connection with said rights of way: And provided further, That if, and whenever, the right of appropriation and beneficial use of said waters and the right to use and enjoy the products thereof shall be assigned, transferred, conveyed, forfeited to, or vested in any other corporation or person or State or municipal subdivision thereof, then and thereupon the rights of way and all of the rights and privileges hereby granted to the grantee shall belong to and shall be vested in such successor in interest or right of the grantee or its successors or assigns, so that said right of way shall continue with, appertain to, and shall be used and enjoyed only by the grantee or its successors in interest, or in any State or municipal subdivision thereof having the right or being charged with the duty of appropriation and beneficial use of the waters diverted and used in connection with the rights of way so granted, and having the right to engage in and being charged with the duty of carrying on the service connected with the appropriation and beneficial use of said water or the electric power or products generated thereby or produced therefrom.

"SEC. 3. That in arriving at the fair market value of such land the parties, or, in case of disagreement, the court, shall take into account the enhanced value of said land for power plant or reservoir or other special purpose or purposes.

"SEC. 4. That in the event of the acquisition of the property of the grantee, including or connected with the rights and privileges obtained under this act, under the authority of the United States, or by or under the authority of any State or municipal subdivision thereof, the grantee shall not be entitled to claim or receive any compensation or value or in connection with any of the rights obtained or used under the provisions of this act. And the grantee and its successors in interest shall not be entitled, in the fixing of any rates by competent public authority, or by any State or legal subdivision thereof, to have or receive any allowance or earnings on account of any of the rights, uses, or privileges granted or received under this act, except such amounts, if any, as have been paid for the uses and privileges hereby granted and allowed.

"SEC. 5. That the grantee shall commence the construction of the proposed works within one year from the date of the agreement or final adjudication, or the approval of the bond, as in this act provided for, and shall thereafter, in good faith, continuously and with due diligence prosecute such construction, and shall within the further term of five years complete and put in commercial operation such development or such substantial part or portion thereof as the public needs shall demand, and shall complete and put in operation said entire development with due and reasonable diligence: Provided, That the rights of such grantee, its successors or assigns, shall not be forfeited or terminated so long as the grantee, his successors or assigns, remain vested with the right or duty to appropriate and beneficially use the waters or products thereof to be appropriated and used upon or in connection with said rights of way and shall be duly and reasonably exercising that right and duty: Provided, however, That whenever the rights of the grantee, its successors or assigns, are lost, forfeited, or transferred so that the water or the products thereof can not be appropriated or used upon or in connection with said rights of way, then and thereupon such rights of way or the parts or portions thereof which can not be so used or enjoyed shall revert to and be revested in the Government of the United States, or in the successor in interest of the said grantee entitled to and having the right to appropriate or beneficially use said waters or the products thereof: Provided further, That whenever the right to use the waters of the stream for the purposes of the grant shall be forfeited or otherwise terminated by the State wherein the land is situated or by final adjudication of the courts, then all the rights under the grant shall cease and terminate and the land revert to the United States.

"SEC. 6. That the rates and service of the grantee, its successors and assigns, shall be subject to regulation and control under the Constitution and laws of the United States and under the constitution and laws of the State or States within which the same are situated or used, and, in the event of forfeiture of any of the rights, privileges, or properties of the grantee, its successors or assigns, by reason or on account of the violation of any law of the United States or of any State, the rights hereby granted shall be forfeited therewith and shall revert to or be vested in the State or States, or municipal subdivisions thereof, or corporations or person or persons in whom the right or duty of appropriation and beneficial use of said waters or the products thereof shall be vested, and, in such event, without compensation to the grantee, its successors or assigns, for or in connection with any of the rights, uses, or privileges obtained, granted, or received under this act.

"SEC. 7. That rates and charges for power, or water furnished for irrigation or other use, shall be fixed and determined by the State in which the same is supplied: Provided, That where the power plant or reservoir site acquired under this act is in one State and power or water is supplied in another State any person supplied therewith in the latter State may apply to the Interstate Commerce Commission, or other body authorized by act of Congress, to fix such rates and charges for power or water supplied in such State.

"SEC. 8. That any qualified grantee or grantees under the terms of this act engaged in the appropriation and beneficial use of water or the products thereof, as in this act set forth under revocable permits or otherwise may come under and avail themselves of the privileges of this act upon application to the head of the department having jurisdiction of the administration of this act and, upon such application and the filing of the required plans, specifications, maps, and other data required, such qualified grantee shall come under and have and enjoy and be subject to all of the terms, rights, grants, conditions, limitations, and provisions of this act, upon compliance with its terms, as herein provided: Provided, That if any of its works or structures are in course of construction, or completion, at the time of so coming under the provisions of this act, the same shall be considered completed, used, operated, and enjoyed wholly under and in accordance with the terms and provisions and limitations of this act and as though originally authorized, granted, and constructed hereunder, and such grantee shall and may have the value of the rights and properties used and enjoyed under the terms of this act agreed upon or adjudicated and valued as in this act provided, and thereafter shall make payments to the Government of the United States in accordance with the terms of this act: Provided, also, That in the event of the rights and privileges of the grantee in connection with any existing uses or permits being brought under this act, thereupon and in connection therewith all of the other existing permits, rights, privileges, or claims of the grantee as to the rights and property so brought under this act shall be surrendered, canceled, nullified, and at an end, and the sole rights of the United States and the grantee as to such property shall be under and in accordance with this act.

"SEC. 9. That the Secretary of the Interior, or other Secretary having jurisdiction and control over any lands subject to the provisions of this act, shall make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and appropriate and for the purposes of and having the effect of carrying out the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 10. That the rights and privileges herein granted may be transferred, assigned, conveyed, mortgaged, or otherwise disposed of by the grantee, but only under and in accordance with and subject to the provisions of this act and under and in accordance with the laws of the United States and of any State or States within which such said works are situated and any assignee or successor in interest of the grantee hereunder shall be subject to all of the terms and conditions of this act and to the laws of the United States and of the State or States within which said property or works are situated in all respects and to the same extent as the original grantee hereunder.

"SEC. 11. That the United States shall at all times have the right to reserve, sell, or otherwise dispose of all or any part of the lands or the products thereof upon, over, or in connection with which the rights, privileges, structures, and uses hereunder provided for are situated, subject to all of the rights of way, uses, occupancies, and privileges hereunder granted, including the right to all necessary means of ingress and egress used or reasonably required in the use and enjoyment of the rights and privileges granted hereunder.

"SEC. 12. That nothing in this act shall be construed as affecting or intended to affect, or to in any way interfere with the laws of any State relating to the control, appropriation, use, or distribution of water.

"SEC. 13. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed, and the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved: Provided, That in case any grantee hereunder shall, at the time of such alteration, amendment, or repeal, have exercised rights in accordance with this act, such rights and property used thereunder shall be deemed property rights of such grantee, of which such grantee shall not be deprived by such alteration, amendment, or repeal, and only upon the conditions provided in this act."

Amend the title to read: "An act to provide for the disposition of the public lands for the supply of water for irrigation and the generation of power."

So Mr. SHAFROTH's motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9533) to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief explanation concerning this bill, and thus avoid the necessity of having it read in full.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator if the bill has been read?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know whether it has or not. I think not, however.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, Mr. President, if the bill has not been read, would it not be well to have it read now?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I thought we could have it read for amendment. Of course, it has to be read; but I have only an hour and 20 minutes, and I should like to make some headway. If the bill is read, we shall accomplish nothing whatever, because the bill contains 52 pages.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the bill ought to be read. If the Senator desires to speak on it first, of course, I have no objection; but I want the bill read.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have no objection to the bill being read for committee amendments; but I should like to make a brief explanation concerning the necessity for this legislation. I do not think anybody will ask that the bill be read in full before it is read for amendment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, there has been no unanimous consent given to put this bill aside without reading, has there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No request for unanimous consent has been submitted.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I expect to ask unanimous consent after I make the explanation.

Mr. President, as everyone knows, Porto Rico came to us as a result of the Spanish-American War. There was a bill enacted, known as the Foraker bill, under which the government of Porto Rico has been operating ever since its passage in 1900. That bill was a temporary measure. It conferred no rights, as we understand them in our Bill of Rights, but simply provided for a form of government there, specifying a governor and certain insular officers, creating courts in the island, and recognizing the laws of Porto Rico as they existed at that time.

The Porto Rican people have continually insisted that there should be some changes in respect to that law. In the first place, no citizenship whatever is conferred by the Foraker Act, but persons are described as citizens of Porto Rico, and Porto Rico being in possession of the United States there ought to be a recognition of their citizenship in the United States. For many years there was a division of the parties in Porto Rico as to what should be done with relation to citizenship, some holding out for independence, others contending that they wanted citizenship in the United States. Now, the political parties in the island have changed their positions upon the citizenship question. There seems in recent years to be less opposition to citizenship on the part of Porto Rican people, so we have provided in this bill that they shall become citizens of the United States unless they protest against it, unless they file with the court a declaration that they want to remain citizens of Porto Rico.

This bill, Mr. President, proposes to give them what is termed a bill of rights—certain rights that are usually specified in our State constitutions, and providing considerable guaranties in regard to liberty, the writ of habeas corpus, and other matters of that nature. Then there are certain limitations.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I notice in this so-called bill of rights to which the Senator has been referring the last provision on page 5:

> That the right of action to recover damages for injuries resulting in death shall never be abrogated.

I want to ask the Senator whether or not the committee has given any particular consideration to that provision?

Mr. SHAFROTH. We have, as a matter of fact, gone over the bill very carefully. It has been difficult to get quorums; but we have had consideration by individual members of the committee of every one of the provisions contained in the measure. That is one of the provisions that came over from the House as a part of the House bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I want to suggest to the Senator the advisability of giving some consideration to that provision. There is such a provision in several of the State constitutions of the United States, and it has been found exceedingly embarrassing when the States have undertaken to provide workmen's compensation laws. I suggest to the Senator the advisability of considering whether, in view of that fact, that particular provision should not be omitted from the bill of rights.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will defer that matter until we come to offering amendments, and then upon his offering such an amendment we can take it up and consider it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am calling attention to it now, because I think it is a matter which the committee itself should consider.

Mr. SHAFROTH. All right. At the proper time we will consider it; but I want to give a general summary of the bill so that we shall have a general idea of it without going into the particular details, as I want to ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill, in the first instance, in full shall be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I shall object to that.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am not asking that yet. I have said that I wished to make this statement, and then I shall make the request.

Mr. President, the citizenship which is provided in this bill is what is called a collective citizenship, declaring all persons to be citizens unless they object to it and file with the court a declaration that they desire to remain citizens of Porto Rico. As to citizenship, there has been some inquiry as to the character of the people constituting the inhabitants of Porto Rico; and I have here a statement, compiled from the census of 1910, which gives the total of population and of the races.

The total population of Porto Rico is 1,118,012. The number of whites is 732,555. The number of mulattoes is 335,192, and the number of blacks 50,245. This becomes pertinent in view of the provision which we have adopted in the bill concerning those who can vote. This statement says:

> It may be pertinent to add that 79.9 per cent of the population of Porto Rico live on farms or are a rural population, and of this number nearly 80 per cent are white; the 1910 figures being 610,541 whites, as against 288,841 colored.

Mr. President, under the present law we have provided that the revenues collected in Porto Rico shall belong to the government of Porto Rico. We also provide in this bill for the turning over of property—not the title but possession of the property of the United States—to the Porto Rican government, and provide that the Porto Rican government shall turn over to the United States certain properties which are needed by the United States Government. We simply transfer whatever property of the United States it does not desire for its own use to the control of the government of Porto Rico, but we do not give the title thereto. The bill also provides that the laws of the United States not locally inapplicable shall apply, except the internal-revenue laws of the United States; and as to those, the internal revenues are to go to Porto Rico for the maintenance of their government.

We also provide that all officials and voters must be United States citizens; and we extend the suffrage to those who can read and write the Spanish or the English language, or who shall pay a property tax of $3 a year, or for 10 years those who have voted at the last general election in Porto Rico.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. Have you a property qualification for voters?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; it is an alternative one.

Mr. LANE. It amounts to the same thing, does it not?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no; it does not amount to the same thing.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If he has the property, he can vote; or if he has the educational qualifications.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; if he has the property he can vote, or if he has the education he can vote; or—this being a matter we have had considerable discussion over—if a man voted at the last general election down there, then he is entitled to vote for at least 10 years at all elections.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I have heard a great deal of criticism from some quarters with regard to that provision—that the bill contains a property qualification which excludes hundreds upon hundreds of worthy citizens who are impecunious, who work for their living—workingmen.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It excludes none of them if they can read and write.

Mr. LANE. Well, that would exclude a very great many good people from voting.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It does not exclude for 10 years anybody who has voted, and the general right to vote has existed in Porto Rico for years and years. They poll an enormous vote, considering the population—two hundred and some odd thousand voters.

Mr. LANE. But it does exclude a number of thousands of active, honest, industrious workmen in that country, does it not?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No, sir.

Mr. LANE. That is what I have understood.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There was a contention in the committee that the property qualification or the educational qualification should apply to everyone, just as it applies to all in the Philippines. Objection was made that these people had been voting for years, even under Spanish rule, having fully as large a voting population in proportion to the total population as the United States has, and therefore its limitation would be a great disappointment to them. I proposed an amendment which provided that they should all be entitled to vote as long as they live.

Mr. LANE. Well, Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let me finish, please. The other members or some members of the committee objected to that; and so as a compromise we agreed to allow those people who had been voting, and who constituted practically all the voting population of the Territory, to vote for 10 years, so as to give them an opportunity to prepare to become sufficiently educated to vote. That is the situation as it stands to-day, and there may be an amendment offered to give them full right to vote, just as they have been doing.

Mr. LANE. I will ask the Senator, then, if he would be willing to accept an amendment to that effect?

Mr. SHAFROTH. That was my suggestion. If I am not bound by my compromise, I should be perfectly willing to agree to that, because I think it is right; but that will come up later.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. Did I understand the Senator to say that the right was granted for 10 years, so that they may qualify themselves to vote?

Mr. SHAFROTH. So that they may come within the educational qualification. There are a great many persons in Porto Rico who can not read or write, and this bill as it is now framed gives the right to vote to those who can read and write, and preserves to those who have been voting, whether they can read and write or not, the right to vote for 10 years, so that in 10 years they can educate themselves sufficiently to read and write.

Mr. GALLINGER. They are pretty slow people if it takes them 10 years to learn to read and write.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That may be. Nevertheless, there are other people who are contending, just like the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE], that they ought to vote continually because they have had that right under Spanish rule and under American rule up to this time.

Mr. GALLINGER. One other question. Did I understand the Senator to say that in the educational test they must be able to read and write either the English or the Spanish language?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. GALLINGER. Why not extend it to all other languages, as we do in the immigration bill?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The reason for that is that most of these people are Spanish, and that is the only language spoken there outside of the English language, which we are introducing into the island. Our schools are conducted in English.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no disposition to press that matter at all. It struck me, however, that it was rather restrictive.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do.

Mr. LODGE. Just for information, if the Senator will allow me, the amendment of the Senator from Oregon, which I understood the Senator to accept——

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I have not fully accepted that amendment. I stated that if the other members of the committee would agree to it, I would accept it. That provision was in the bill as I originally introduced it, namely, that those persons who had been voting at the elections under both Spanish rule and the rule of the United States should continue to have that right.

Mr. LODGE. The purpose of the amendment is what I want to find out. The purpose is to make sure that all the illiterates vote?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The object of the amendment is not to take away a right which they have had and which they have exercised ever since Porto Rico has been a possession of the United States or of Spain.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota and Mr. POMERENE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I desire to ask whether this qualification would apply to anyone who had voted, for instance, just once, or whether it must apply to a longer term?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The bill as it was introduced by me applied to those who had voted at the last general election, at which there was a very large vote, and which gave the right to those persons to vote in the future, intending to recognize those who had voted. There was a registration list made, and it was an election at which no fraud was charged. Consequently, we adopted that as a basis in the first instance; but the committee changed that and made this other rule. If an amendment is offered, that will come up at the time the amendment is offered. I now yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator made a statement awhile ago, if I understood him correctly, to the effect that these people were required to be able to read and write in the Spanish language or in the English language as one qualification for voting. Section 35 of the bill I have before me provides:

> That no person shall be allowed to register as a voter or to vote in Porto Rico unless he is a citizen of the United States, over 21 years of age, and is able to read and write—

And so forth.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes.

Mr. POMERENE. But it does not limit it to the English language or to the Spanish language.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That may be; but I suppose it was because they all speak those languages and hardly any others. It may be that the Senator is correct in regard to that matter.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator a further question? You have here both the qualifications of reading and writing and the property qualification. If it is right to have a property qualification, why not have it apply to everybody?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is not intended to apply to those people who can read or write nor to the people who have voted.

Mr. POMERENE. Does the Senator really think there should be a property qualification?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I do not think of necessity there should be; but some people may not be able to read or write and yet have property who would be in a better position to exercise good judgment perhaps, and they ought not to be excluded.

Mr. POMERENE. Many of our own States do not have any property qualification.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly; that is true.

Mr. POMERENE. Not even requiring the payment of a poll tax.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes.

Mr. POMERENE. Why should you be more drastic in your qualification of electors in these islands than we are in the United States?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I want to say this to the Senator, that the bill came over from the House in that way, and we did not want to make any more changes than were absolutely necessary. It can come up, and will come up no doubt, on a motion to change that provision.

Mr. POMERENE. Another matter that has interested me very much is why you should want to give the right to vote to these people at all, in view of what occurred here in the Senate a few days ago concerning the people of the District of Columbia. Why should we be interested in giving them the right to vote and deny the people of the District of Columbia the right to vote?

Mr. SHAFROTH. That involves an entirely different proposition. These people have been exercising the right to vote for years and years and the people of the District of Columbia have not exercised that right.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator will allow me, Porto Rico has not been set apart as the seat of government of the United States.

Mr. POMERENE. No; but——

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I do not want to go into that discussion.

Mr. POMERENE. If I may add just one observation, we have full legislative control over Porto Rico just as we have over the District of Columbia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is true, and we have over Alaska.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Now, Mr. President, we have created in the bill the office of governor and prescribed certain duties and powers that he should exercise, among which is the veto power. We have created what is called an executive council, which consists of the attorney general, the treasurer, the commissioner of the interior, the commissioner of education, and the commissioner of agriculture and labor. These are practically members of the cabinet of the governor. We have also created a senate elective by the people.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator if he will be kind enough in giving a matter of that kind to refer to the sections, if it is not too much bother.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know that I can do so; I have just summarized without having the bill before me. Section 12 begins with the executive department, the governor. Section 13 relates to the executive department, naming the commissioners with the heads of the departments who constitute the council. Then we have section 14 giving the duties of the attorney general; section 15 giving the duties of the treasurer; section 16, of the commissioner of the interior; section 17, of the commissioner of education. Then we have an auditor created in section 20, which is a necessary provision. Then there are appeals provided from the auditor in section 21. Then there is an executive secretary created in section 22, and certain heads of departments to act as governor under certain conditions and circumstances. Then comes the legislative department.

Porto Rico has now a legislature which is an elective body, and has the power to pass all the laws; but the executive council as now constituted has the right to reject the laws, and those officers in the executive council are officers appointed by the President. Consequently the people of Porto Rico have not that full degree of self-government which we think they are entitled to have. This bill provides that there shall be an elective senate. It provides that there shall be created a certain number of districts—seven districts—each to have two senators. Then there are five senators to be elected at large, and they are to hold their term for four years. The house is to consist of 39 members, 35 of whom are elected from districts and 4 of whom are elected at large in the possession. The veto power is given. It takes two-thirds to override the veto of the governor, but in certain circumstances, if the veto is made and it is overridden, still it can be referred to the President who, if he desires to act, has an absolute veto.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KENYON. I notice the bill provides a property qualification for membership of the Senate.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. KENYON. And also an amendment by the committee reads "assessed in his name and upon which he pays taxes." What is the purpose of having a property qualification for membership?

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is a provision of the bill as it came over from the House, and we did not like to make any more changes than were necessary. That will be discussed no doubt upon a question to change or modify it by Senators who, of course, will exercise their individual judgment as to which is the best mode of procedure and which rule should prevail.

There are certain limitations also provided against any person in the legislature being appointed to office, and then it is provided that the Resident Commissioner shall be elected; and I want to say to the Senate——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. Just a moment. One of the urgent reasons for the passage of this bill is that the recent Resident Commissioner to the Congress of the United States from Porto Rico died in November last, and they have no representative here to look after their own affairs; and it is hoped the bill will be passed so that a new Resident Commissioner can be elected. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Would the Senator in charge of the bill have any particular objection to striking out the words "and in addition thereto there shall be elected 5 senators at large," so that there would be 14 senators, 2 from each district?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, we went over that pretty carefully, and we thought that there should be elected some senators at large. Of course, we do not want to have a long discussion on these matters, but at the same time I believe it is a good provision. The senators at large are supposed to represent some cities more particularly that would not perhaps be able to get a representative there. It is a very small minority. It is supposed that they could get a minority representation there, because it will be observed that that provision is intended to give a minority representation. The method of voting for senators at large is that the electors shall vote for only one candidate, and the five receiving the highest number of votes are declared elected.

There is great complaint made that while a minority may be very large and very important sometimes, by means of direct voting for groups of candidates, the minority is denied all representation. With these five senators and four representatives, it is presumed by the system we have recommended there will be a respectable minority party, and that they can get at least one representative in the senate and one in the legislature. Now I call attention to the wording of the provision:

> In electing the five senators at large each elector shall be permitted to vote for but one candidate, and the five candidates receiving the largest number of votes shall be declared elected.

Mr. LANE. From what page does the Senator read?

Mr. SHAFROTH. From page 23.

Mr. BORAH. I am not going to detain the Senator now, but at the proper time I am going to move to strike that out, in the interest of economy and simplicity of government.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have no objection to its being considered at the proper time, but I want to get through with the statement I have to make.

Mr. President, there is also a public-service commission that is elected, by which certain powers are given them in regard to regulating utility companies, giving them certain powers to enforce rates, which we think is in accordance with the laws of almost all the States of the Union.

Then we provide a judicial department, a supreme court appointed by the President of the United States and confirmed by the Senate of the United States, just as the Supreme Court of the Philippines and the Supreme Court of the Hawaiian Islands are appointed; also the appointment of a United States district judge, whose term of office shall be four years.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator has called attention to the two branches of the legislature. I notice in section 33 there is a provision that the governor may call special sessions of the legislature or of the senate, and subsequent to that it speaks of the senate being called in special session. Is it intended that the senate shall legislate without reference to the other branch?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; but there are certain appointments by the governor which must be confirmed, and it is thought that there is no necessity to call the entire legislature together for the purpose of getting the senate to act on confirmations. For that reason that power is given.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the purpose of it?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir; that is the purpose of it.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me again, I notice a recent act was passed that had an incongruity in it as to the date. Has the Senator noticed that section 29 provides that "the next election in Porto Rico shall be held in the year 1916"? That ought to be changed, of course.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The bill was considered in the first instance when certain dates would have applied and now the dates do not apply. I am going to offer some amendments with relation to those dates so as to make the bill operative.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is why I called the Senator's attention to the necessity of amending it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The salaries of officers are fixed as practically they are now. The salary of the governor is $8,000 a year; of judges of the supreme court, $5,500 a year; of the chief justice, $6,500; of the executive officers, $5,000. Those salaries about conform to the salaries given in the various States of the Union.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BROUSSARD. I should like to ask the Senator what is his disposition with regard to the amendment which I have pending here to section 40 of the bill, whether the chairman of the committee is willing to accept the amendment tendered on the floor or whether it is his disposition to oppose the amendment. I do that because I am as much in favor of the passage of this bill as the chairman of the committee, but I do not believe the bill should pass without this amendment being included within it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state, in that connection, that at first I was somewhat favorable to the amendment that was offered, but I can not find that we should change the system as the Senator has proposed it in his amendment. His amendment relates to the forfeiture of certain lands in excess of 500 acres and provides that that forfeiture shall be made to the Government of Porto Rico. A law was passed which limited the amount of land which corporations could own to 500 acres. I believe that ought to be extended and enlarged. I do not believe that forfeitures should be made to vest these lands in the Territory of Porto Rico, because these companies have bought and paid for the land, and if there is any provision contained in the bill with relation to it it ought, it seems to me, to be a provision that the Attorney General shall begin a suit to compel them to sell the land within a certain time, so that there will not be the loss of the large sums of money which they have invested. It seems to me that is a more equitable way of getting rid of excessive ownership in corporations.

I presume that the amendment applies to the sugar lands more particularly, those being about the only corporations that own any great quantity of land there.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to say to the Senator from Louisiana that his amendment can not be accepted by unanimous consent. I have been informed that there are Senators who are opposed to the amendment to be offered by the Senator and that when it is offered they will desire to discuss the matter.

Mr. BROUSSARD. In that event, Mr. President, I shall have to object to the request for unanimous consent and ask for the reading of the bill and the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana objects, and the bill will be read.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I wish to state that I do not want to delay the passage of the bill if it can be helped, but I have been ill and since my return I have been trying to get the committee together to consider the proposition to which the Senator from Colorado refers. The fact of the matter is that there is a law on the statute books now. It is the law now that the holding of property in the island is limited to 500 acres. The act of 1900 fixed that limitation upon landowning in Porto Rico. In the draft of this bill, though I have been very diligent in attending the committee every day that it held its sessions up to the time I became sick, it never occurred to me to look into the matter to see whether that law was included in the bill or not, and it was only after the committee had reported the bill that I ascertained that a section of that law, a portion of the act of 1900, had not been included in the bill; in fact, that the section limiting the ownership of land in the island had been omitted from the bill.

I immediately appealed to the chairman of the committee to get the committee together that we might thrash out this matter, and if the limit of the holdings there was too limited for the proper development of the agricultural lands of the island we could extend in the bill the right to own more than the limitation fixed in the act of 1900. I have never been able to get an opportunity to present the matter to the committee, and I can not consent to considering the bill merely in the morning hour for the reason I believe this matter is too important to permit the bill to be considered in a hasty way with this omission of the limitations of the act of 1900.

I make this statement in justice to myself, because the statement of the Senator would create possibly the impression in the minds of Senators that this is a new proposition. It is not a new proposition. The act of May 1, 1900, section 3, is reproduced in the bill under consideration as section 39. The first part of it with some little alterations in order to adapt the law to the commission that is created in the bill is the same as the act of 1900. But the moment you reach the part limiting the holding of lands by individuals or corporations in Porto Rico the matter is dropped, and there is not a word in the proposed law which in effect in my judgment would repeal the old law placing that limitation. The old law says:

No corporation shall be authorized to conduct the business of buying and selling real estate or be permitted to hold or own real estate, except such as may be reasonably necessary to enable it to carry out the purposes for which it was created, and every corporation hereafter authorized to engage in agriculture shall by its charter be restricted to the ownership and control of not to exceed 500 acres of land; and this provision shall be held to prevent any member of a corporation engaged in agriculture from being in any wise interested in any other corporation engaged in agriculture. Corporations, however, may loan funds upon real estate security, and purchase real estate when necessary for the collection of loans, but they shall dispose of real estate so obtained within five years after receiving the title. Corporations not organized in Porto Rico and doing business therein shall be bound by the provisions of this section so far as they are applicable.

Mr. President, it is clear to me that if this law has been maintained in Porto Rico there is no harm at all in reenacting this portion of the law, as the first part of that law is proposed to be reenacted in the bill under consideration. If there has been a violation of the statute, it is clear that it is the duty of Congress to maintain the integrity of its own legislation.

Mr. SHAFROTH and Mr. BORAH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BROUSSARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I want to say just a word with relation to the statement which has just been made. The language which is in the bill at the present time is the identical language which was contained in the bill as it came from the House of Representatives. When the Senator from Louisiana, who has been one of the diligent members of the committee and has appeared almost every time when we have considered this bill, suggested to me that there had been an omission in that respect I immediately thought that there ought to be some remedy for it; but I find upon examining the matter that the language to which he refers is not repealed. I find that there is a provision in the bill itself that keeps alive those matters. Section 59 provides:

SEC. 59. That all laws or parts of laws applicable to Porto Rico not in conflict with any of the provisions of this act, including the laws relating to tariffs, customs, and duties on importations into Porto Rico prescribed by the act of Congress entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," approved April 12, 1900, are hereby continued in effect, and all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

I am perfectly willing, when that matter is reached in the consideration of the bill, to have it amended in some particulars, but not to the extent of the stringent provisions which are contained in the Senator's amendment. I believe that the ownership of a certain quantity of land should be allowed; that it ought not to be limited to 500 acres. We have a limitation in the Philippine Islands of 2,640 acres; perhaps that is a little too much for Porto Rico; but I believe they should have a fair quantity of land there on which to raise sugar cane. That seems to me to be quite just and right. We have no limitation on the quantity of sugar-beet land that may be owned by a corporation in Colorado; there is no limitation whatever as to the quantity of land that can be used for the raising of sugar cane in Louisiana; and to fix the limit in this case at 500 acres, which is an insufficient quantity of land to enable a company to raise sugar cane, which they might desire to raise or which they ought to have, seems to me would be an improper restriction.

I am willing to meet the Senator from Louisiana in some way and to adjust these matters in a fair manner, but I am not willing to accept his amendment in its present shape, because I think it is too drastic.

Another objection is that the Senator's proposal embodies the idea that there shall be forfeited to Porto Rico all lands which have been bought in excess of 500 acres. There was no penalty attached to the act in regard to the limitation of 500 acres. Those who acquired the lands have paid full value for them. I do not know how large are the areas they have, but I do not think there are any very large plantations down there. However, I repeat, whatever they have they have paid full value for. So I want to suggest to the Senator that instead of providing that the lands be forfeited to Porto Rico, by which the owners would loose them absolutely, they be required to dispose of those lands so as to get them in individual ownership, in order that the evils that might result from excessive holdings of real estate may be avoided, without the severe penalty of forfeiture to the Porto Rican government being inflicted. I now yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator has answered the question which I was going to ask. I simply wanted to know the particular point which the Senator from Louisiana was urging. I understand it now.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will ask the Secretary to proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have received some little correspondence regarding this measure, and I have here a statement submitted by one Santiago Inglesian, of Porto Rico, which I should like to have read. I am impressed with the thought that some of the provisions of the bill proposed by the Senator are utterly in contradiction with the genius and the spirit of American institutions. I can not see with what good grace we can stand up and pass a law providing that a senator or a member of the lower house of the Assembly of Porto Rico shall own in the case of a senator property worth no less than $1,000 and in the case of a representative property worth no less than $500. I can not see with what grace that is done.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I hope the Senator will defer that point until we reach that part of the bill, which evidently it is manifest can not be reached to-day.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It seems to me a matter of such importance that it ought to be given careful consideration.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will say to the Senator that the provision in regard to the qualification of members of the legislature is about the same, I think, as that which is contained in the Philippine bill, which we have passed; but I, too, think it should have careful consideration.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That may be, but two wrongs do not make a right. I think that is a manifest wrong and utterly opposed to our democratic ideas and our democratic institutions. However, I will retain this letter and bring the matter up at some future time and shall then ask to have the letter read.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. With reference to the matter mentioned by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH], I wish to say that section 39 of the bill seems to me to refer to grants, franchises, and privileges, and I do not see that it covers the subject which the Senator from Louisiana mentions; neither does section 40, which has reference to the head tax. I should like to inquire what section really the Senator refers to?

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator, I can state in a moment just where reference is made to this amendment. Section 39 of the pending bill is the same as section 40 of the act of May 1, 1900, with this exception, that half of that act has been omitted in the present bill, and my amendment is to reinsert that half.

While on this subject, if the Senator from Colorado will permit me, Mr. President, the very statement made by the Senator shows the necessity of the committee taking cognizance of and discussing the amendment which I have here. That matter should be, in my judgment, thrashed out by the committee. I am not in disaccord with the Senator, as I have stated to him heretofore, as to the limitations fixed in the present law. It is possible that we can reach a better adjustment than that fixed in the law, but it is impossible, in my judgment, to take up the matter on the floor of the Senate and reach a fair conclusion as to what limitations shall be placed upon the holding of land in Porto Rico. So, in default of having had opportunity for the committee to consider it, I have been compelled to bring the matter to the attention of the Senate by simply repeating in my amendment the present wording of the law.

The fact is, Mr. President, that this is a most important thing for the peace, the quiet, and the prosperity of that island. The omission of this limitation, if this bill is permitted to be passed without any restrictions, means that there will be a foreign land-owning class; that the island will be owned by men not residing in the island. There will be a repetition of conditions that have existed in other parts of the world, where one people have undertaken to govern another people. It will mean the absorption of every acre of land in the island by large corporations with large means, and that the population of that island will be working for day wages. It will be a repetition in Porto Rico of what is transpiring in Mexico to-day; and unless there is a restriction, these lands will be absorbed by large corporations and will be owned by foreign landlords, thus bringing about a condition of absentee landlordism there, and there never will be quiet in the island unless some restrictions are placed upon the holding of lands.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that I am in favor of a limitation, and I am perfectly willing, if we do not finish the bill this morning, to call the committee together for the purpose of discussing this very proposition.

Mr. BROUSSARD. That is what I have been and am trying to have done.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But I want to make some headway now, and I ask that the reading of the bill be proceeded with.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, in connection with the Senator's statement I should like to ask him to state briefly why the amendment proposed by me was not included in the bill? I refer to the prohibition amendment, the adoption of which was urged by representatives from Porto Rico who appeared before the committee.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator that that provision was not put on the bill by the committee, as there were certain protests against it that were filed by the Legislature of Porto Rico and by various other bodies; but when the time comes to present amendments, of course the Senator can offer his amendment. I now ask that the reading of the bill be proceeded with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill and proceeded to state an amendment, on page 11, line 11.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, as I understand, this is the first reading of the bill. It is not now being read for amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A request has not been made to dispense with the first reading of the bill. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I hope the Secretary will not read quite so fast. We can not get the connection.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I present the conference report on the immigration bill, and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 10384, "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 6, 7, and 35.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 29, 30, 31, 33, 34, 36, 37, and 38, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed insert the following: "unless otherwise provided for by existing treaties, persons who are natives of islands not possessed by the United States adjacent to the Continent of Asia, situate south of the twentieth parallel latitude north, west of the one hundred and sixtieth meridian of longitude east from Greenwich, and north of the tenth parallel of latitude south, or who are natives of any country, province, or dependency situate on the Continent of Asia west of the one hundred and tenth meridian of longitude east from Greenwich and east of the fiftieth meridian of longitude east from Greenwich and south of the fiftieth parallel of latitude north, except that portion of said territory situate between the fiftieth and the sixty-fourth meridians of longitude east from Greenwich and the twenty-fourth and thirty-eighth parallels of latitude north, and no alien now in any way excluded from or prevented from entering the United States shall be admitted to the United States"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out insert the following:

"SEC. 11a. That the Secretary of Labor is hereby authorized and directed to enter into negotiations, through the Department of State, with countries vessels of which bring aliens to the United States, with a view to detailing inspectors and matrons of the United States Immigration Service for duty on vessels carrying immigrant or emigrant passengers between foreign ports and ports of the United States. When such inspectors and matrons are detailed for said duty they shall remain in that part of the vessel where immigrant passengers are carried; and it shall be their duty to observe such passengers during the voyage and report to the immigration authorities in charge at the port of landing any information of value in determining the admissibility of such passengers that may have become known to them during the voyage."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed insert the following:

"All aliens coming to the United States shall be required to state under oath the purposes for which they come, the length of time they intend to remain in the United States, whether or not they intend to abide in the United States permanently and become citizens thereof, and such other items of information regarding themselves as will aid the immigration officials in determining whether they belong to any of the excluded classes enumerated in section 3 hereof."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 32, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate insert the following: "taken up his permanent residence in this country"; and the Senate agree to the same.

E. D. SMITH,
THOMAS W. HARDWICK,
H. C. LODGE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JOHN L. BURNETT,
E. A. HAYES,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. There was a little difference between the two Houses as to the date when the act should take effect. The House of Representatives ruled that where there was one date fixed by the House and another date fixed by the Senate the date had to be fixed in between the two and that the conferees could not go beyond the ultimate date fixed by the Senate. That was the only matter in conference. The correction has been made, and the conferees have agreed; and I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the conference report?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I think I shall have to object to the consideration of the conference report.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator from New Jersey will allow me, the only point at issue was the change of the date when the law shall go into effect. There was nothing else at all in conference. It has already been agreed to in the House, and I hope the Senator from New Jersey will not delay the adoption of the report.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am utterly opposed to the bill. My attention was called some hours ago to the fact of this little irregularity, and I feel that consistently with my judgment and position on the immigration bill I can not acquiesce.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Then, Mr. President, I ask that the conference report be taken up for consideration, notwithstanding the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Secretary read Rule XXVII.

The Secretary read as follows:

Rule XXVII. The presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order, except when the Journal is being read or a question of order or a motion to adjourn is pending, or while the Senate is dividing; and when received the question of proceeding to the consideration of the report, if raised, shall be immediately put, and shall be determined without debate.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. All right.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

Mr. GRONNA. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	Norris	Sutherland
Borah	Harding	Oliver	Swanson
Bryan	Husting	Pittman	Thompson
Chamberlain	James	Poindexter	Tillman
Chilton	Johnson, Me.	Ransdell	Townsend
Clapp	Johnson, S. Dak.	Shafroth	Wadsworth
Colt	Jones	Sheppard	Walsh
Culberson	Kenyon	Smith, Ga.	Watson
Cummins	Lane	Smith, Mich.	Williams
Curtis	McCumber	Smith, S. C.	Works
du Pont	Martine, N. J.	Smoot
Fletcher	Myers	Sterling
Gallinger	Newlands	Stone

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the immigration bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

GOVERNMENT OF PORTO RICO.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9533) to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, at this time I have no desire to interfere with the further reading of the Porto Rican bill. I have here a document with reference to Porto Rico I desire to offer without reading and ask to have it printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if these are remarks that the Senator himself proposes to make, there is objection, because it is contrary to all the rules of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was just asking. Is there objection to including in the RECORD certain matter presented by the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. SMOOT. I want to know what it is, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the matter be read.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not want it read. I want the Senator to state it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I do not want to burden the Senate with it, but it is apropos of the bill that is before us. I only asked that it might go into the RECORD to save time. However, I will withhold it until some other time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the Secretary read to line 8 on page 19.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business of the Senate, which is House bill 408.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes.

Mr. THOMAS resumed the speech begun by him yesterday. After having spoken, with interruptions, for three hours,

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it is now 5 o'clock on Saturday afternoon, and I should like to ask the Senator having the bill in charge if there is going to be an executive session?

Mr. CHILTON. We want to have an executive session.

Mr. MYERS. I am told that an executive session is desired; yes. I am informed by some of the Senators who want an executive session that it will last only about 10 minutes.

Mr. SMOOT. In view of the fact that it is 5 o'clock on Saturday afternoon and that we have been in session five hours today, does not the Senator think we might go into executive session at this time?

Mr. MYERS. It seems to me, Mr. President, that we might run till half past 5, anyway. I am told that the executive session will take only 10 minutes.

Mr. THOMAS. Let me run until half past 5, and have the executive session then.

Mr. MYERS. That is what I am suggesting—that the Senator from Colorado be allowed to speak until 5.30, anyway.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I make a suggestion to the Senator, if he will yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. The kind of argument that the Senator from Colorado is making is extremely interesting; and to those of us who have stayed during the entire argument I want to say that it is as fatiguing as it is to the Senator who is making it——

Mr. THOMAS. Perhaps more so.

Mr. NORRIS. Because it is a legal argument that requires attention all the time. I think those Senators who have been out of the Chamber practically all the afternoon, and who have just come in, ought not to say to us who have been here all the time that we had better run on for an hour or so.

Mr. MYERS. I have been here nearly all the time, I will say to the Senator. I was called out for about 15 minutes at one time and 10 minutes at another.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to hear the Senator from Colorado clear through and as long as he wishes to proceed to-day; but one can not digest an argument of this kind that is five or six hours long without having some rest.

Mr. MYERS. I ask the Senator would he object to the Senator from Colorado continuing until 5.30?

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, I realize that the Senator from Colorado has more to say about it than I.

Mr. MYERS. I ask the Senator from Colorado would he prefer to quit now or to go on until 5.30?

Mr. THOMAS. Of course, if the Senator consults my feeling and wish about it, I will state that I am pretty tired; but I have no wish to interfere with the progress of the bill to any greater degree than is necessary.

Mr. MYERS. Very well. Then, I will make a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CHILTON. I ask the Senator to yield to me to submit a report from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. MYERS. I yield for that purpose.

JOSEPH BEALE.

Mr. CHILTON. From the Committee on Naval Affairs I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 7742) placing Joseph Beale on the retired list of the Navy. The bill was considered by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. We do not know what the bill is.

Mr. CHILTON. I was just going to state what it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah object to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. CHILTON. I will state that the bill proposes to place on the retired list without pay or compensation Mr. Joseph Beale, a graduate at Annapolis, who served many years in the Navy and resigned from the Navy. At the beginning of the Spanish-American War he was among the first who volunteered; he served; he was honorably discharged; and he is now dying. He will die in a few days, and if the Senate wants to do anything for him it ought to be done now. It is simply a little recognition of patriotic service. There is no pay or compensation whatever involved in the bill. It merely directs the Secretary of the Navy to place Mr. Beale on the retired list. I hope the Senator from Utah will not object to its consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. Does it give him a higher grade?

Mr. CHILTON. No; there is no grade.

Mr. SMOOT. A higher grade than he occupies to-day?

Mr. CHILTON. He has no grade. He was honorably discharged.

Mr. SMOOT. By the passage of the bill will he receive compensation in any way?

Mr. CHILTON. None. The bill expressly states that he is to be placed upon the retired list without pay or compensation. It is simply an honor to a dying man.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If there be a wife, does she receive anything?

Mr. CHILTON. Nothing whatever.

Mr. SMOOT. Putting him on the retired list, his wife will be entitled to a pension.

Mr. CHILTON. She is not receiving any pension now.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course not, because her husband is living.

Mr. CHILTON. She is getting nothing.

Mr. SMOOT. That may be true, but I want to know if we pass this bill and put him on the retired list, does it give his wife a pension under the law?

Mr. CHILTON. I think not. I have no such intention as that.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to place Joseph Beale upon the retired list of the Navy with the highest rank which he had during his service, but without pay or compensation.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, whatever rank he assumes by being placed upon the retired list, I suppose immediately after his death his wife will apply for a pension, but if the Senator expresses the opinion that it will not make any difference at all as to whether she shall receive a pension or not, I have no objection to the bill.

Mr. CHILTON. I do not think so. I will state frankly to the Senator that I do not know.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask the Senator what is the meaning of the words "without pay or compensation"? Has he received no pay?

Mr. CHILTON. At no time has he received pay or compensation since his honorable discharge. It is simply an honor; that is all.

Mr. GALLINGER. It will entitle the widow to no higher pension because of that fact?

Mr. CHILTON. Oh, no.

Mr. GALLINGER. Except that we might by special act recognize the fact that her husband was placed on the retired list.

Mr. CHILTON. That is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MYERS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 15, 1917, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 13, 1917.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art never far from any of us, we would draw near to Thee in spirit and drink deep from the fountain of life, be refreshed and strengthened, that we may respond to the duties ever calling for thought and action. We are living in an age of transition. Great changes are in the making and must needs come, growing out of the awful conflict now raging in a large part of the world. And we most fervently pray that our people may stand together as one for the sacred principles involved in our Republic, a precious heritage handed down by our fathers, liberty, justice, and equal rights to all, that we may continue to live and grow intellectually, morally, spiritually through Him who taught us the way, the truth, and the life. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION BILL.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, the Senate has asked for a conference on the bill S. 703, the vocational education bill, and I therefore move that the House insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked for.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 703, insist on the House amendments, and agree to the conference asked for. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. HUGHES, Mr. RUCKER, and Mr. POWERS.

RIVERS AND HARBORS BILL.

Mr. SPARKMAN, from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, by direction of that committee, reported a bill (H. R. 20079) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which, with accompanying papers, was ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to the report (No. 1289) on the bill, at the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], I present his minority report, to be printed with the other.

Mr. MANN reserved all points of order.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes on a personal matter.

Mr. MOON. Reserving the right to object, I will ask the gentleman what it is about.

Mr. STEENERSON. The matter I referred to yesterday.

Mr. MOON. It is the matter reconciling the gentleman's remarks and those of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox]?

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman from Tennessee is extremely unfair. I am going to have this corrected.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes on a personal matter. Is there objection?

Mr. MOON. I do not object if it is coupled with the agreement that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] may have five minutes if he desires it.

Mr. STEENERSON. Oh, certainly; I would be glad to have him.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, on Thursday the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox], for whom I entertain the highest regard, made a speech in Committee of the Whole House on the Post Office appropriation bill (H. R. 14910), in which he took occasion to refer to some remarks made by me on the same subject a few moments earlier in the day. He took occasion to criticize me for the remarks I had made, characterizing them as unfair and partisan, and among other things, in substance, said that I had charged the Postmaster General with falsification. A colloquy ensued between him and me, in which I disclaimed having said anything of the kind, and I wanted to interrogate him further, but he declined to further yield.

He then proceeded to discuss my remarks, and among other things said that I undertook to prove that the report of the Postmaster General was false, and then he proceeded to say that I asserted that I was going to prove in my speech that for the last three years there was a postal deficit—that is, that the two years where there was a surplus was less than the surplus for the year for which there was a deficit, and he said I had utterly failed in proving that assertion. He repeated it further on that I had charged that there was no postal surplus during the last three years.

I obtained unanimous consent a little while later to answer the gentleman's remarks, and in that five-minutes' speech I produced the report of the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post Office Department for the last year and showed by the figures there that my statement that for the last three years, taken together, there was not a postal surplus, but a deficit of $1,127,000. I put that whole report into the RECORD, together with my remarks, and explained that these figures could not be and were not disputed by anybody.

Judge of my surprise when I read my speech I saw in the same RECORD the speech of the gentleman from Indiana, in which he had changed it so as to strike out the words "three years" and insert "four years" in two places, thereby making it appear that he charged me with contending that for the last four years there was no surplus, a thing that I never contended anywhere. What I did contend was that the year 1913 did not belong to this administration, and if the unpaid bills were deducted there would not have been any surplus even if we counted four years. But the official figures as to the last three years conclusively showed there was a postal deficit.

I hold in my hand the Official Reporter's transcript, and on which these changes appear. For instance, page 522 of the transcript the gentleman is recorded as saying:

> The gentleman from Minnesota undertook to criticize the Postmaster General's report and to prove that it was false, and consumed an hour and 23 minutes of the time. It was an utter failure, for he never adduced a single fact or a single figure to show that Mr. Burleson's report was erroneous when it said that for the last three years he had turned into the Treasury a surplus of about $5,000,000.

Now, that is changed in the printed speech to four years, and the actual figures which I myself had given as a surplus for these four years. In this way the speech which I answered and which I listened to was not the speech at all that was printed the next day. I deem it necessary that the House and the country should understand, according to the gentleman's own figures, that I was correct when I said that the official figures of the auditor showed there was no postal surplus for the three-year period of 1914, 1915, and 1916.

I do not attribute any bad motives to my friend from Indiana, but instead of being nonpartisan I think he is just as partisan as I am, and that in the heat of debate, not having studied these figures, he was led to make the statement without knowing what the facts were. He undertook to criticize my speech without having familiarized himself with the figures, for he distinctly said twice, as I shall show in these minutes which I shall print in the RECORD, uncorrected, that he criticized me for having asserted there was no postal surplus for the last three years—a thing he himself admits and the record admits and everybody else admits, because the official figures show it. He took advantage of the leave to extend and correct his remarks, and I have no fault to find except that I want it understood that the speech that he delivered was not the speech that appeared in the RECORD. I regret that there was any difference between us. We are both partisan, but certainly there was nothing in my speech which justified him in accusing me of calling the Postmaster General names; neither was there anything that justified the chairman of the committee earlier in the day on Thursday in saying that anything to the contrary of his claim of a surplus would be falsehoods and lies. Everything that was said by me is now in the RECORD. I was unable to find one of the tables on Thursday, and hence the speech did not appear until this morning, but I have not changed the speech, and the gentleman from Indiana is welcome to the transcript of the reporters' notes if he wants to examine it. He was entirely unjustified in saying that I had called anyone a liar, least of all the Postmaster General. I have a right to make my argument to show that they are mistaken, and that is all I did. This administration or any other is not so sacred that it is not to be subjected to criticism that is fair and honest, and that is all I indulged in.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks I have always been exceedingly careful and cautious to not change them so as to put an opposing Member in a false attitude. I think it is shown in two places in my remarks that I asked and obtained unanimous consent to insert certain things in the RECORD. At the conclusion of my remarks I asked unanimous consent for general opportunity to revise and extend, which was granted.

Mr. Speaker, there is an old Spanish adage which says that "You can always tell where the shot came from by noticing the flutter of the bird." I have not anything to take back, anything to apologize for at all in what I said at that time, and evidently from the gentleman's argument and remarks this morning I certainly touched a tender spot upon him somewhere—unintentionally entirely. In his argument of an hour 23 minutes the other day and in his argument of 10 minutes to-day he reminds me very much of a statement in one of Æsop's fables, to the effect that the "mountain labored in great travail and brought forth a mouse." That seems to be the result of the gentleman's argument of an hour and 23 minutes the other day and 10 minutes this morning, in trying to convince this House and the country that the Postmaster General falsified his reports in laying claim to the fact that in three out of four years there was a surplus turned into the Treasury by him. In the heat of argument the other day I did use the figure 3. I had only 30 minutes' time, and when I came to revise my remarks I saw that the Postmaster General was making a report on four years instead of three, and I must confess that at the time I revised my remarks I never thought for a moment of the tremendous fulmination of words delivered by the gentleman with an exceedingly small amount of ideas connected therewith in his attempt to prove that the Postmaster General had falsified his reports. I regret this morning, and I am sincere in that, that at any time any member of this Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads should undertake to drag politics into this bill. I am here to say now that if the Republican Party controls this House in the next Congress, and if a Republican is made the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and I am reassigned to that committee, I am not going to stand on the floor of this House and criticize the Republican majority members of the committee, but I am going to stand upon the floor of the House and uphold and support that committee where I think it is right.

I hold in my hands the report of the Postmaster General, and I read the following from page 6:

> That the Postal Service is now self-sustaining is evidenced by the fact that for three out of the four years of the present administration audited surpluses aggregating $14,716,350.03 have been shown. Deducting the audited deficiency in 1915 of $11,333,308.97, the net surplus for the four-year period is $3,383,041.06, and but for the business depression occasioned by the European war the department would have undoubtedly secured a surplus of not less than $18,000,000.

That conclusively shows just what I said then, or what my remarks should have said then, and when I came to revise them I made them speak the truth, that in three out of four years he has turned into the United States Treasury a surplus of $3,383,041.06.

Mr. STEENERSON rose.

Mr. COX. I refuse to yield. If I recall the gentlemen's speech the other day, he spoke of the still outstanding claims that were due the railroads. I call the gentleman's attention and the attention of this committee to the Postmaster General's report on page 18, as follows:

The payment of the additional compensation to railroad companies authorized by Congress on account of the increased volume of the mails to be transported, resulting from the department's orders raising the limits of size and weight for parcel-post mail, was delayed owing to the failure of the postal appropriation act for the fiscal year 1916. Under the provisions included in the postal appropriation act for the fiscal year 1917 for adjusting these claims of the railroads the amounts due, which were fully adequate for the service rendered, have been finally determined and paid. It is a source of satisfaction to the department that this matter has been finally adjusted, but it is only fair to state that the delay of this settlement was directly attributable to the activities of those assuming to speak for the railroads.

I repeat that there is not anything at all in the gentleman's contention this morning; there was nothing in it the other day, in his hour and twenty-three minutes' discussion, when he undertook to prove that the Postmaster General was mistaken or had misrepresented his report here, when the Postmaster General said that in three out of four years he had actually turned a surplus into the Treasury of the United States, and had it not been for the fiscal year 1915, following the outbreak of the European war, that would have been not less than $18,000,000.

Everybody knows, as I have been told by some of the large business men of the country, that the Post Office Department is the best barometer of business in this country.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COX. I would ask for two minutes more; that is all I want.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COX. The large business men of this country, the railroads, banks, and large manufacturing concerns keep their eyes upon the postal receipts of the Nation as a barometer of the business of the Nation more than they do on the trade journals and the transportation traffic of this country, conclusively again sustaining the contention of the Postmaster General that it was due to the outbreak of the European war that prevented him from turning into the Treasury of the United States a surplus at the end of the fiscal year 1915. When I came to revise my remarks, I changed the figures from three to four so as to make it correspond with the Postmaster General's report, and that was exactly what I intended to say when I made my speech the other day, and what I would have said had I not been crowded for the lack of time. The gentleman has failed, dismally failed, utterly failed, in sustaining his position that the Potsmaster General was mistaken. He has failed, dismally failed, utterly failed, this morning to prove that the Postmaster General was mistaken in his report.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I would ask for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] says that if the Republicans control the House and committees he will support, as I understand, all we do. I believe a man's duty to his country is to stand for the truth, and I believe there is a great deal in the report the gentleman has read from that leads to an erroneous conclusion. I sought in my speech to convince the gentleman, and I think any fair-minded man who reads the speech will be convinced that, although there was a surplus deposited for 1913, 1914, and 1916, there was a deficit of $11,300,000 in 1915, and when you add to that the unpaid railroad bills for excessive parcel-post weight payments and the rural carriers' salaries, and you deduct those things, together with the deficit of 1915, it eats up the whole original surplus, so we are not richer than we were before, but a little poorer. Now, I am not complaining of that. I do not believe we ought to have a large postal surplus. I am glad to see that we come within two or three million dollars. I am not finding fault with that feature of it, but I am finding fault with a report that leads one to draw an erroneous conclusion. The fact that men have stood up repeatedly and asserted that the Postal Service was turning in twelve or eighteen million dollars in three years shows they have misunderstood the figures.

Mr. MOON. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. STEENERSON. I only have two minutes.

Mr. MOON. I want to ask the gentleman if he is really seeking information on that question, if he really wants to know why it is that the accounts for the Postal Service and railroads are not accounted for in making a general balance; if the gentleman is not talking for political effect, but if he wants to know the facts, I will ask leave to put in the RECORD a statement to show that these items to which the gentleman referred as items of properly audited accounts arose after the end of the fiscal year for adjustment and are not chargeable to any year. If the gentleman wants the truth, I will have a statement from the department put in the RECORD, but if the gentleman is just talking for political effect I do not care anything about it.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman took up my time, and I suppose I can at least have one more minute.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOON. Of course, and I ask that the gentleman be permitted to talk as long as he wants to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEENERSON. The reason why the deferred railroad bills were not paid was because we had not passed the law, but that does not alter the fact that the bills were not paid, and if the items mentioned had been deducted from the surpluses rendered in those fiscal years 1913, 1914, and 1916 it would have reduced the audited surplus that much. The same thing with the rural carriers' salaries which had not been paid because we had not passed the law directing or forcing them to be paid, but that does not alter the fact that when they are paid it will reduce the net earnings of those years by that much, and when you take these things into account there is not such a thing as a profit for the last three years or even four years. I am only speaking in the interest of the truth. I am not finding any fault. I am glad to see the department is so near self-sustaining. I regret very much the gentleman from Indiana thinks because I made those remarks I am indulging in partisanship, but I am simply trying to get at the truth. The people of the United States are entitled to the truth as to all financial Government operations. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had further insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 10384) to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, Mr. HARDWICK, and Mr. LODGE as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 7359. An act authorizing the Delaware Railroad Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Nanticoke River at Seaford, Sussex County, Del.

INVESTIGATION UNDER HOUSE RESOLUTION 420.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 442.

Resolved, That in the performance of the duties imposed upon it by reference to it of House Resolution 420, the Committee on Rules shall have the power to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths and to employ such stenographic and clerical assistance as may be necessary. The expenses incurred hereunder shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives on vouchers ordered by this committee and signed by the chairman thereof and approved by the Committee on Accounts, evidenced by the signature of the chairman thereof.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, that resolution is identical with the one that was adopted, as introduced by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], and gives the Committee on Rules the same power to proceed in regard to resolution No. 420 as it gave, on the previous occasion, it authority to proceed under 429.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I think in fairness to some of us that this statement ought to be made.

I have consented to the passage of that resolution, or do consent to the passage of it, without a contest, for two reasons: First, it seems to be necessary as a technical proposition to pass it in order to reach that parliamentary stage where proceedings can be taken to deal with Mr. Lawson. That is the first reason, and the next is, that I think the action of the House on yesterday, the sentiment that was developed, indicated a desire and a disposition to have this resolution No. 420 considered, or something very similar. Personally, I do not have the slightest suspicion or idea that there is a thing contained in that resolution that was not intended as a keen and bitter reflection upon and an effort to discredit an administration which the adverse political party could not defeat, but a sufficient number of Democrats indicated their disposition toward it yesterday as that it seems proper to permit the matter to pass without objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 443.

Resolved, That in the consideration of House resolutions Nos. 420 and 429, committed to the Committee on Rules, said committee be, and it is hereby, authorized and empowered to require witnesses to answer all questions propounded by said committee or a member thereof, touching the subject matter of said resolutions, and to require any witness called before it to testify fully as to any information in his possession, whether in the nature of hearsay testimony or otherwise, relative to the matters set forth in said resolutions. And said committee is specifically directed to require one Thomas W. Lawson to name any Member of Congress or other person alleged by him in his testimony before said committee on January 8 and 9, 1917, to have given him any information relating to the subject matter of said resolutions or either of them.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I want to say this in reference to that resolution. I do not believe this House has the power to pass such a resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question the Chair put to the House was whether or not there was objection to the consideration of this resolution. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HENRY. Now, Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Rules desire to be clothed with all the power this House can give them in order that they may deal with the witnesses that are to be subpœnaed. We also wish to be clothed with all the power this House can give us to deal with one Thomas W. Lawson. We think that the adoption of those two resolutions will clothe us with that power. The committee has subpœnaed Mr. Lawson to reappear. He will be here, we hope, on Monday, when we will use the authority that this House gives us under that resolution. If the witness fails and refuses to answer the questions, it is the purpose of the committee to endeavor to get those answers, and if the committee is not able to do so, then it is the purpose of the Committee on Rules to bring the question to the House and let the House decide what authority they have and to exhaust their power. It seems to me that states the entire case.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] five minutes.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I do not want more than five minutes.

I do not have any objection to this resolution. I do not want the committee to have any less power than it has under the law. They ought to have all the power under the law and all the power this House can confer, but that resolution says that Lawson shall answer any question put to him. This committee has no power to put just any question. It is only those questions that pertain properly and lawfully to the inquiry and do not affect constitutional rights of the witness that they have a right to ask. Now, I suggest, and I only rose for the purpose of suggesting, that that resolution be amended so that it would fall within the rule laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States on that question. If you do not amend it, and you attempt to exact from him those things which are not entirely pertinent to the inquiry, the result will be that if he is brought before the House for contempt he must be ultimately discharged. The House ought not to put itself in the position of making an improper inquiry.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does not the resolution provide for the answering of questions relating to the subject matter of these resolutions before the committee?

Mr. MOON. I do not understand the resolution in that way. If I had, I would not have made the suggestion.

Mr. FOSTER. It means relevant to the inquiry.

Mr. MOON. Let us have the resolution reported again.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The resolution was again reported.

Mr. MOON. Now, Mr. Speaker, that resolution does not read exactly like I thought it did, and yet, after hearing the reading of it, I do not think it is quite a proper resolution. You may ask a man many questions touching an inquiry, but it is only those questions which may be lawfully and properly asked touching that inquiry that this House has a right to hear and know. A question may be relevant and still unlawful. And in view of the decisions that have been made on that question, I suggest that it be amended, not merely as relevant, but as lawfully relevant, as properly touching the inquiry, because there are a good many questions that may be connected with propositions that may not properly be asked under the inquiry. It is a very touchy proposition. I have had occasion to look into it in the past. I notice that the Supreme Court of the United States in deciding upon questions of this sort are very loath to permit the Congress to ask questions that are not strictly within the line of its legitimate inquiry and that do not invade the strictly individual affairs and the constitutonal rights of a witness. They properly so hold. I am not going to press the matter at all. I make this suggestion only for your careful consideration. The resolution to me seems to be rather loosely and inartificially drawn.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 19410, the Post Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] will take the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 19410) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, with Mr. CRISP in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 19410) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For mail-messenger service, $2,243,000.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to be inserted at that place in the bill by way of a new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BENNET: Page 15, after line 13, insert the following as a new paragraph:

"That the Postmaster General is hereby authorized, in his discretion, with the consent of the Secretary of the Treasury, to utilize for the transmission of mail the pneumatic tube."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] has an amendment to offer to the paragraph preceding that which was last read, and which is entitled to priority over a motion to insert a new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from New York will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. BENNET. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. And the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Iowa to offer an amendment to the preceding paragraph, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. MOON. What paragraph was that?

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph on page 15, ending with line 12.

Mr. MOON. We finished the paragraph on page 15, ending with line 12, yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HULL of Iowa: Page 15, line 13, after the figures "$2,243,000," insert "No part of this money shall be paid for any messenger service unless it be to the mail messenger who was the lowest qualified bidder at the time the contract was first called for."

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve a point of order on that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MOON. I thought we had considered that paragraph yesterday.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The amendment is clearly within the Holman rule, being a limitation upon the expenditure.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. LLOYD having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10384) to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOON. I understood that section to have been read and completed yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. The section was read, but the committee never acted upon it. At the time it was read a colloquy arose between the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COX] as to whether they should be permitted to address the House, and the committee rose in that condition.

Mr. MOON. Very well, if that was the state of affairs.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa will proceed.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is to correct an abuse which prevails in this branch of the Post Office Service. I think that while we are trying to be fair with all labor we ought to be fair with ourselves and pass this amendment. There is not any objection to it.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman explain the purpose of it?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The purpose is apparent on the face of the amendment. It requires, when you call for bids, that you should take the lowest qualified bidder.

Mr. McKENZIE. It does not say that.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; it does.

Mr. STAFFORD. May we have the amendment again reported, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is it the purpose to prevent the Postmaster General from rejecting all bids and newly advertising?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is to prevent the Postmaster General from letting the contracts to higher bidders and peddling the bids out; that after he has called for the lowest bidder he shall go ahead and let the contract, provided the man is a qualified messenger.

Mr. MANN. Suppose there is only one bidder, and that is an exorbitant bid in the opinion of the Postmaster General. Is he still required under this to let the contract to him, notwithstanding that fact?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. He could in his regulation claim that his was not a qualified bid, if it is only one.

Mr. MANN. Well, suppose there were two, and they were both exorbitant. What I am trying to get at is this: Is he forbidden to advertise for new bids under those circumstances? Is that the gentleman's opinion of it?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No. I do not think it would prevent that. It is to prevent letting to a higher bidder or peddling the bids.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Can the gentleman from Iowa cite any instance of abuse that has grown up under the present system now which he wishes to cure?

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the proposed amendment changes a law on the subject of advertisements.

Mr. STAFFORD. I supplement that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa has the floor. When the amendment was read a point of order was reserved, and the gentleman from Iowa was recognized.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will answer the gentleman from Illinois. I was a postmaster once, and I know that there is an abuse in the letting of these contracts. It happens in every town where you have some poor old man hauling the mail. You advertise for bids and you do not let the contract to the lowest bidder as a method of doing business. I am not in favor of letting it unqualifiedly to the lowest bidder, but as I say, that is supposed to be the practice of the Post Office Department. I claim that when you adopt that plan you must let it to the lowest qualified bidder. That is only fair.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MOON. The law permits the contract to be made by the department, and allows the department to reject all bids. This law requires the acceptance of the lowest bid. If the gentleman's time is out I want to conclude on the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment is not subject to a point of order. We can make appropriations and even say no part of it can be expended unless to a redheaded man.

That is a pure limitation that is within our power under the rules of the House. We have that authority. We can not require the department to exercise additional authority, or to exercise authority in the way we want it exercised, but we can say that the department can not spend the money unless they do it in the way we say.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], chairman of the committee.

Mr. MADDEN. Let us take a vote on it. That is the best way.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw my reservation of the point of order.

Mr. MOON. Has the Chair ruled on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not ruled on the point of order.

Mr. MOON. If it were not for the last two lines, I think it would be a mere limitation. But taken as a whole I think it is out of order, because it changes the law on the subject of bidding.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has read the amendment carefully, and is constrained to reach the conclusion that it is a limitation, and that under the unbroken precedents of the House a mere limitation upon an appropriation is in order.

Mr. MOON. Then let us have a vote on the question.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. HULL of Iowa) there were—ayes 31, noes 80.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BENNET. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] offers an amendment as a new section, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BENNET: On page 15, after line 13, insert:

"That the Postmaster General is hereby authorized, in his discretion, with the consent of the Secretary of the Treasury, to utilize for the transmission of mail the pneumatic tube connecting the customhouse and the appraisers' stores in the city of New York."

Mr. BLACKMON. I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. BENNET. Will the gentleman reserve the point?

Mr. BLACKMON. Yes; I will reserve the point.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, in the city of New York the Government has constructed at its own expense a pneumatic tube connecting the customhouse with the appraisers' stores, a distance of about 2 miles. They are now operating this, but they have use for it only 6 hours a day, and they send a dispatch only about once in 15 minutes. This is a simple business propostion to which the chairman of the committee does not object, which permits the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General, if they wish to do so, to utilize this existing agency which the Government has bought and paid for.

Mr. MOON. Now will the gentleman from New York allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. BENNET. Certainly.

Mr. MOON. As I said to the gentleman, I would not object to this as an independent proposition; but if this section is passed I am afraid it is the purpose of the gentleman to hitch on some other legislation which may not be in order.

Mr. BENNET. No; it is not. I will give the gentleman my assurance that it is not. I thank the gentleman for the implied compliment to my supposed parliamentary ability, but I say very frankly that I have no intention, nor has anyone else on the floor, so far as I know, directly or indirectly, any intention to affect by this amendment the pneumatic-tube controversy. This is entirely different. We have bought and paid for this tube, and the question is whether we shall use something that has cost the Government a good deal of money.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Why can they not use it now, without any new legislation, if all the gentleman says is true?

Mr. BENNET. Because the Postmaster General has no power to use an appliance which belongs to the Treasury Department unless he is authorized by law to use it—answering very directly the gentleman's entirely proper question.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes; and still answering the question of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON], I will say that, so far as I know, there is no objection to this on the part either of the Postmaster General or the Secretary of the Treasury. The collector's office in New York City does not oppose it. The appraisers' stores in New York City think it would be a good thing. The postmaster thinks it would be a good thing. The total expense of connecting up the foreign branch and postal station P would not exceed $10,000, and it would extend by about 30 minutes the time in which all the foreign mail of the United States—not the mail in New York, but the foreign mail of our constituents—could be sent abroad on every day that a steamer sails, and that extension of time is considerable.

Mr. COX. What is the length of the tube?

Mr. BENNET. About 2 miles.

Mr. COX. I do not know anything about the history of this tube.

Mr. MADDEN. It is a Government tube.

Mr. COX. Did the Government construct this tube?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. COX. They built it themselves?

Mr. BENNET. They built it themselves, by contract.

Mr. COX. When?

Mr. BENNET. About 10 years ago.

Mr. COX. It is now in operation between the customhouse and the appraisers' stores, is it?

Mr. BENNET. Yes; it has been operated about 10 years.

Mr. COX. And the distance is about 2 miles?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. COX. What is the size of the tube?

Mr. BENNET. An 8-inch tube.

Mr. COX. What is the size of the container that goes through it?

Mr. BENNET. It is the same size of tube and the same size of container that is used in the other 26 miles in New York City.

Mr. COX. A standard-size tube?

Mr. BENNET. A standard-size tube.

Mr. COX. And the Government has been operating it for about 10 years?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. COX. And now you want to connect it up with the Post Office Department?

Mr. BENNET. I want to connect it so that they can send from Station P, which is in the customhouse, to the foreign station, which is practically across the street from the appraisers' stores.

Mr. COX. How did the Government get hold of the patent on these tubes? Did the Pneumatic Tube Co. give them the patent free of charge?

Mr. BENNET. I think they paid for it.

Mr. COX. You mean the Government paid for it?

Mr. BENNET. Paid for it 10 years ago, for the use of that tube.

Mr. COX. The Government owns it outright?

Mr. BENNET. Absolutely. The Pneumatic Tube Co. has no more to do with it than the gentleman or myself.

Mr. COX. What will be the additional cost to the Government to utilize it?

Mr. BENNET. Just to connect it up at both ends, which I should say would cost not to exceed $10,000, and to operate it 16 or 18 hours a day, which would cost them the additional pay of possibly two men.

Mr. COX. And I understood the gentleman to answer the chairman of the committee that it is not his intention or the intention of anyone else, so far as he knows, to tie something else onto this provision?

Mr. BENNET. There is absolutely no connection between this and anything else under the sun.

Mr. BLACKMON. Mr. Chairman, I renew my point of order and insist upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert a letter from Postmaster Morgan upon this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting a letter from the postmaster at New York. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

UNITED STATES POST OFFICE,
New York, N. Y., December 12, 1916.

Hon. MURRAY HULBERT, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I have before me your letter of the 11th instant requesting to be furnished with certain information regarding the pneumatic-tube service in this city, for use in the hearing next Thursday morning (Dec. 14) before the House Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and in compliance therewith have to advise you as follows:

Question (1). Do you favor the authorized use of the pneumatic-tube connection between the Custom House and the Appraisers Stores for postal purposes?

Answer. Yes; with suitable post-office connections.

Question (2). Would such use facilitate the delivery of first-class postal matter from the downtown financial and commercial district to the Foreign Station?

Answer. Yes.

Question (3). Would such service extend the time within which supplementary mail could be sent from the downtown financial and commercial district to vessels departming for foreign and domestic ports?

Answer. Yes; later mailing time would be possible for foreign supplementary mail.

Question (4). Can you estimate the percentage of first-class mail which would be transported by this tube in the event of its authorized use by the postal authorities?

Answer. All of the first-class mail from the downtown financial and commercial district for foreign dispatch mailed between 4 a. m. and 11 p. m.

Question (5). Do you know what the additional expense to the Government will be to extend the use of this tube for postal purposes?

Answer. I am not aware of the additional expense involved; this would be a matter for departmental adjustment with the contractor for pneumatic-tube service.

In connection with the answers to questions 2 and 3, I have to state that there is absolutely no doubt that if this tube line were turned over to the Post Office Department it could be utilized to advantage in the transmission of mails. All of the letters, documents, etc., now transmitted through the line could be sent by the Post Office Department for the Treasury Department, and the surplus capacity of the line used to transport the regular mails, provided the line was connected to two of the present post-office stations, namely, Foreign Station and Hudson Terminal Station, both of which are located a short distance from the line, and it is very probable that some arrangement could be made with the New York Pneumatic Service Co. to operate it in connection with its system of mail tubes which connect the stations throughout the city.

Very truly, yours,

E. M. MORGAN, Postmaster.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the transmission of mail by pneumatic tubes or other similar devices, $449,500.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 15, line 15, after the word "devices," strike out "$449,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,061,000, for continuance of service now existing in New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, St. Louis, and Brooklyn."

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, to that I make a point of order.

Mr. TAGUE. Will not the gentleman reserve it?

Mr. MOON. I have no objection to reserving it.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that this amendment is subject to a point of order. The law at the present time permits the expenditure. In the first place, under the law of 1906 it permits an expenditure of $1,250,000. This amendment calls for $1,060,000. In the law of 1906 it reads:

That the service shall not be extended in any other cities other than those in the service as now under contract under authority of Congress.

The cities named in this provision are the cities wherein the service is now in operation. The claim against this provision also is made that it requires a report of experts before a new contract can be entered into.

Mr. Chairman, the contracts under the law of 1902, previous to the enactment of the last contract made by these companies with the Government, were the contracts, to my mind, that were to be affected by this law. I do not believe that it was ever intended that invitation would be made to the public to bid upon a contract, to have a contract made, for people to invest their money in a service for the Government, and then upon the expiration of that contract—with a contract like that of the pneumatic-tube contracts, requiring them to place their tubes under the ground for no purpose except for the purposes of the Government—they should be put out of commission. In proof of that, the commission that was appointed to investigate the last contract, made in 1906, and the action of the Postmaster General at that time, reported no investigation as to the continuation of existing contracts. On the contrary, that commission, in the opening of their report, October 4, 1905, to the Second Assistant Postmaster General, said this:

The commission appointed by the Postmaster General, Order 1253, of November 15, 1904, after carefully investigating the needs and advisability of extending pneumatic-tube service—

And so forth.

It said nothing in this report as to the contracts then in existence. It made no claim that the Government had no right to issue contracts under the law that they were then living under of 1902. It merely applied to an extension of the system, and I contend, Mr. Chairman, that the law of 1902 applied merely to the contracts then being made by the Government.

Mr. BORLAND and Mr. GORDON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. To which gentleman does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. TAGUE. I refuse to yield now. Mr. Chairman, the investors in these enterprises, in good faith, have invested their money in a contract that has received the approval of the commissions appointed by this Government. No commission since 1902, at the time of the original contracts, made at that time for four years, has been appointed with the intention of investigating future contracts as affecting the then existing contracts made by the Government. The only commission that was appointed since 1902 was the appointment of the commission of 1906, whose report I have just read, and then the commission appointed which reported in 1914 as to the advisability of the Government purchasing the pneumatic-tube service. There has been no investigation by any commission on any other condition or contract since 1902. The other investigation—and I contend that the Postmaster General then in office had the same contention that I hold—and the only purpose of the act was the future extensions of contracts and was not to affect the then existing contracts, but for the purpose of extension. The last commission was appointed for the purpose of deciding whether or not this Government should purchase and own the pneumatic-tube service.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, do I understand the point of order has been reserved?

The CHAIRMAN. It has.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I desire to address myself to the subject matter of the item.

Mr. MOON. The point of order was reserved until the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TAGUE]. I understand that several gentlemen want to speak on this question. While the amount involved is only $500,000 or $600,000 in a bill carrying $329,000,000, yet up to the present time in the consideration of the whole of this bill, before the committee and including the time occupied in the House, there has been twice as much time given to this one item as to the whole balance of the bill. Still some gentlemen from these cities want to speak, and, while they have not the right under the rule to speak more than five minutes on either side, I am inclined to ask the House to be liberal with them. If I could get some agreement as to time——

Mr. STEENERSON. Would the gentleman from Tennessee agree to two hours?

Mr. MOON. No; I would not.

Mr. STEENERSON. How much does the gentleman have in mind?

Mr. MOON. Twenty-five or thirty minutes.

Mr. MANN. Let me suggest to my friend from Tennessee that, in the first place, I think he ought to be thankful that the main discussion centers about an item of half a million dollars instead of some other provisions carrying much larger appropriations. In consideration of the many matters, the gentleman from Tennessee knows as well as I do that when there is an interesting matter up and gentlemen desire to be heard upon it, it is customary to give them time. The Post Office bill has never proceeded heretofore as rapidly as it has this year.

Mr. MOON. I am willing to give liberal time.

Mr. MANN. Quite a large number of gentlemen wish to be heard.

Mr. MOON. How many gentlemen want to be heard? [After a pause.] Mr. Chairman, in view of the large concourse that have arisen and held up their hands for time, I believe that I will agree to one hour and a half debate.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Make it two hours.

Mr. MOON. Well, Mr. Chairman, I have to give up most everything I want to do, and I suppose I will have to consent to two hours. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pneumatic-tube provision of the bill and all amendments thereto be limited to two hours, one half to be controlled by the chairman of the committee and the other half by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON].

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman withdraw his point of order?

Mr. MANN. We will have the point of order disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the request to the gentleman from Tennessee. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that two hours' debate be allowed on the pneumatic-tube feature of this bill and all amendments relating to that subject; that one half of that time shall be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON]. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, and doing so only for the purpose of obtaining information, I would like to ask if that two-hour discussion would be upon the merits with the point of order pending against the pending amendment, and no opportunity given to discuss other amendments that might be presented.

Mr. MANN. The request is for two hours of debate. That does not affect the point of order.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, to relieve gentlemen, I ask unanimous consent that the two hours' debate begin after the Chair has disposed of the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think it would be unfair to rest the fate of the pneumatic tubes on one amendment. The discussion now would be for two hours, apparently, and all of that time would be consumed on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TAGUE], against which the point of order has been made.

Mr. STEENERSON. The proposition is open to amendment.

Mr. MOON. Debate is under the rules of the House, of course.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Chairman, as a matter of information, I would like to inquire if the gentleman from Minnesota is opposed to the tubes or for them?

Mr. STEENERSON. I am for the tubes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that after the point of order shall have been ruled upon there be allowed two hours' discussion on the provision of the bill and amendments thereto relating to the pneumatic-tube service; that he control one hour of that time and that the gentleman from Minnesota control the remaining hour. Is there objection?

Mr. MOON. That is, provided, of course, the point of order is not sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Chair will now hear the gentleman from Tennessee on his point of order.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I am going to be very brief upon the point of order. I will ask what the amount of the amendment is?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment provides for $1,061,000.

Mr. MOON. A chapter of the Postal Laws and Regulations, section 1374 and following, contains the law on the subject of pneumatic tubes. It must be confessed that this is a question arising about this statute that has not heretofore arisen, so far as my knowledge goes, nor has it been submitted to the decision of the Chair. Here is a simple item in a bill authorized by law providing for pneumatic tubes and other devices. The appropriation is limited in the act to a specific sum of money. This act is a part of the chapter, sections 1374, 1375, and 1376, of the Postal Laws and Regulations. It is a rule of law that all of the laws on a given subject must be construed together, or that part of all laws that have remained intact, notwithstanding amendments that did not by direct affirmative action or by implicaion repeal the existing law. It was lawful under this act for this House to appropriate under these provisions $1,200,000 for pneumatic tubes. It was unlawful under this act, and is unlawful under this act, for any contract to be made for the pneumatic-tube service or any sum of money appropriated for that purpose until the conditions of the act shall have been complied with. What are the conditions of the act? That the contract for this service shall be subject to the provisions of the Postal Laws and Regulations relating to the mail contracts, except as herein provided. In the law that is applicable to the pneumatic-tube service a condition precedent must be complied with before this service can be put into effect. If the service can not be carried into effect, if the law now existing prohibits its effectual use or an appropriation for it, it must remain unused until new law authorizes it. What is the condition precedent before the appropriation may be made under the law? It is this:

> That no advertisement shall issue until a careful investigation has been made as to the needs and practicability of such service and until a favorable report in writing shall have been submitted to the Postmaster General by a commission of not less than three expert postal officials to be named by him.

That is a section of the law and must be considered in pari materia. That section is embodied in the very act that gives the power for the establishment and continuation of the pneumatic tubes in the United States. It is a condition precedent to the appropriation, because if the law contains a provision that prevents a service there is no power to appropriate for that service logically. The condition precedent is that a favorable report for the continuation of this service must be made by three experts appointed by the Postmaster General after the expiration of a 10-year contract. The very law itself provided for that contract. It provided for a 10-year period, which, however, expired, but which Congress extended until March next, and we are now operating under that extension. Therefore if the contract can not be made for the service under the law there can not be an appropriation for the service. That must follow logically. The condition precedent to the appropriation, to the contract, to the advertisement, to the execution of the law as provided on the very face of the act that gave vitality to the pneumatic-tube system is that this favorable report must be made. Upon whom does the burden rest to show that the report has been made? How can and how must it be shown to this House that it may know in its legislative capacity under the law of the land, because we can not make any new law on this subject under this appropriation bill, that the power to appropriate for a service exists or that the service may be continued?

The fact is there must be a change of law before this contract can be renewed. A report has been made under the law. The Postmaster General, carrying out the provisions of the statute in order to enable him to carry out this service under the terms of the law and to obtain the appropriation for that purpose had a report made. The experts have made that report.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. In a moment. That report shows that the investigation required by the statute has been made by experts as demanded by the statute, and they say that the service ought not to be continued in any of these cities except as to the city of New York.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman allow the Chair to ask him a question?

Mr. MOON. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the chairman of the committee contend that act limits the investigation to one investigation, or can the Postmaster General in his discretion appoint a different commission to make a reexamination or another investigation of this question?

Mr. MOON. I will read the act again:

The postal laws and regulations relating to mail contracts, except as herein otherwise provided, and no advertisement shall issue until after careful investigation shall have been made as to the needs and practicability of such service and until a favorable report in writing shall have been submitted to the Postmaster General by a commission of not less than three expert postal officials to be named by him.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What is the date of that act?

Mr. MOON. That is section 1974 of the Revised Statutes, 1902. Subsequent statutes have been passed, but that provision has not been affected by them.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOON. I will.

Mr. DYER. I desire to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact a number of such investigations he has referred to have been made—more than one—under that?

Mr. MOON. I do not know of any more than this one. This is the one I referred to and of which I spoke as being an official investigation. It has been made by authority of the Postmaster General. I hold the report in my hand. The summary of the recommendations of that report is:

(a) That an advertisement be issued for proposals to perform mail service by pneumatic tubes in the city of New York, N. Y., in the territory south of Grand Central and Times Square Stations, between all points between which pneumatic-tube service is now in operation, and between the general post office of New York and the general post office of Brooklyn from March 5, 1917, until June 30, 1926, subject to cancellation by the Postmaster General on six months' notice.

(b) That a separate advertisement be issued for proposals to perform mail service by pneumatic tubes in the city of New York, N. Y., in the territory north of Grand Central and Times Square Stations, between all points between which pneumatic-tube service is now in operation, from March 5, 1917, to June 30, 1926, subject to cancellation by the Postmaster General on six months' notice.

(c) That the proposals in response to the advertisement for mail service by pneumatic tubes in the city of New York, N. Y., in the territory north of Grand Central and Times Square Stations be not considered for acceptance unless there be a material reduction from the present rate of payment.

(d) That no advertisement be issued for mail service by pneumatic tubes in any of the following cities: Brooklyn, N. Y.; Boston, Mass.; Chicago, Ill.; St. Louis, Mo.; and Philadelphia, Pa.

Now, that is the official report made in pursuance of the statutes, and it shows that there shall be no appropriation for this purpose, no advertisement for contracts, and there can not be an advertisement for contracts under the law until there is an appropriation; so it follows, of course, the appropriation can not be made according to law unless you change the law. Now, take the provisions of this law. It is not a self-operating statute. It requires the invocation of a power that is outside of the statute, so far as the execution of the law is concerned; the appointment of a committee whose investigation when made and returned to the department effectively terminates or extends the power to the department to make these contracts. Mr. Chairman, the matter is very clear to my mind. I do not know whether other gentlemen will agree with me or not, but I think this: That in view of these statutes and no repealing section of the statute in connection with the amendment to the statute, that the power of the House extends only to the authorization under the present law to contracts and advertisements recommended by the postal officials. The peculiar language of the statute means that the appropriation hereafter can extend only to the services which have been favorably recommended by the committee that puts vitality into the law by virtue of this report. Now, the exact amount to carry on this service in the city of New York, in conformity with the report, under the law has been placed in this bill. There has been no appropriation for these other cities, and they are not entitled under the law to an appropriation. A contract can not be made for them, and the power granted in the first place by law to contract was limited by law on second or renewal contract to cities favorably reported. The additional amount of money that is provided for in this amendment over and in excess of that necessary to carry out the provisions of the report is, in my humble judgment, subject to the point of order, as the law does not authorize any appropriation for a service not authorized by law. The law in this case does not authorize an appropriation for the service.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard in opposition to the position taken by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] and to sustain the position taken by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TAGUE]. It seems to me his amendment is clearly in order. What is the law? It is contained in two statutes—the act of April 21, 1902, and the act of June 26, 1906. Those statutes contain some limitations, of which the most simple is that this service is limited to certain cities.

The CHAIRMAN. That is in the act of 1902?

Mr. BENNET. In the act of 1902 and the act of 1906; but there is no city named in the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts which is not one of the permitted cities, so that the point of order can not rest upon that portion of the law. The annual limit of expenditure is $1,250,000. The suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts is $1,061,000, so that the amount is one authorized by law.

The sole remaining question is the one relating to the power of the Postmaster General to issue an advertisement. There are two constructions of which the statute is capable, and either construction which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] takes is fatal to him. The construction which I myself prefer is this. The law is:

That the contracts for this service shall be subject to the provisions of the postal laws and regulations relating to the letting of mail contracts except as herein otherwise provided, and that no advertisement shall issue until after a careful investigation shall have been made as to the needs and practicability of such service, and until a favorable report in writing shall have been submitted to the Postmaster General by a commission of not less than three expert postal officials to be named by him.

Now, my contention is that when a commission has once reported as to the needs and practicability of the pneumatic-tube service in any one of the cities named, that that forever furnishes the foundation. Of course, if I am correct in that contention, then the point of order is not well taken. But let us assume that I am not correct in that contention, then the gentleman from Tennessee must argue that the Postmaster General can appoint one commission to-day, another next week, and so on, ad infinitum. This appropriation bill is for service to commence on the 1st day of July, 1917. The commission that made this report has reported and has become extinct, non constat, but the Postmaster General would, and he could if the contention of the gentleman from Tennessee is correct, appoint another commission in April, May, or June, or one commission in each one of those months, or even after the 1st of July beginning the fiscal year, and upon the favorable report of any one of those commissions the Postmaster General could then use this appropriation.

Mr. MOON. No; there is to be a committee appointed by the Postmaster General.

Mr. BENNET. That is what I said. The Postmaster General can appoint as many commissions as he pleases, one after another.

Mr. MOON. I do not think so.

Mr. BENNET. There is nothing in the law to accord with the gentleman's contention.

Mr. DYER. He has appointed three or four already.

Mr. BENNET. He has appointed three or four.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman should apply his common sense to it. That refers to that contract, of course.

Mr. BENNET. Inasmuch as the Postmaster General can not let a contract to commence until after the 1st of July, 1917, I fail to find any authority in law for him to have appointed, if that is the contention, a commission away back in 1915, to state what the conditions are going to be on the 1st of July, 1917; and I should think if you are going to depart from the words of the statute, and go to just simply ordinary horse sense, that a commission that examined the needs and practicability of the service in June, 1917, would be in far better position to state the conditions as they would be on the 1st of July, 1917, than a commission that was appointed two years ago.

So I submit that on either contention the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] raises he impales himself on the horns of the dilemma. If my contention is correct there, and there can be one commission, and that the original commission, then that commission reported favorably. If his contention is correct that the Postmaster General can appoint commissions from time to time, then, non constat, but that the Postmaster General will appoint other commissions, and they will report favorably, and if they do, and possibly not until then, the money that is sought to be appropriated will be at his disposal.

It seems to me the point of order is surely not well taken. I might say this same point of order was raised last year on this same section and overruled by the then Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GORDON. The contract had not expired last year. It expires this year.

Mr. BENNET. Of course, everybody knows that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. Of course, the Chair would be glad to hear from any gentleman who wishes to be heard on the point of order. [Cries of "Rule!" "Rule!"]

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TAGUE] proposes an increase in the amount appropriated in the bill for penumatic-tube service to $1,061,000, and provides that it shall be used for the pneumatic-tube service in the cities of New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, St. Louis, and Brooklyn. Under the law this pneumatic-tube service is authorized in those particular cities, and the law provides in letting contracts for the pneumatic-tube service in those particular cities the Postmaster General shall observe the law relating to letting of mail contracts except, before a contract shall be entered into for pneumatic-tube service within those named cities, he shall first appoint a commission and that commission shall report recommending that the service be used.

In the opinion of the Chair the amendment does not enlarge the number of cities authorized by law to have pneumatic-tube service. The amendment increases the amount appropriated for this service, but the amount proposed comes within the amount limited by statute. In the opinion of the Chair, if this amendment should prevail, the Postmaster General is not required to use it; but the Postmaster General would have the right, if he saw fit, to appoint another commission, and if that commission recommended the use of the service he would have funds at his disposal to continue the service as provided by law. Therefore, the Chair overrules the point of order.

Under the agreement made by the committee there shall be two hours of debate on this proposition and all amendments thereto, and under the agreement the chairman of the committee the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] is to control one hour of that time and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] the remaining hour. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] how much of his time is to be given to those who are opposed to this item.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman please repeat that?

Mr. MOON. Are you in favor of the amendment to the section?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes; I am in favor of increasing the appropriation.

Mr. MOON. What I want to get at is this: In the division of time over here there are a number of gentlemen who are opposed and who are in favor of the amendment. I want to give time to the gentlemen who oppose the amendment as well as those who favor it, but if you are going to give all of your time to those who favor the amendment you can accommodate some of these gentlemen.

Mr. STEENERSON. I do not know how these gentlemen who have asked for time all stand. I did not ask that question, but presumably they came to me because they knew I was opposed to it. But I have promised all of the 60 minutes. Now, I have not promised as many on the Democratic side as wanted time, but I have some of the Democrats on my list. It seems to me that the gentleman has been so liberal in this matter that he can take care of both sides on that side of the aisle.

Mr. MOON. Oh, I do not want to take care of anybody that you can take care of, but where you can not take care of somebody I would like to do it.

Mr. STEENERSON. I can give you the names. I promised, among others, Mr. MEEKER and Mr. OLNEY, and others——

Mr. MOON. Well, I will try to give some time to gentlemen on your side, but I would like at least to give some gentlemen who are opposed to this amendment some of the hour.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. OLNEY and others have asked me for time. I will be glad to give it to them if I have it.

Mr. MOON. Well, we will see about that later. I yield, Mr. Chairman, to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN], who I understand favors the amendment and is opposed to this item as it appears in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the gentleman from Tennessee for yielding this time, in view of the position I take on this amendment. It is directly opposed to his own views. Therefore I appreciate his kindness in permitting me to address the committee from my viewpoint.

I do not know whether or not we are wasting the time of the committee and of Congress in devoting two hours to this discussion of the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. TAGUE], but it would appear from the very latest news in the Boston papers, at any rate, that perhaps after all Congress does not amount to much when it has to deal with one of the great and mighty moguls in the Cabinet of the President of the United States. [Laughter.] For days, almost weeks, we have been somewhat upset and concerned as to whether or not a distinguished citizen of Boston has been holding this Congress in contempt, and time, words, and money have been spent by the Members of this House and by committees of this House in trying to reach a conclusion as to whether or not Thomas W. Lawson, of Boston, holds Members of Congress in contempt.

Well, let me say to my colleagues who are here present to-day that there is a gentleman here in Washington who holds you in contempt, and he does not care whether you vote for the amendment which my colleague has just offered or not. If he has his way he does not propose, despite the action of the Congress of the United States, to spend this money which we are about to vote, in my opinion, for the continuation of the pneumatic-tube service in the big cities of this country.

Last night's Boston Globe has the following paragraph:

About 40 motor vehicles will probably be needed for local transportation of the mails after the abandonment of the pneumatic-tube service, according to Charles P. Stearns and I. O. Keen, post-office inspectors from Washington, who are in Boston to-day checking up the plans of Postmaster Murray—

Another mighty mogul, who has grown so great since he ceased to be a Congressman that you would not believe he is the same little Billy that we knew down here. [Laughter.] But he has achieved his present hauteur after basking in the presence of Cabinet officials, and he does not now care for you men whom he once loved so dearly. I read further:

It is understood that the department favors the postmaster's scheme to have the Government assume the work of local transportation exclusively by automobiles—

And so forth. Now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption by a very brief question?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Certainly.

Mr. HULBERT. When the postmaster of Boston was a Member of the House, did he not favor pneumatic tubes in Boston?

Mr. GALLIVAN. I will say to the gentleman in response to his inquiry that when I came to Congress the present postmaster at Boston was my guide, counselor, and friend. [Laughter.] He made me a very strong advocate of the pneumatic-tube service. Years ago, before I became a Member of Congress, I had been a stockholder in one of the companies, and I had lost almost my inside shirt. [Laughter.] Stock for which I had paid $20 a share went down to little or nothing, when I disposed of it for keeps.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman——

Mr. GALLIVAN. Oh, sit down. [Laughter.] But when the question of pneumatic tubes was under discussion, once upon a time, naturally I did not feel kindly toward the proposition, and the present postmaster of Boston persuaded me that I was wrong, and that whatever had been the matter with the pneumatic-tube service in Boston, it was not the tubes; it was the management of the then existing company. And in reply to the query of the gentleman I want to say to my colleagues on the floor that not only was the present postmaster of Boston an advocate of the pneumatic-tube service when he was in this body, but according to a report of five distinguished business men in Boston specially selected from the chamber of commerce the postmaster of that city assumed a very different attitude when interviewed by its members a few months ago from that which he took when he came before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads a few weeks ago.

Far be it from me to say that the attitude of the postmaster of Boston is somewhat directed by the fact that the Postmaster General is something of a boss. [Laughter.] Why, I have had a former postmaster in one of the big cities of this country tell me within the week that when he was ordered a few years ago to make discharges of certain men grown gray in the service and he refused to do it, he was almost threatened with removal.

Mr. Murray and my informant were on the carpet at headquarters here in Washington. Pointing out a gentleman who had recently been promoted to a high post-office position in this city, Mr. Burleson said, "There is the kind of man for you to pattern after. He is saving me $200 a day." And the postmaster of the big city to whom I refer, turning to a little postmaster from another big city, said, "Let us resign." And the little postmaster said, "You are getting hot under the collar. Let us think it over. I get $8,000 a year and you get $6,000 a year. We do not want to resign so quickly." And they did not. [Laughter.] And the Postmaster General did not remove them. But some of the little postmasters from big cities have long memories, and are perhaps afraid that what was once threatened might come about if they do not pursue the straight and narrow path outlined for them by the Postmaster General of the United States. [Laughter.] They listen for the master's voice.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I submit to this House that the people in my city have been spending millions of dollars for subways in Boston, and——

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Massachusetts permit another very brief interruption?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes.

Mr. HULBERT. If, as we were told yesterday, the Postmaster General has recommended the installation of the pneumatic tubes at Dallas, Tex., is it because the congestion down there is greater than it is at the Hub, in Boston?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Well, I might reply to the gentleman from New York that in all probability the Postmaster General has the same idea as to congestion in Boston as I am told a member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads has as to the length of time the tubes to the lively city of The Bronx, as I will call it, are used by the people of New York. I have read the statement that a member of the Post Office Committee thought that the great borough of The Bronx was a summer resort. Perhaps the Postmaster General feels that the business streets of Boston are not congested all the year round.

Mr. MOON. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Why, certainly.

Mr. MOON. I have heard that statement made two or three times about some member of the Post Office Committee. I think it is hardly fair unless you tell us who it was.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I read it in the RECORD.

Mr. MOON. You do not know anything about it, then.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Not a thing. I assure the gentleman from Tennessee that the story is not original with me. I read it in the record of this debate. I think it was spoken on the floor here the day before yesterday.

Mr. HULBERT. Do all the statements contained in the RECORD purport to be true?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Always true. Now, I was about to say, Mr. Chairman, that the people of Boston have spent millions on subways. They have been compelled to do so because of the conditions of surface transportation in Boston, particularly in the business sections, and it is there that the pneumatic-tube service is performing its greatest good.

I want this House to know that of all the cities where the tube systems have been operated the difficulties of surface transportation are greater in Boston than elsewhere. Our people, I have said, have spent millions in the last few years for subways merely because of the unbearable congestion of surface traffic. This is particularly true in the business sections of Boston, and I repeat it is here that the underground pneumatic mail-tube system is of greatest service. The efficiency of these tubes as contrasted with surface travel is especially marked in winter, when trains are late and progress on the streets is hampered by heavy snowstorms. During our blizzards—and we have them up there—street traffic is often entirely blocked for hours, and it is subjected to long delays for days at a time. At such times we see the real advantage of pneumatic tubes, as these conditions have no effect upon underground dispatch of mail.

I notice that the claim has been made that the tubes in Boston are used only to a small per cent of their capacity, and that the rental of $17,000 per mile per year is too high as based upon such use. Does any man within the sound of my voice believe that there is any such thing as a hundred per cent use of capacity in any utility? A telephone line, a railroad, a mail box, and other utilities are never used to their fullest capacity and could not be so used. I will admit that the average use of the tubes over the entire period of 20 hours per day amounts to less than half of their maximum capacity; yet at certain periods of the day, at night and morning, the tubes are running at what is practically full capacity, while during the lightest hours of mail service the use of the tubes dwindles down to small proportions.

Mr. Chairman, a special committee of the chamber of commerce in my city has made an exhaustive study of postal facilities with reference to the pneumatic-tube service in Boston. Five of our leading merchants made up that committee, and I take their judgment in preference to that of the postmaster of Boston, who, according to a member of the committee, assumed a very different attitude when interviewed by its members from that which he took when he appeared before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads a few weeks ago. These captains of industry are unanimously and strongly in favor of retaining the tube service in Boston, and they believe it has proved itself an indispensable aid to the delivery of mail in large cities. When the Government spends millions upon rural free delivery and is willing to spend a comparatively large sum of money in sending a small amount of mail to remote parts of the country, it seems unreasonable to suppose that the department, in the hope of making a saving, will turn its back upon the pneumatic mail-tube systems, which were installed at its own request and have proven highly successful in developing the efficiency of the mail service in the very heart of the country's business.

If, as is alleged, our valiant Postmaster General has developed an automobile bug, let him try this method elsewhere and not in Boston, where our streets, historic and unique as they are, are narrow and crooked and twisted. We want the tubes to stay in Boston, and, as a representative of its people, I appeal to the House to give us your help. [Applause.]

What I have said as to congestion in Boston applies with greater force to congestion in the great city of New York, and there the men who operate the giant motor trucks now in the service of the Post Office Department apparently have but little consideration for life and limb of those who use the main thoroughfares of that city. I quote from the New York Times of yesterday this paragraph which describes conditions as they existed this very week:

TO CURB MAIL TRUCKS—SWANN STARTS TEST CASE TO FIX JURISDICTION.

A test case to determine whether automobile trucks carrying mail within the city are immune from city and State traffic laws and regulations has been instituted by District Attorney Swann, who issued a summons yesterday for the appearance of Thomas McDermott of 222 East Forty-ninth Street, driver of a mail truck which collided with an automobile belonging to Martin Carey, general counsel to the Standard Oil Co., on Wednesday night.

Mr. Swann saw the accident, which occurred at Fifth Avenue and Fortieth Street. He said that Mr. Carey's automobile was going up Fifth Avenue at a slow speed when the mail truck came out of the side street at a speed, he estimated, at 22 miles an hour. The driver of the truck did not stop to see what damage had been done, the district attorney said, but continued at the same speed through Fortieth Street. Mr. Carey's machine was wrecked.

I heard the testimony of Mr. Thomas Myers, inspector in charge of the traffic department, New York police, touching on the manner of operating these mighty trucks, wherein he said that when the chauffeurs in the service of the Government violate any law, whether it be one regulating street traffic or otherwise, they must not be in any way interfered with or stopped, but the officers must proceed with them to the end of their routes, no matter where that may be—at the end of upper Manhattan—before they are placed under arrest. Mr. Myers insisted that the addition of a single motor vehicle of the kind used by the Post Office Department to the thousands of vehicles now causing blockades in the street traffic of the metropolis would materially increase congestion there, and so it is in Boston. I was a street commissioner there for 14 years before I came to Congress. It was our duty to try in some way to relieve traffic congestion, and in 1907 the board of which I was a member established certain rules. We did the best we could at that time, and those rules have been added to year by year, and yet congestion is altogether as bad in down-town Boston around the business center as it ever was.

Do not, I beg of you, make those conditions more intolerable by a substitution of automobiles for the tubes which are underground, out of the way, and in no wise obstructive or dangerous. I have a confidence that the intelligence of this House will lead it in the direction that the Members from the great cities of our country would have Congress go. I appeal to you, whether you come from the city or the country, to stand with us. [Applause.]

A PENSION FOR POST-OFFICE EMPLOYEES.

Mr. Chairman, it occurs to me that this is a very proper and appropriate hour in which to call to the attention of Congress the repeated and ever-present necessity for the enactment of a retirement law which will operate in favor of men in the Postal Service who have spent years of their lives in faithful and efficient service, cheerfully rendered to the Government under which we live. I believe that we can afford, when a general discussion of matters affecting the post-office management of this country is occupying the attention of the House, to devote some part of this discussion to the men in the ranks, the men who do the real work and who get the littlest reward. I will speak to the Members on both sides of the aisle here, but first of all I desire to address myself to my Democratic brethren. May I say to you that I speak in behalf of the men, not only of my own city and State who have asked me to make this appeal, who have made the Post Office Department of this Government the one great successful, profit-making branch of our Federal activities. They live in the South as well as in the North, in the East as well as in the West.

So much publicity has been given to this question that the committee on resolutions of the national Democratic convention held in St. Louis, Mo., in June, 1916, submitted the following recommendation which was approved and made a part of the Democratic platform:

The enactment of an equitable retirement law providing for the retirement of superannuated and disabled employees of the civil service, to the end that a higher standard of efficiency may be maintained.

While the Republican platform of the last national convention is silent on this subject, it is well to note that the platform of 1912 of the Republican Party contained the following declaration:

We favor legislation to make possible the equitable retirement of disabled and superannuated members of the civil service, in order that a higher standard of efficiency may be maintained.

Added to this the Republican nominee for President publicly declared in favor of enactment of a retirement law for civil-service employees during the campaign.

This is not a political question and it should not be decided as one. Both parties are committed to the enactment of legislation to relieve the civil service of the superannuates, and the matter should be settled from the standpoint of benefit to the public service and justice to the employees. There are many conflicting opinions as to the best means of solving this problem and the advocates of different plans have submitted their views and arguments in favor of each. The Griffin bill, designed to meet the situation, has been approved by a majority of the Post Office Committee, and I hope it will be enacted into law at this session of Congress. The bill is an administrative one and is intended to grant immediate relief to the employees in the Postal Service who have become incapacitated through superannuation. The need for this legislation is urgent and I believe apparent to a majority of the Members of this House. At the public hearings held on House bill 6915, known as the indefinite-leave-of-absence bill, held on April 7 and 8, 1916, more than 100 Members of Congress appeared before the subcommittee on the Post Office and Post Roads and gave the measure their indorsement and urged that favorable action be taken on it.

The initial cost and the future maintenance of this indefinite-leave-of-absence bill will not be so large as to become a financial burden upon the finances of the country. Mr. Miles M. Dawson, of New York, a consulting actuary of national repute, computed the cost for the first fiscal year at $362,250, equal to about three-tenths of 1 per cent of the salaries of the employees that will come under its provision. We can not limit the benefit to be derived from this legislation by what appears to be its cost. No important legislation has ever been enacted that did not involve some apparent financial cost yet in the end proved to be an economical proposition.

The contention is made by some well-meaning people that self-dependent men and women should be required to save a sufficient amount from their earnings to provide for their wants during old age. To show how impractical this argument is, I quote from a pamphlet issued by the Phoenix Mutual Life Insurance Co., of Hartford, Conn.:

Statistics which are unimpeachable though astounding to the busy man who has not had time or facilities for looking up these things are furnished by Prof. Charles Spahr, of the Columbia University, after an examination of the surrogates of 35 leading counties in New York for the purpose of ascertaining the proportion of people who leave estates at their death.

Of 10,000 above the age of 25 who died in that quarter of the year only 3,351 left any estate whatever; only 50 per cent of the heads of families left even a savings-bank account.

Of the 3,351 "estates," only 884 were worth over $5,000. The average value of the other estates was $1,292. In other words, 66 per cent left no estates, 25 per cent left estates valued at $1,292, 9 per cent left estates of $5,000 and up. This is one of our foremost States.

We know also that an amazingly large proportion of men who are comparatively prosperous at age 45 are partially or wholly dependent on friends or the public at age 65.

Further, Government statistics show that 32 per cent of all widows have to earn their own living, and we all know that the major portion of widows have to give up many of the comforts and necessities they enjoyed earlier in life, while their children are terribly handicapped.

When the postal employee becomes incapacitated from performing his duties through superannuation or any other cause he is turned out of the public service and left to shift for himself as best he can. As very few men accumulate anything in life, it is almost a certainty that these worn-out men and women are left wholly dependent on friends or the public. I have had a number of very sad cases brought to my attention of men who gave all the productive years of their lives to the service of the Government and when turned adrift they died homeless and in want.

A few days ago I received a letter from one of my friends in which he drew attention to the sad case of a letter carrier in Denver, Colo. The letter contained the statement that—

A letter carrier named Dan Mahoney is in a precarious condition, and the doctor holds out no hope for his recovery. To the poor fellow's other ills complete blindness is now added. He can not see the beautiful flowers that the local association of letter carriers constantly keeps in the sick room, but he is still conscious and, stranger yet, still cheerful and thankful, not alone for the mere presence of these fragrant tokens, but for what they represent. "Old Dan" assured the writer that of all his friends on earth the letter carriers held the highest place in his heart.

It is sad, indeed, to contemplate the numerous cases in the United States like this old veteran, where the Government they serve so faithfully for a lifetime has forgotten them completely, and the comrades in gray alone have come to the rescue. Just a little kindness, a little sympathy, make the word "fraternity" a reality. We are living in an age of hope and progress—more hope than progress, however, in some things. When honorable retirement is an assured fact and our country has taken her stand with the other nations in this respect, the red, white, and blue of the "Grand Old Flag" will look a little brighter for many of us.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this is the future that awaits your old letter carrier and the other employees of the Postal Service that have devoted their lives to its progress. You would not treat your horse or your dog in such a manner; you would, at least, make suitable provision for the declining years of a faithful animal. I ask that you give like consideration for these postal employees that are human beings like you and me. They have given a lifetime of service to the Government at salaries that would not permit of saving anything to keep them from want for the short time they have left to live. This they have justly earned, and in the name of justice and humanity let us pay our just dues.

I will submit as part of my remarks the recommendations of Cabinet officers and chiefs of bureaus on the question of superannuation of civil-service employees of the Government:

RECOMMENDATIONS OF CABINET OFFICERS AND CHIEFS OF BUREAUS IN THEIR REPORTS TO CONGRESS ON THE QUESTION OF SUPERANNUATION OF CIVIL-SERVICE EMPLOYEES OF THE GOVERNMENT.

Secretary of Labor:

SUPERANNUATION AND RETIREMENT.

In a previous report of the department attention was drawn to the difficulties confronting executive officers of the Government impelled in the interests of good administration to dispense with the services of employees whose efficiency has been materially impaired by advanced years. On the one hand they are met with the fact that the business of the Government could be more efficiently handled by the replacement of these superannuated employees with younger and more active persons, whereas on the other there looms up before them the specter of hardship, and in many cases absolute want, which would be enforced upon faithful servants if they were thus to be summarily removed from the only means of gaining a livelihood for which through years of training they are qualified.

It is inevitable, therefore, that until such time as heads of departments can accomplish this change in the personnel without visiting undue hardship upon their subordinates they will be deterred by a consideration of the humanitarian phase of the matter from taking such action as the situation seems to demand.

The department accordingly reiterates its recommendation that there be provided through legislative enactment an equitable system of retirement, a system which will best subserve the interests of efficiency and economy and at the same time insure fair financial provision for those who through long and faithful service are entitled to some consideration in their declining years.

Secretary of the Treasury:

RETIREMENT OF CIVIL-SERVICE EMPLOYEES.

The need for an adequate civil-service retirement law is becoming more imperative each year. The Treasury Department bears upon its rolls a large number of aged employees whose efficiency is gradually waning. The introduction of new and improved methods of performing the constantly increasing volume of work in the department has served to emphasize the need for making some provision for the older employee who is unable to keep step with progress. It does not seem humane or fair to discontinue arbitrarily the services of superannuated employees who have given their entire energies and spent the best years of their lives in the service of the Government. To do so would in most cases leave the employees without any source of income and result in serious hardship. To reduce aged employees does not entirely meet the needs of the case, as it leaves the employees still on the rolls of the department.

I believe that the enactment of an equitable retirement law for superannuated and disabled employees of the civil service in the Treasury Department would result in actual economies and increased efficiency in the handling of the business of the department, and I therefore recommend this subject to the Congress for its serious consideration.

Secretary of War:

RETIREMENT OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.

An examination of the reports of my predecessors for a number of years shows that they have continuously recommended consideration of the subject of an equitable retirement law providing for the retirement of superannuated and disabled employees of the civil service. I am very happy to renew the recommendation. From time to time bills have been introduced into Congress providing for such retirement, but as yet none has been enacted into law. In the meantime, various industrial and transportation companies have found it to their interest to retire and pension superannuated employees. The Federal Government is and should be a model employer. The provisions now made by the Government in the matter of compensation, hours of labor, vacations, sick leave, and holidays are all wisely generous both as an example and as establishing a harmonious and helpful relation between employer and employee, which both conserves the spirit and health of the employee and secures for the employer that willingness and good will out of which service of maximum efficiency naturally arises. There seems to remain as the chief thing yet to be done this provision of retirement upon superannuation. The law ought not, in my judgment, to provide a mere service pension as has sometimes been done in municipal and State services in this country, under which employees who have served a stipulated number of years are authorized to retire irrespective of their ability still to render competent service. The law ought, rather, upon a minimum service required, to authorize retirement either for disability arising in the course of the service or occasioned by the service itself, and this retirement should be in the hands of a competent authority which would determine the inability of the particular employee further to render adequate service in his place of employment. The effect of such a law would be to give an assurance of a competent and comfortable old age. It would relieve the employee from fear of loss of occupation and of livelihood, would further inspire him to loyalty to the Government as an employer, thus improving the general quality of the service rendered by Government employees, although that is already high, and would permit the replacement of some employees in the various departments who have long and faithfully served the Government and reached venerable but enfeebled years without having had an opportunity to accumulate any competence upon which their retirement can rest.

First Assistant Postmaster General:

FORECASTED IMPROVEMENTS.

* * * Two reforms are of paramount importance—retirement of superannuated employees and opportunity for transfer and promotion through all grades of the Postal Service. The subject of superannuation in the Post Office Service has been discussed in previous reports. The administration of the service during the past year strengthens the conviction that the retention of employees in positions of responsibility after they have passed the point where they are no longer capable of performing satisfactory service is a constant incubus which should be removed by legislative action. * * * These measures, being in the interest of the employees as well as of the Government, are to be desired for the direct and important benefits that will flow from them, and also for the reason that the best results in this great cooperative endeavor can only be secured by such fair and generous treatment of the working force as will insure their loyalty and ambitious effort.

Secretary of Commerce:

PERSONNEL.

* * * That the efficiency of the executive civil service is seriously impaired by reason of its superannuated employees, and that the prompt enactment of some equitable form of retirement law is one of its greatest needs, are facts conceded by practically all persons who are at all familiar with the problems of the service. Efficient service and justice to employees demand a comprehensive, wide-reaching, and effective scheme of retirement pensions, the advantage of which is being more and more widely recognized by progressive commercial establishments and by foreign Governments. While doubtless the cost of a civil-service retirement scheme would for a few years add to the expense of administration, it would be a good investment, and in a short time the service would be recouped the additional outlay many times over by the saving it would render possible. The standard of efficiency would be raised, the work could be done with less force, and this would be accomplished without heartlessly throwing out of employment men and women who for decades have given their best service to the Government and who have no means of subsistence other than their decreasing salaries.

RETIREMENT OF AGED AND DISABLED EMPLOYEES.

A marine officer of the Lighthouse Service who has served for 40 years recently told me he hoped for the coming of a retirement system which would provide something for his old age after so many years of faithful work. A provision for the retirement of the employees of the Lighthouse Service who after long service have lost their ability for further active duty by age or disability arising from their work is essential to full efficiency in administering the service. In the Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, and the Coast Guard, including those who serve on the Coast Guard cutters, such a retirement system now exists. The result is an unjust and, I think, an unintentional discrimination against those who serve in one service and in favor of those who serve in others. The men who man the lighthouse ships and who serve in the various light stations give their lives to the Government as truly as does an Army or Navy officer. Many of them would, by reason of their special knowledge, be required to aid our military forces in time of war.

The Lighthouse Service is in many respects a dangerous service. By every rule of administration and of humanity and by the precedent of the practice both in our own Government in other services and of other Governments as respects this particular kind of work, these men are entitled to retirement pay.

In the annual report of the Commissioner of Lighthouses for the fiscal year 1912, page 29, is a statement showing the practice of foreign countries with reference to pensioning employees in other lighthouse services. This shows that a retirement system is in force with favorable results in all of the countries mentioned. The record is one of unenviable isolation and inaction on our part.

On April 24, 1916, the Senate unanimously passed a bill which, in its present form, provides for the optional retirement of officers and employees of the Lighthouse Service at the age of 65 years after 30 years' service and for compulsory retirement at the age of 70 years. The retirement pay would be at the rate of one-fortieth of the last annual pay for each year of active service, not to exceed thirty-fortieths. The measure has my cordial approval and the warm indorsement of the Senate Committee on Commerce backed by its unanimous passage. It is pending in the House of Representatives, and I earnestly hope it may soon be enacted into law. It has been recommended in the annual reports of the Lighthouse Service every year since 1910. It ought now to be done and done quickly.

RETIREMENT.

The serious question of retirement for civil-service employees, while probably affecting more or less all the bureaus of the Government, is so specially evident in the Coast and Geodetic Survey that some specific retirement provision should be made for its engineers. The bureau is somewhat handicapped to-day on account of the fact that a number of these highly trained men, who have served the country faithfully for nearly 50 years and have largely the same education as the graduates of Annapolis and West Point, have now reached the age where the duties they once performed are too irksome for their advanced years. It necessarily results in a hardship for them to undertake to perform such arduous tasks.

The small salaries these hydrographic and geodetic engineers, who are also navigators, have received during their tenure of office have not been adequate for them to save any considerable amount of money. The result is that in their advancing years they are forced to attempt to continue at their duties, when at the age of 64 they should be allowed to retire at a substantial pension, the same as an Army, Navy, Public Health Service, or Coast Guard officer. It is not justice, under prevailing conditions, to ask that these men retire from the service. At the same time, frankly speaking, the service is handicapped, inasmuch as their places should naturally be filled by younger men who are better able to meet the hardships.

To-day in the Coast and Geodetic Survey there are 15 or more men who have passed the retirement age, and they should be properly cared for by the Government to which they have devoted their lives. No one except those in touch with the situation can realize what their services have meant to this part of the Government work. While I have particularly dwelt on the question of retirement for hydrographic and geodetic engineers here, other aged employees of the bureau are deserving of recognition under retirement legislation, but along different lines.

Civil Service Commission:

RETIREMENT.

Superannuation is older than the civil-service act, and any increase does not result from the merit system. That system does not protect incompetents. Improved administrative methods and the standardization of salaries can not be effectively made until a retirement system is established which will provide for superannuated employees. The commission believes that a contributory plan would be just and practicable, and earnestly recommends its adoption.

Department of Commerce, Chief of Appointment Division:

SUPERANNUATION AND RETIREMENT.

A careful study of American institutions and the political trend of to-day indicates the rapid extension of the policy of compensatory retirement of aged and disabled employees, both as an accepted economic theory and as an actual practice, and the passage of a civil-service retirement law by Congress in the early future may be accepted as a reasonable certainty. As illustrating the increased interest shown in the matter during the present session of Congress, 11 bills have been introduced providing for retirement pensions and 10 for compensating employees injured while in the service. Of the bills in question, 6 were contributory, calling for a deduction from employees' salaries to meet, or partly meet, the cost of the scheme, and 11 were noncontributory. The enactment of a law of this character is justified as making for the improvement of the public service and the perpetuation of the merit system. The long-existing condition of old-age inefficiency is each year becoming a more detrimental burden upon the merit system, any departure from which would be deplorable from an administrative point of view. Efficient service and justice to employees demand a comprehensive, wide-reaching, and effective scheme of retirement pensions, the advantage of which is being more and more widely recognized by progressive commercial establishments and by foreign Governments.

While doubtless the cost of a civil-service retirement scheme would for a few years add to the expense of administration, it would be a good investment and in a short time the service would be recouped the additional outlay many times over by the saving it would render possible. The standard of efficiency would be raised, the work could be done with a smaller force, and this would be accomplished without heartlessly throwing out of employment men and women who for decades have given their best service to the Government and who have no means of subsistence other than their decreasing salaries, which have been rendered still smaller in proportion by reason of the rapidly increasing cost of living. Indirectly the Government is now pensioning such employees by keeping them on the pay rolls, even though their value to it is in reality less than the compensation paid them, but "kindness will creep in where it mauna gang," and officials will feel constrained to ignore conditions rather than cause a hardship by rewarding faithful service with dismissal to a future of poverty. To those who have given the subject intelligent thought there is no difficulty in deciding that it is a far better business policy to drop its veteran employees, pay them a part of the compensation they are now vainly endeavoring to earn, and replace them by younger persons, who, with improved opportunities for promotion, would reach a higher standard of efficiency, than to perpetuate the conditions which now pervade the service and which will continue to exist until remedial measures are put into operation.

In laying down a fundamental basis for his philosophy on economics Herbert Spencer said: "No State or society or no form of government can long persist that fails to penalize indolence or reward merit." The retention of superannuated employees penalizes efficiency and is a bar to the proper reward of merit, and it behooves those who have at heart the good of the Government service and the well-being of its employees to give careful consideration to working out, without hardship to those concerned, the problem of removing superannuated employees.

In this connection it might be interesting to note that in a compilation prepared in December last it was shown that in the Department of Commerce there were 144 employees from 65 to 69 years of age and 150 employees of 70 years and upward.

Director of the Census:

EXECUTIVE CIVIL SERVICE.

A bulletin presenting statistics relating to the employees in the executive civil service on July 1, 1916, will be compiled and published. The data will be supplied, on individual cards, by the various departments and other governmental establishments. The Bureau of Efficiency will have charge of the distribution and collection of these cards, and after making use of the data on them as a basis for estimating the cost of civil-service pensions will turn them over to the Census Bureau for the purpose of the statistical compilations required for the proposed bulletins.

Two similar bulletins have already been published, one relating to the year 1903 and the other to the year 1907. In these bulletins the employees in the executive civil service are classified by departments and bureaus and by sex, age, race, nativity, marital conditions, compensation, length of service, etc. In 1907 the total number of employees, both in and outside of the District of Columbia, was 185,874, and it is estimated that the number at the present time is not far from 320,000.

Commissioner of Lighthouses, Department of Commerce:

* * * There is a great need for provision by law for the retirement of employees of the Lighthouse Service who after long service have lost their ability for active duty by reason of age or disability incident to their work. This is essential to full efficiency in the administration of the service. In the report for 1912 a statement was given showing the practice in a number of important foreign countries with reference to the pensioning of employees in the respective lighthouse services in common with other civil employees in those countries, from which it appears that a retirement system is in force with favorable results under all of the other Governments mentioned. On April 24, 1916, the Senate unanimously passed a bill providing for the optional retirement of officers and employees of the Bureau of Lighthouses and the Lighthouse Service at the age of 65 years after 30 years' service, and compulsory retirement at the age of 70 years. The retirement pay would be at the rate of one-fortieth of the last annual pay for each year of active service, not to exceed thirty-fortieths. The bill has not yet been acted upon by the House of Representatives.

This action marked the first legislative step toward a system of retirement for the Lighthouse Service, which has been earnestly recommended in previous annual reports every year since 1910. The measure had the warm indorsement of the Secretary of Commerce and of the Senate Committee on Commerce, and it is hoped that Congress may see fit to enact it into law at an early date.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to discuss this question now, but in connection with this matter I want to place in the RECORD an answer to some inquiries made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] and others yesterday in reference to the vehicle service. The information on this subject is found on page 237 of the hearings on pneumatic tubes.

Vehicle service is a combination of the screen-wagon service, which was transferred from the bureau of the Second Assistant to the First Assistant on July 1, 1916, and city-delivery horse hire. Expenditures will be made from this appropriation to reimburse city letter carriers for furnishing wagons or automobiles, for the rental of wagons or automobiles under contract or agreement from outside parties, and for the purchase, exchange, and maintenance, including stable and garage facilities, of wagons or automobiles for the delivery and collection of mail at city-delivery offices, and for the transportation of mail in bulk to and from railway depots.

The increase in this item for 1918 is less than the normal increase.

I understand that answers the gentleman's question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This relates to a preceding paragraph, does it not?

Mr. MOON. Yes; that is what I say. It is in reply to the gentleman's questions that I want to put the statement in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to insert something in the RECORD?

Mr. MOON. No; what I have said about it will appear in the RECORD. A question was asked here yesterday about whether the new public building in Dallas, Tex., was to have the pneumatic-tube service installed in it. I have a letter from the Postmaster General in which he says that the tube service is not to be installed at Dallas, that there is no recommendation for it, and that the plans for that building are not yet completed. I make these statements in answer to the suggestions made. I may discuss this question a little later.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we are in this fix about time. I want to be liberal, but the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] does not seem to have any disposition, after the time is accorded to him, to give it to anyone except somebody on his own side. There are a number of gentlemen here all around me who are demanding that I give them a part of my time to speak in opposition to the proposition of the Post Office Committee. I think it is the duty of the gentleman from Minnesota to yield time to them. I have an hour, and I have already given 10 minutes in opposition to the bill. I can not yield any more time except to my own side of this question. If I did, I should have everybody speaking against the committee and nobody for it. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON.]

Mr. TAGUE. Will the gentleman permit me to make a statement before he does that?

Mr. MOON. I have yielded to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the city of Cleveland, which I represent in part on the floor of this House, is very much bothered with this proposition of congestion, to which so much reference has been made in this debate, and last summer an important civic body of that city considered very seriously this question of pneumatic-tube service and urged upon me the importance of having Cleveland inserted in the list of cities to have that service. Therefore, I have given some time and attention to the investigation of the question since I returned to Washington. Now, it seems to me that what is being attempted here is a vain and useless thing, in view of the provisions of the law authorizing the use of this pneumatic-tube service, which provisions have been read here to the House by the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee, the chairman of the Post Office Committee, Mr. MOON; because even though the House votes this appropriation, it is entirely a matter in the discretion of the Postmaster General, and as a matter of law I think by the statute he is prohibited from continuing the service or from making a new contract with this Pneumatic Tube Co. until he has a favorable report from the experts; and as we know, their report is against the further use of these tubes except in New York City.

Now, this is a business proposition pure and simple. I wholly disagree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], who stated on the floor of the House here that he had carefully investigated this question, and he did not think the tubes were a good business proposition, but that out of deference to the sentiment in Chicago he was going to vote for them. I think that is a perfectly foolish attitude for a Representative to take in the American Congress upon a purely business question like this. Of course, I believe in representative government. I think that on questions of public policy we ought to represent our constituents. For example, there are two questions on which we will probably have to vote here, prohibition and woman suffrage. Now, I think a man who came down here and undertook by a constitutional amendment to force on the people of his State and district either one of those propositions which they had voted down, would be guilty of treason to the principle of representative government. But that has nothing to do with this proposition, which is purely a business question. I take it that these tubes are a good thing or they are not. Now, we have the testimony of these experts in the Post Office Department who have carefully investigated the question, and they recommend that the tube service be discontinued. Furthermore, we have the testimony of the present postmasters at Chicago and Boston.

Mr. HULBERT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. No; I do not yield.

Mr. HULBERT. Is the gentleman afraid to answer a question?

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] a moment ago called attention to the fact that when the present postmaster at Boston was a Member of this House he was in favor of these pneumatic tubes, just as the other fellows now here are; that when he was appointed postmaster he had an opportunity to investigate the operations of the tubes and then he changed his mind. Is there anything strange or wonderful about that? I never heard of such an argument. The idea that when a man learns something and changes his mind he must be assailed from the floor of the House is something new. I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] testified before the Post Office Committee that he could deliver more mail in a wheelbarrow than they did by the pneumatic tubes. What sense is there in spending $500,000 for a service that is practically worthless upon the testimony of the only men who are qualified to speak on that question?

Now, I do not question the motives of these gentlemen from the cities who advocate these tubes. They are advocating the thing because there is a sentiment for it. Would you take the testimony of these gentlemen in preference to that of the executive department of the Government? The statute itself says that you can not spend the money until a favorable report of an expert commission has been made.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. HULBERT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio if he will in my time answer a question.

Mr. GORDON. Yes; if I can.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER].

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, if there is any one thing that is absolutely proved and is self-evident to anyone who lives in one of these cities concerned, or who is familiar with the conditions in the congested parts of these cities, it is that the movement of passengers or freight or anything else on the surface by automobile or by any other kind of a vehicle is becoming less and less rapid and less and less certain.

Now, it is a fact that the unanimous sentiment of the people of these cities, irrespective of political affiliations, is in favor of the retention of the pneumatic-tube service, because the business men know that the continuance of this service is absolutely indispensable not only to the people in these cities but to the business of the entire country. I wish those members of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads not familiar with the conditions could come to Boston or New York and see the situation. Something was said in debate the other day about Cambridge, the city which I have the honor to represent, and which is just across the river from Boston. Before we had our Cambridge subway I used to have to allow at least three quarters of an hour—45 minutes by electric car—in order to be sure to meet an engagement at Cambridge, distant only 3½ miles from my office in Boston, simply because of the congestion on the surface. Now, by taking a train in the subway I can make it in 7 minutes.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON] referred to the postmaster at Boston, former Congressman Murray, and said that he had learned something since he became postmaster. I wish to call his attention to the fact that since Mr. Murray has become postmaster and after he had had considerable experience he has advocated tubes. He told the Cambridge Board of Trade, through a letter to the mayor of Cambridge, that the only chance of getting improved service to Cambridge—the mail now being carried by automobile—was by the extension of the pneumatic-tube service to Cambridge. He has turned turtle at the request of the Postmaster General on the main proposition, but being confronted with the letter he had written, at the hearing before the Post Office Committee, he put himself in the ridiculous position of saying that he still believes in the extension of the tubes to Cambridge, but believes in abolishing the system itself.

Now, in conclusion, we Members who represent these large cities appeal to the Members of this House who come from the agricultural parts of the country to stand by us. It is the cities that furnish the revenue that enables the Post Office Department to come anywhere near paying its way. The people who live there and who do business there have the right to ask Congress for the best possible service. We of the cities are willing to give you people of the agricultural parts of the country Rural Free Delivery Service although it is done at a loss. We are willing to do that because you are entitled to the best service. We ask you to stand by us and give us the best service, and I trust that our appeal will not be in vain. [Applause.]

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri five minutes.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, I think the pros and cons of this question have been discussed before the committee, and before the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, until we understand pretty thoroughly what it means to the men in these cities where pneumatic-tube service is now in operation. I want to say, however, that so far as the cost is concerned of the mail carried in other cities, I speak only for St. Louis where in 1914 our pneumatic-tube service carried over 132,000,000 pieces of first-class mail, at an average cost of 39 pieces for a cent, that our operation cost less than $34,000, and that the receipts were nearly $294,000.

Since I have been here, this being my first term, there has been no proposition before Congress that has received such a universal indorsement from all the business men who use these tubes, or use any instrumentality of the Government service coming from the men, as they have for the retention of these tubes.

I am perfectly willing that we should appropriate an additional four or five million dollars for the improvement of the Rural Free Delivery Service. It is coming and we know that it is not a revenue producer, but the men who represent the five cities live in the cities that turn into the National Treasury something like $20,000,000 annual profit in the post-office business. But here for a mere $600,000 addition we hear this great hue and cry as to what this is to cost when in reality if you discount the cost of installing the automobile service and the cost of operating the service there would not be $200,000 difference in operation. They say there has been a great cost in operating the pneumatic-tube service. It is a small item as far as the appropriation is concerned, but a tremendous item so far as the value to the men who use it is concerned.

If $600,000 additional will satisfy customers who supply $20,000,000 of profit, I think that a good investment. In our city transportation problems we are compelled to get off of the surface of the street all of the transportation that we possibly can. As was suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], the idea is to go forward to an underground mail-delivery service in all of the cities, and if that is so, why is it that we are contemplating giving up this limited underground service we already have? The business men from St. Louis are here with petitions for an extension of the service, and I want to say to my good friend from Ohio [Mr. GORDON], who is always asking somebody to yield, but who never yields when he has the floor, that I would rather take the judgment of all of the business organizations of the city of St. Louis who have used this service for 10 years than the judgment of a man who comes from a city where they do not have the service at all. I am talking of men who are customers of this pneumatic-tube service, and certainly all these exchanges and banking organizations and all others can not be so wildly mistaken as to the value of this service in the cities. The complaint is made that it costs too much. If it cost $17,000 an inch, if the people who use it pay a profit of $20,000,000 on a $900,000 investment, that would still be a good investment. It is not the distance of mail carried that counts, but it is the time saved, and that is the whole problem. One side is contending here for economy of time and the other side is talking of economy of money. Sometimes I think if some Members of Congress were put in a position where they could realize that in the great industrial life of this country time is everything and that time is money in reality, instead of time being nothing and salary everything, we would get a different viewpoint in many of these modern governmental questions. The business men of these cities are asking that we give them the very best facility for the saving of time, and, after all, the fever in the entire body may be produced by a congestion in a very small portion of one artery or vein. So it is in our mail service. It is to avoid as far as possible and to prevent the possibility of congestion in transportation of mail that we ask this.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DARROW].

Mr. DARROW. Mr. Chairman, in the time allotted to me I want to send to the Clerk's desk a copy of a resolution passed by the city council and approved by the mayor of the city of Philadelphia upon this question, and also to say that in connection with some of my colleagues and representatives of various business organizations in the city of Philadelphia we made a careful, conscientious, and practical examination of this service and found that the pneumatic tube advanced the first-class mail materially in its delivery and dispatch, and therefore it benefits not only the citizens of the cities where it is installed but also the people of the entire country who do business with those cities. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

CLERK'S OFFICE, COMMON COUNCIL,
Philadelphia, January 10, 1917.

DEAR SIR: This is to certify that the following is a true and correct copy of the original resolution passed by the select and common councils of the city of Philadelphia and approved by his honor the mayor on the 10th day of January, A. D. 1917:

"Resolution protesting against the abolition of the pneumatic-tube service in Philadelphia and directing the presentation of this resolution to the mayor for his approval or disapproval.

"Resolved by the select and common councils of the city of Philadelphia, That having learned with astonishment that the Postmaster

General has recommended the abolition of the pneumatic-tube service in this city, earnestly protest against such action as certain to result in serious loss not only to the business interests of Philadelphia but to all with whom they carry on correspondence. The pneumatic-tube service was first established in this city. It was in consequence of the great benefits realized here that the service was extended to other cities on the initiative of the post office itself. It is the profits of the great cities that render the Postal Service of the country self-supporting. The pneumatic-tube service consumes but a trifling proportion of these profits. The experience of 23 years with these tubes should outweigh any theories concerning them. With the street traffic increasing at the rate of 25 per cent each year, and municipalities everywhere appropriating vast sums to place their traffic underground we can not conceive of any possible justification for reversing this process by taking traffic from underground and placing it on the surface. In view of these facts we ask not only for the continuance of this service but for its extension, as demanded by the business interests of one of the greatest manufacturing centers of the world.

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to Members of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, and that the clerks of councils be directed to present this resolution to the mayor for his approval or disapproval."

WILLIAM H. FELTON,
Chief Clerk of Common Council.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GARLAND].

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Chairman, I am for the retention of the pneumatic-tube service in the post offices for several reasons. I come from a city that does not have it. I come from Pittsburgh, a much-congested city so far as the mail and every other kind of traffic is concerned. So much congested is it that we found it necessary years ago to provide that traffic shall go only one way on one street and must be turned the other way on another street, and so we get along fairly well, with one exception, and that is this: The United States Government exercises its legal or alleged legal right, I know not which, and refuses to concede the authority of the city of Pittsburgh or the State of Pennsylvania to direct that the traffic go on one street one way, and as a consequence we have the anomaly of the United States Government breaking the laws of our State and city all of the time and refusing to comply therewith and causing congestion and disturbance to the people of Pittsburgh. If we had a tube system of less than three-quarters of a mile we would reach, on a straight-way travel from the post office in Pittsburgh, every railroad station in Pittsburgh, and we could transfer all of the mail through that tube. If we permitted the good sense of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] to prevail, or if we could permit his idea when he proposes that the United States Government make the tubes large enough to carry all of the mail, the situation would be solved. This is the situation in the city of Pittsburgh, and it is getting worse all of the time.

I noticed in this debate in the beginning that the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] was defeated on a point of order because of his attempt to use the United States own service in connection with the customhouse of 2 miles for the purpose of utilizing it for sending the mails through it. Have we come to a point, as practical business men in this House, that we will on a point of order decide that the United States Government can not use its own tubes or modes for transportation from one department to another? I just desire to call attention to the foolishness of such a situation.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Chairman, like the district of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GARLAND], who has just taken his seat, these tubes are not within the State and district that I represent, but in listening to the debate upon this floor it occurred to me that here was another question in which the country as against the city had been brought into play. We see men from districts, and I do not mean to impugn their motives, who do not live near the large cities, and who therefore can not realize as impressively as other Members do what this tube service means; and for those friends of the farmer who may not have considered how this may affect his interest and business, I thought it best to call attention to that side of the argument in the few minutes that I have.

There are a large number of agricultural and farming communities around the five cities of Boston, Chicago, St. Louis, Philadelphia, and New York. The business men of those cities who buy the products, the grain dealers and other dealers in agricultural products, have to keep in close touch with the men who sell those products in the outlying districts. It is obviously impossible for them to keep in touch with them by mail or telegraph continually, and therefore the tubes have served to place market quotations for farm products before the men who have the products to sell at a sufficient time in the morning for them to get in touch with the broker or business man in the city who sells the product for them.

For instance, in the city of Philadelphia, which adjoins my State, the exchange there closes at 2.15. The mail trains for the peninsula, formed by the State of Delaware and parts of Maryland and Virginia, and outlying districts in Pennsylvania leave between 3 and 4 o'clock. A man who sends out quotations to the farmers must make them up, have them printed, and get them off by the 3 o'clock train, or a train leaving a few minutes thereafter. This tube service is essential to that city, to my personal knowledge, for this service to be performed, and if it is cut out the difference of even a few minutes will seriously impair the service which the people in the outlying agricultural districts have in order to get market quotations so that they can be received and intelligently considered that evening or the first thing in the morning in order for them to be taken advantage of. It is the same thing with respect to States like Connecticut, Maine, Vermont, New Hampshire, and Rhode Island, which radiate from Boston; and the States of Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, and Indiana, which radiate from Chicago; and so on with the other cities.

There is another point I want to make, and that is the tendency of the times has been to place underground not only part of the mail service, but also the transportation service, the telephone and telegraph wires, and I claim that it is a mistake in business judgment and a great mistake for us to consider here to-day a proposition which, if adopted, will add to the overhead or overground transportation. I know full well what that means, because I have seen these mail trucks bowl through the cities of New York and Philadelphia like cannon balls, and we know their drivers are somewhat in the position of that of our diplomats in Washington and their servants—immune to arrest or prosecution because of the violation of the motor-vehicle laws. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. OLNEY].

Mr. OLNEY. Mr. Chairman, while I am sorry to disagree with the opinion and the judgment of the able chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, it seems to me that if the usual full provisions are not made in this bill for the continuance of the pneumatic-tube service the efficiency of the Post Office Department will be considerably impaired. I, too, come from a so-called agriculture district. To be sure, ward 24 of Boston is in my district, but if my memory serves me correctly, the pneumatic-tube extension does not go into this part of Boston, so therefore I have no material interest in the continuance of this service, but there is one other thought I would like to inject into this debate which I have not heard mentioned during the time allotted, and that is the matter of conscience. It seems to me that as Congressmen and citizens we should consider our Government as the conscience of the Nation. For 10 or 15 years or more this service has been continued, and the Government has encouraged the existence of the pneumatic-tube companies in the various cities in which they exist. It is not a local proposition, is of national scope, and why should we vote it out and confiscate something which we have encouraged to exist. It is not a local question when we consider that five or six of the largest and most important cities of the Union use this system in a fairly efficient manner. Undoubtedly the report of the Post Office Department is true in that the tubes do occasionally clog; but from the evidence brought out here to-day it is said that 40 more automobiles would be required in the congested streets of Boston if the pneumatic-tube service were to be abolished, and all who have visited Boston realize that those streets are the old cow paths established long before Revolutionary times, now paved, to be sure, but narrow, crooked, and poorly adapted for surface traffic. I favor the adoption of this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OLNEY. Mr. Chairman, I would ask to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I have used up as much time as the gentleman from Tennessee said I could use——

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN], and at the expiration of that time I shall ask the Chair to give five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GALLAGHER].

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I have noticed through this debate no Member yet has attacked the Post Office Department's report and the report of this Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads showing it is to the best interest of the American people and the Post Office Department if this tube service be cut out. I stand for the economy recommended by the department in discontinuing this tube service. I stand by the committee. I shall oppose the amendment pending to put that tube service in force again. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] thought he was arguing when he called the Postmaster General a boss and tyrant simply because he is endeavoring to protect the taxpayers from the robbery of a powerful trust; and the gentleman further attempted to make fun of ex-Congressman Murray, who is now postmaster in Boston. It strikes me that if ex-Congressman Murray, the postmaster in the city of Boston, has discovered that he was in error as a Congressman in maintaining that the tube service was for the benefit of the people, and that now since he has gone through one year's service as postmaster he has realized that it is a useless expense and could be better handled by automobile trucks, he is to be commended. Instead of criticizing the Postmaster General we should applaud him in his efforts to establish efficiency and economy in his department. We should do more than that; this Congress should help him. In the testimony of the postmaster (Mr. Campbell) at the city of Chicago before the Post Office Committee he stated that already 206 automobile trucks, owned and operated by the Government, were in this service in the city of Chicago and only 20 more would need be put into operation to carry all the mail better than it now is under this tube service, and that the annual saving would be $140,000 at the lowest figure. There is a man who has been postmaster of that great city for more than 10 years and he knows what he is talking about, and you can take the city of Chicago as a typical American city. The people travel on the streets of Chicago as fast as they do in any other place in the United States; in fact, they go so rapidly that one from my section would think there must be a fire somewhere and all the people were rushing to it. If the postmaster of that densely populated city, where every person is in a hurry both on foot and in vehicles, testifies that the tube system is a failure and that automobiles could transmit the mails more expeditiously and save yearly at least $140,000 to the American taxpayers for inadequate services rendered by the tube company, certainly it would be practical for Boston or St. Louis or any other of these large cities in the country.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. QUIN. I can not; I have only five minutes and I can not yield. Further than that, we save, besides the fact of getting better service, a difference between what was appropriated for the fiscal year 1917, $976,000, and now for 1918, an actual saving there of $526,500. Is there any man who can go back on the Post Office Department and the expert evidence submitted by the Postmaster General, who can go back on this great committee, and say that he would overturn their decision to better the mail facilities in these five cities and at the same time save the Government more than half a million dollars every year on this one item, overturn all of this evidence, while we are facing a deficit of more than $300,000,000? What would your constituents think if they could know the real facts that confront us on this amendment? While you are pandering to this great army of postal employees, proposing to give them increases and advances, you propose to reject the proposition to save more than half a million dollars in five cities of this Republic—an annual saving, and giving a better service, according to the word of the experts who testified, than you are receiving now by this pneumatic-tube service that some say will not carry the mail any better than an ordinary wheelbarrow service would. This Pneumatic Tube Trust is gouging the public, and the Post Office Department knows it and simply asks us to put a stop to it. Will you aid the Postmaster General in his effort to keep the people from being robbed? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Chairman, this question of the pneumatic-tube service seems to be a very live question here to-day with certain Members, and it is surprising, to say the least, to notice the great interest that Members from other great cities in this country show toward the great cities using this tube service that they do not happen to represent, and they appear to be quite anxious to supply all of them with this pneumatic-tube service, when the Post Office Committee reports against it. Now, ordinarily we take the advice of the head of a department of this Government as to what is good or bad for his department. Generally speaking, we are advised by the head of a department as to what we ought to do regarding a certain matter affecting his department. But upon this question the Postmaster General does not appear to know what he is talking about, so it seems from the talk we hear upon this floor and what we read in the papers; nor does anybody who seems to oppose a continuation of this contract care to know what his opinions are about this service.

Now, I happened to get a clipping this morning from a paper published in New York, called the New York Commercial, of January 12, 1917, and it says here among other things:

Congressman GALLAGHER, of Chicago, leans upon the bosom of the postmaster, Campbell, who in turn seems to lean absolutely upon the bosom of Mr. Burleson.

Now, that is a very peculiar statement to make. I do not think that so far as I am concerned I am leaning on the bosom of anybody, nor do I believe Postmaster Campbell is anywhere near the bosom of the Postmaster General. I do not know of a man in the Postal Service in the United States who has a better reputation as a postmaster than the postmaster at Chicago. Mr. Campbell has served in that capacity possibly longer than any other postmaster who ever held that office in Chicago. He served under Roosevelt, he served under Taft, and he has served under the Wilson administration up to the present time, and it does not seem possible up to date that they can get along without him. Anybody who knows Mr. Campbell will not question his good judgment so far as the postal facilities or his interest in the postal services of Chicago are concerned. He is a painstaking official who knows his business. I think he knows about as much concerning this tube service for Chicago as anybody here. Now, Mr. Campbell said that this service, so far as Chicago is concerned, is of no particular value, and his first assistant superintendent also told me the same thing, and he is a man whose business it is to know regarding the mail service of Chicago. He said that the Post Office Committee of the House acted wisely in determining not to make an appropriation for the further use of these tubes. Now, I should judge that that was pretty good advice for a representative of the people to act upon. I do not think it is fair to set aside the advice of the postmaster of Chicago, the advice of the Postmaster General, and the action of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads here in the House without serious consideration.

Mr. TAGUE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GALLAGHER. Certainly.

Mr. TAGUE. Is the gentleman aware that in the Post Office Committee out of the 21 members there are 9 members of the majority who are not opposed to pneumatic tubes?

Mr. GALLAGHER. I do not know anything about how many members are opposed to them. I know the committee has made a report that the appropriation ought not to be made.

Mr. TAGUE. You know that five members have signed the dissenting report?

Mr. GALLAGHER. I know this much, that this House is advised by the head of a department of this Government. Take the case of the postmaster at Boston. He says the tubes are no good, and it is stated here that he has changed his mind since he became postmaster. There is nothing criminal about that. He knows and has learned something about the tubes and knows what he is talking about when making a statement, and I believe if we were to hear from Mr. Murray he could give a good account of himself and why he has reached the decision that these tubes are no good for Boston. Now, I have not positively made up my mind in regard to voting on this question. I thought by listening to the debate here that something would be developed that would convince me as to what I ought to do in regard to these tubes, as the people of Chicago are vitally interested in this question.

I have received a great many letters from associations and business men in Chicago asking me to vote to retain the tubes, and I would like very much to do as they request. I doubt whether they have given this matter thorough consideration, and I know they are not in a position to judge of the merits of the tube service the same as the postmaster and his assistants, who come in contact with it every day and therefore are able to judge concerning the efficiency of this service. Everybody in Congress knows how easy it is to work up a sentiment in favor of or in opposition to a proposition pending in the House, and quite often it is as easy to get men to write letters for and against a matter as it is to get up a petition for or against matters of concern that we are called upon to decide.

I dislike to vote to spend the money of the people upon a service in our Postal Department when the men at the head of that department, charged with responsibility of maintaining the best of service for the people, tell us that this service ought to be discontinued.

I am undecided up to the present time how I will vote on the question.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BLACKMON].

Mr. BLACKMON. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to say anything further in reference to pneumatic tubes, but it seems to me that an attempt is being made by some of those favoring the continuation and extension of the pneumatic-tube system to claim all the credit for the development of this country for the great cities that now have and enjoy the luxury of the pneumatic-tube service.

This is undoubtedly improper, and sheds no light on this question, neither is it calculated to aid a Member in determining what is the correct and proper thing for him to do.

These gentlemen say that the great cities where the tubes are being operated are furnishing the revenues of the Government. I am not from a city quite as large as Boston, New York, Philadelphia, St. Louis, or Chicago, but the fact that I am not does not prejudice me against the cities named, neither does it convince me that the Government is justified, or even excused, for this reckless waste of the country's money, even though it should be conceded that all of our revenues are derived from the cities named, as these gentlemen seem to think, but which is not by any means true.

These cities are just as much dependent upon other parts of the United States as the United States is dependent upon them. Were it not, Mr. Chairman, for the agricultural, mining, and manufacturing interests of this country, the cities now enjoying the use of the 8-inch pneumatic tube, at a cost of $17,000 per mile per annum, would not be concerned about the rapid transit of mail.

For myself I am tired of this continued effort when questions of this kind arise for certain gentlemen to ridicule every proposition that is not proposed by them.

There has been an attempt made to ridicule a certain member of the Post Office Committee, because he was not familiar with The Bronx, in New York. I am not the member of the committee whom the gentleman ridiculed for his lack of information on this subject, and am unable to see its relevancy to the great question which we are now undertaking to determine.

It is true that a great many gentlemen on the floor have been much amused, apparently, at the ridicule of this Member, whoever he may be. I take it that every member of the Post Office Committee of the House, and indeed every Member of this body, is interested in doing the right thing, without regard to whether this member of the committee is or is not familiar with The Bronx.

One of the members of the Post Office and Post Roads Committee of the House is a Member of Congress from Boston. He is very much interested in seeing the pneumatic tubes continued. He was active before the committee, and is still active in the fight that is now going on, but I have not a shadow of a doubt but what he is acting conscientiously and from the best and sincerest motives. I am not willing to undertake to ridicule him, because he is not familiar with "Weogufka," or "Arbacoochee," Ala.

Again, I think that the criticism of Postmaster Murray, of Boston, who was once a Member of this House, is unjust, unwarranted, and uncalled for, and sheds not the slightest light upon the subject we are being called upon to determine.

Postmaster Murray, as a Member of Congress, perhaps was in favor of the pneumatic-tube service as a citizen of Boston. Members of this body now representing the city of Boston are acting honestly in defending the continuance of this service, but the difference is, they have not held the position of postmaster at Boston, and have not had the experience with the pneumatic-tube service as has Mr. Murray. If they had, and should be called upon to testify as to whether or not the continuation of this service was justifiable, they, like Mr. Murray, honorable gentlemen that they are, might say just as Mr. Murray has said, that it is not justified and ought not to be continued.

I say it is to Mr. Murray's credit that, while acting for the Federal Government as postmaster he discovered that the use of the tubes was not justified and that we were spending money unnecessarily for a service that was unwarranted, he had the manhood and the courage, even though living in the city of Boston, to tell the committee and the public the truth as he saw it—the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. I say the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, because all the testimony taken by every Government commission and the facts demonstrated by every test that has been made bears out Mr. Murray's statement.

Not only does Mr. Murray, the postmaster, if you please, of the city of Boston, say this, but Mr. Campbell, the postmaster at Chicago, where the tube is operated, and who, I am told, is one of the best postmasters in the country—this information I get alike from both Republicans and Democrats—says that the use of the tube is not justified or warranted in the city of Chicago.

Does it not come with poor grace for Members of Congress, who have the exclusive privileges of the floor, to criticize Mr. Murray in the way he has been criticized here, simply because he dared tell the truth as he saw it?

A good deal has been said here about Members of Congress getting into disrepute. It is said that Mr. Lawson has no respect for Members of Congress. As far as I am concerned, I do not care one snap of my finger what Mr. Lawson or anyone else may say about Congress, collectively or individually.

I contend that the people who have selected the membership of this body as a rule have shown that they were capable of exercising their right and have selected honest men, Mr. Lawson to the contrary notwithstanding.

I fear that we are too prone to become frightened at the statements of the assassins of character throughout the country.

Mr. Lawson will find it hard to make the people believe that President Wilson, his Cabinet officers, Congress, and others connected with the Government are dishonest or for a moment would do that which they should not do in order that they might obtain financial preferment.

If Mr. Wilson is to be deterred in his noble effort to secure peace and end the great slaughter of human lives that is now going on simply because the Wall Street speculators may fleece one another when information of his great and noble efforts are obtained, whether it be in advance of its publication or when it is made public by him, as it necessarily must be, then I say let the fleecing proceed.

I am for honorable peace, and if Mr. Wilson can bring it about in an honorable way—and he will undertake it in no other way—I say, "All hail to President Wilson."

I will not say what I think of Mr. Lawson and his fellow speculators in Wall Street, if they are responsible for the destruction of legitimate property under the guise that advance information had been obtained that President Wilson was seeking to secure peace, and in the event of success values would naturally fall.

If the speculators of this country have such a hold on the legitimate business life of the country that they can produce panics and destroy legitimate values simply because the President of the United States is undertaking to bring about peace, the fault is with Mr. Lawson and his crowd and not with the Executive or with Congress.

If Members of Congress are getting into disrepute in the eyes of the fair-minded people of this country it is because they have not opinions of their own and are undertaking to get on what appears to be the popular side of every question without regard to consequences. No honest man or newspaper is willing to criticize one for doing what he honestly believes is right. Too often, I fear, we allow our opinions to be formed from what seems from the press and other sources to be the popular side of a given question. Would it not be better to devote the time we spend in doing this to a real study of the facts in each given case, and when we have reached the conclusion honestly that we are right, then defend it regardless of what our critics may say?

Getting back to the point under consideration, if you believe the business interests of this country are going to be destroyed by a discontinuance of the pneumatic-tube service, and you have reached this conclusion from a study of the facts and the testimony submitted to you, then by all means vote for the pending amendment. But, on the contrary, if the facts submitted show you that the service is not warranted, then vote to sustain the action of the committee, which carries out the recommendation of the Post Office Department, a department that I say has demonstrated it is actuated only by what is for the good of the service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. BLACKMON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHANDLER] one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for one minute.

[Mr. CHANDLER of New York addressed the committe. See Appendix.]

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROWE] five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. ROWE] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. ROWE. Mr. Chairman, Brooklyn has a population, according to the last census, of 1,800,000 inhabitants. No other city of that size in the Union has so small and insignificant a use of the pneumatic tubes. All told, even counting in the service in Manhattan, it has 3 miles, but almost 1 mile of that is in the old city of New York.

Now it is proposed to take away more than a mile of that service which we have in Brooklyn. Brooklyn has not looked out for its interests in the past, or it would have to-day what two or three other cities have—more than 30 miles of tube service. We are at the present time in great need in Brooklyn of a proper service. We have not the proper delivery service either, because the delivery service is arranged on the basis of the receipts from the sale of stamps, and many of our large manufacturers have offices in New York, with factories in Brooklyn, and they buy their postage at the New York post office instead of at the Brooklyn post office.

Now, gentlemen, I have felt all through this discussion that the people of our large cities have supported the country districts in rural free delivery, the loss on which is more than $40,000,000 a year, while the amount to be saved by giving up the mail tubes is less than $500,000.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROWE. No; I have not the time.

We ask you of the country districts who are benefited by rural free delivery and parcel post to stand by the cities and see that they get this proper transportation of the mails, and as rapidly as possible. It affects you as much or more than it does the people of the cities. It is the delivery of our business mail, the mail that should be delivered rapidly. It is the mail that comes from the country districts into our railway stations in New York and Chicago and Philadelphia and Boston and St. Louis that should reach at the greatest possible speed the persons to whom it has been sent. You want it delivered quickly. We of the cities to whom it is sent want your mail as soon as it can reach us, and we want also to be able to answer it for you as soon as possible. [Applause.]

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, how much time did the gentleman consume?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has used four and one-half minutes. He has one-half a minute remaining.

Mr. STEENERSON. He yields back that one-half minute. Now I yield two and one-half minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] is recognized for two and one-half minutes.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, if this amendment is adopted it will continue the existing service and give a slight necessary extension in the city of New York.

Personally I have always believed that the mail service was one service, and therefore I have voted for the free rural delivery and for the village delivery and for everything that the country and the city wanted. I do not see how you can differentiate between localities. I think all parts of the country are entitled to the best service they can get. We need this service in New York, and, without costing more money for additional automobiles than the tube costs, we could not get by automobile the same service that is given by the tubes.

We have a postmaster in the city of New York—Mr. Morgan—who has been in the Postal Service for 45 years. He rose from the position of mail carrier to that of postmaster. Here is what he says:

> Mr. MORGAN. If you are going to do away with the tube service in New York City and use the automobiles now in use to carry this first-class mail matter, you might as well go back to the old horse and wagon.

That is the whole question. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. STEENERSON. How much time did the gentleman use?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman consumed one minute and a half and yields back one minute.

Mr. STEENERSON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE].

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, the statement has been made that the stockholders in this enterprise have something coming from the Government. I do not believe they have any legal or moral claim upon the Government to an extension of this service. My interest in this matter is at the unanimous request of the business men of St. Louis, who want this service. I looked into the matter when these petitions came to me, and at the earliest date practicable secured the report of this commission, and I find that this commission based its recommendation for the discontinuance of the service in St. Louis upon two propositions. The first one was that there was no surface congestion in St. Louis. Now, anybody who has ever been there knows that that is not true, knows that there is congestion in St. Louis, and the very report upon which the commission bases its recommendation shows that in one of the tests made the automobile that made the test for the Post Office Department, according to the note attached, was delayed because of congestion in the downtown district.

The second proposition is that the service can be rendered as efficiently and at less expense than by the tube service if they are permitted to substitute automobiles. I only know what is in this report of the commission, and if they based their recommendation upon the evidence in this report, I can not see how they arrive at that conclusion. The only evidence in that report is of a test made and a letter from the postmaster of the city of St. Louis. Now, the postmaster of the city of St. Louis has been in office from September, 1913, and on the 7th of December, 1915, he wrote a letter to this commission. I want to read a part of it and to ask you whether on that statement the commission could recommend the discontinuance of that service. He said:

> As stated in the communication above referred to, 75 per cent of the mails now transported by pneumatic tubes in St. Louis could probably be satisfactorily handled by surface transportation, with no delay in dispatch or delivery, but treatment of the balance, which includes important eastern mails for delivery in the down-town or business section, as well as dispatches of similar matter, made on close connections after deposit in territory contiguous to the tubes, would be seriously impaired.

Then he further says:

> The conditions described are attributable to arrival time of eastern trains, which in the morning are too late for delivery before afternoon if subjected to any delay whatever.

And further he says:

> Service conditions in St. Louis differ from those of any other city in the country, in that the main post office is located at Eighteenth and Walnut Streets, while the business of the financial section is conducted in the Federal building, at Eighth and Olive Streets, nearly a mile away. The tube is a great convenience to us on this account, as it permits of continuous and speedy connection between the executive division and the financial section, impossible of substitution by transportation of any other character.

That is the letter of the postmaster of the city of St. Louis. That is the only evidence I have. I did not make any tests. Tests have been made; but I will say that the mayor of the city of St. Louis, the Merchants' Exchange of the city of St. Louis, the Business Men's League of the city of St. Louis, and all of the civic organizations of that city have asked that this tube service be retained.

I know that it has been stated by the Postmaster General in his report that various people might be instigated to come and plead for this thing before Congress. I want to submit that there is no special interest that could get all of these business associations and all of these men to come to Congress for any ulterior purpose. These business men want this service. The postmaster of that city recommended it, and, although I understand he has since given out an interview in which, to be frank with the House, he says that the automobiles can render the service, I want to say that in that interview he also stated that since that letter was written the Government automobile service was instituted in St. Louis. That service was instituted before this letter was written, and in the report that he made to the commission he referred to automobile trucks and automobile transportation as a substitute for this pneumatic-tube service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to insert as a part of my remarks an editorial from the St. Louis Post-Dispatch on this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The editorial referred to is as follows:

CUTTING DOWN MAIL SERVICE.

In the report of the committee of the Federal Post Office Department on pneumatic-tube mail service we find several remarkable statements with regard to the mail service in St. Louis. The report quotes Postmaster Selph as expressing his willingness to abandon the service if the department thinks it best and "to develop other means of transportation to meet all demands."

The committee then, without further quotation from the St. Louis postmaster's letters, which are included in the report, expresses the flat opinion "that no material advantage results from the use of the pneumatic-tube service in St. Louis." It makes the additional extraordinary statement that "there is little or no surface congestion in St. Louis and an automobile or other conveyance is able to travel rapidly." It puts the difference of time between an automobile and the tube from the general post office to the Central Station at about seven minutes and from the Central Station to the Bridge Station at three and five-sixths minutes. No allowance is made for uncertainty of the automobile time on account of congestion, weather, or disability, none of which affect the tube service.

In the report is a letter from Postmaster Selph directly contradicting the conclusion of the committee. If his opinion is worth anything as to the value of the pneumatic-tube service, it completely nullifies the committee's opinion and reverses its conclusion. Mr. Selph wrote:

"As stated in communication above referred to, 75 per cent of the mails now transported by pneumatic tubes in St. Louis could probably be handled satisfactorily by surface transportation, with no delay in dispatch or delivery, but treatment of the balance, which includes important eastern mails for delivery in the downtown or business section, as well as dispatches of similar matter, made on close connection after deposit in territory contiguous to the tubes, would be seriously impaired, for we are now working under a particularly close schedule, attributable in a large measure to the 8 in 10 hour law, and if obliged to consume extra time, consequential to necessary sacking and trucking to the mailing platform for surface transportation, schedules as regards the downtown section would of necessity, in a number of instances, be subjected to changes bordering on nullification, and mails to the extent referred to delayed several hours in delivery.

"The conditions referred to are attributable to arrival time of eastern trains, which in the morning are too late for delivery before afternoon if subjected to any delay whatever, and those in the afternoon will have to be held until the following morning on account of our inability to delay carriers' leaving time and maintain the 8 in 10 hour law.

"Service conditions in St. Louis differ from those of any other city in the country, in that the main post office is located at Eighteenth and Walnut Streets, while the business of the financial sections is conducted in the Federal Building at Eighth and Olive Streets, nearly a mile away. The tube is a great convenience to us on this account, as it permits of continuous and speedy connection between the executive division and the financial section, impossible of substitution by transportation of any other character.

"Reasons herein mentioned, together with probability of congestion attributable to climatic conditions upon occasions inevitable in connection with surface transportations, present the principal argument favoring continuance of the tube service at St. Louis, if its continuance is possible at a cost commensurate with advantages to be derived therefrom."

Is the impairment of service on 25 per cent of tube mails, including "important eastern mails for delivery in the downtown or business section as well as dispatches of similar matter made on close connection in territory contiguous to the tubes" of little importance to St. Louis business? This 25 per cent is the most important. It is impossible to measure its value to business men. It may and probably does involve enormous business transactions.

If the testimony of other postmasters and mail conditions in cities threatened with a discontinuance of tube service are ignored or misrepresented as in the case of St. Louis, the report of the department committee is not worth the ink and paper it consumed.

We judge that this is so by the general protest of the business men of the threatened cities. The mouths of postmasters have been closed, but the business men are vociferous in opposition to the abolition of the tube service.

Postmaster General Burleson seems to have made up his mind in advance that he will economize at the expense of the large cities regardless of consequences to quick mail service. He wants to save on the cities to serve the rural districts, and is willing to go backward to accomplish his purpose. But Congress ought not to ignore the needs of the great business centers which serve the people of the rural districts.

Mr. STEENERSON. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I have not very much to add to this debate with regard to pneumatic-tube service except one thing. My home is not in New York City, nor in any of the other big cities that are directly interested in this matter, but I am interested, and my constituents are interested, in getting mail through New York City, and in the prompt delivery of mail in the city. I know it is a matter of interest to the country at large, to the agricultural sections as well as others, that mail should get through the big cities promptly. They are clearing houses. We have had more complaint about mail getting clogged up in New York City than in any other source of delay. When we have put a tracer on something that got lost or that did not come through promptly, we have usually found that it got delayed in New York City, and I believe every facility for getting mail transported from place to place, in New York and other large cities, ought to be used, not only in the interest of the business men of those cities themselves, but in the interest of the people at large. Not only do the people in those large cities want their mail promptly, but the people of the whole country want the mail to go as quickly as possible through those cities, so that it may reach the points to which it is directed.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman used one minute, and yields back one minute.

Mr. STEENERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] eight minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] is recognized for eight minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the great question involved here is not as between the city and the country, because our interests are identical in this pneumatic-tube matter. The question is one of principle, whether having encouraged men to engage in business, to establish an enterprise, we should then confiscate their property. It makes no difference whether we are paying $17,000 per mile per annum or not. These people have made an investment with the encouragement of the Government of the United States, and have kept that property in order to serve the Government for 23 years. They have been given no option to adjust rates, even if the rentals could be shown to be too high. Ruthlessly, and without an opportunity for them to revise rentals or in any way utilize their property, we are asked to close down upon them and take away that which they have invested in good faith for the benefit and service of the people in the country, as well as the people in the city. I am not making an appeal to the men in the country, because it is a city proposition; it is as much a country proposition as it is a city proposition. If the pneumatic tubes are dispensed with and the mails are delayed, the interests affected will not be wholly within the city, but upon the farm as well.

Great stress has been laid on the fact that a commission appointed by the present Postmaster General has reported against these tubes. That the present Postmaster General, having his mind made up on this subject, should obtain a favorable report from a commission made up of his own employees is not surprising. I do not think any commission appointed by him under these circumstances would dare to bring in any other kind of a report than that which the Postmaster General desired to have brought in, but it should not be forgotten that all previous reports were favorable to the service, and there were three of them.

The gentleman from Tennessee, in discussing his point of order a little while ago, made reference to the fact that this green book—the Burleson commission report—the report of the commission appointed by the Postmaster General, was in compliance with the law, and that the recommendation made by the commission was made because the law warranted the making of this report. There is a difference of opinion among the lawyers of the House as to that, but I now ask the gentleman from Tennessee, who stands with the Postmaster General upon this question, whether he still relies upon the accuracy of this report as being sufficient in law or in fact to warrant the destruction of private property in the manner in which the Postmaster General now proposes to do it. If he does, I cite the evidence of the representative trade bodies and business men of my city, who have made tests themselves, controverting not only the statements of fact, but the findings of this commission appointed by the Postmaster General from his own subordinates. I challenge the gentleman from Tennessee——

Mr. MOON. What does the gentleman challenge me about?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Oh, not to fight. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOON. I thought the gentleman would not do it to fight, but what is he talking about?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would not challenge the gentleman to fight, except legislatively. I love him too well. I challenge the gentleman from Tennessee to repeat that he stands on the law as it is presented in this report recommending the destruction of the tube service.

Mr. MOON. I stand upon the law as presented in the statutes?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman held the green book in his hand and said it was in accordance with the law.

Mr. MOON. I read from the statutes this morning, the whole statutes together, and that is an extract from the statutes, and is correct so far as it goes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask if the Postmaster General had legal warrant for appointing the commission and accepting the report and finding of the commission as sufficient in law to destroy the pneumatic tubes. I have challenged the gentleman to stand on the law referred to in this report.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman need not challenge me to stand on the law, I stand on the law always.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am challenging the gentleman in a legislative way.

Mr. MOON. I am standing on the law in a legislative way and every other way.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Well, then I challenge the gentleman to advise the House as to what law this commission acted upon. It seems to have based its authority upon the "act approved June 30, 1903." I ask the gentleman who stands with the Postmaster General on this green-backed report, received by Members after the hearings were all over, to read the authority upon which the lawyers of the Postal Department base their case. It says:

Report of the committee of the Post Office Department, appointed by the Postmaster General, preliminary to the consideration of the issuance of an advertisement for carrying the mails by pneumatic tubes for the contract term commencing July 1, 1916, in pursuance of "the act approved June 30, 1903."

That sounds all right but, like the contents of the report, it is hasty and inaccurate.

Congress was not in session June 30, 1903. There is no act of June 30, 1903, and if the gentleman from Tennessee stands on the law as presented by his own commission, he is standing on no law at all, for it does not exist. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOON. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has been told two or three times—I don't know whether he understands it or not—that the gentleman from Tennessee stands on all the statutes on the pneumatic-tube subject.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does he stand on "the act of June 30, 1903," on which the commission acted?

Mr. MOON. I do not know whether it is the proper date or not, and I do not care.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We have challenged the accuracy of the report of the commission which the gentleman presents to the House and which destroys millions of dollars' worth of property. Now, we challenge the authority under which it acted. I am not a lawyer, but the gentleman from Tennessee is an able lawyer. Will the gentleman stand on "the act of June 30, 1903"?

Mr. MOON. The gentleman from Pennsylvania ought to know that if there was an error in the date as to the act incorporated in the report that it would not affect the law, and it is nonsense to ask a man if he stands on a proposition where a date may be changed by the printer or some one else.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Tennessee is too good a lawyer to stand on a law that does not exist, and he does not stand upon it. But this shows how carelessly the report was made up. We did not get this report until the hearings had been had, and our business men were not given a fair chance to combat it.

Mr. MOON. Does the gentleman think he knows anything about it now? I do not think he does.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am satisfied that "the act of June 30, 1903," under which this select commission said it was acting, does not exist. There is no such act, therefore the status of the commission is somewhat impaired. I do not know whether the gentleman from Tennessee is going to stop because I have driven him into a corner. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOON. Which corner am I in?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Why, the gentleman is in the corner of "the outs" just now.

Mr. MOON. We will see about that later on.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I hope the gentleman may find the law somewhere.

Mr. MOON. I can tell the gentleman now that if he does not know the law he and his city will find it to be the law that unless this Congress passes some other act you will never have another pneumatic tube.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But this commission, whose report was received after the hearings were over, evidently does not know the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in my talk on Thursday I tried to present the attitude of Philadelphia business men on this tube question. We are challenged by the tube destroyers to bring in our evidence, but the time limit is on and we can not get the evidence in.

Let me say, however, that the tubes were introduced before the parcel post encumbered the mails with farm products and household furniture. They were never intended to carry anything but first-class mail, and that they do in a manner satisfactory to those who are competent to speak. In the extension of my remarks on Thursday I produced statements showing the great value of this first-class mail-tube service to the farmers who do business with Philadelphia merchants and to the banks in all parts of the United States doing business which is cleared at Philadelphia. I also produced evidence of the congestion upon our highways. All those matters are material in a great city. They ought to have weight with the House, and I hope they will.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, this proposition is one simply that Congress shall authorize the Postmaster General to continue this service if, in his judgment, he finds that the report which he has presented to this House is erroneous and that the service ought to be continued. In other words, if we fail to appropriate the money provided for in this amendment, then, of course, the service will be discontinued, because there will be no funds for it; but if we appropriate the money as provided for in the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TAGUE], then the Postmaster General can continue the pneumatic-tube service if he finds later that it ought to be done; and if he has discontinued the pneumatic-tube service and resorted to automobiles for all the service now carried on by pneumatic tubes, he may not only, as he will, find that he is mistaken, but he may also find that the complaints of the people in the cities, and of the country, too, are so great over the discontinuance of this excellent service of the pneumatic tubes that it is his duty as a public official and in charge of a great department of the Government to again contract for and put into use the pneumatic-tube service. But if you gentlemen should refuse to give to him this appropriation, he can not do it even if he finds the country and the business interests of the country are suffering by reason of it. So I appeal to you upon that phase to vote for this appropriation. No harm can come from it if the service is not wanted. Even if the service can be performed by the automobiles, no harm can come through voting this appropriation under the circumstances; but all of the evidence that has been presented, so far as I am acquainted with the situation in my own city, is that the service is absolutely necessary for the proper transaction of the business between the city and the country at large.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, Chicago is one of the cities in which the pneumatic-tube service is now used, and the people of Chicago seem to be unanimous in favor of the continuation of that service. The postmaster of Chicago says that we can get along without it and save money. The people do not agree with the postmaster, and, as I speak for the people, I am in favor of continuing the tube service. So I favor the appropriation proposed in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TAGUE]. In favoring this amendment, I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that I believe more money is paid per mile per annum for the use of the pneumatic tubes than ought to be charged, and I believe the Postmaster General ought to have the power, the discretion, to negotiate for better rates. While the people of Chicago are unanimous in their demand for a continuation of this service, there is no man in Chicago who would say to me that we ought to pay an exorbitant price for the service. Everyone in Chicago knows that if he did say it I would not yield to his demand, if I believed the price paid to be unjust. We are paying $17,000 a mile for the pneumatic-tube service. I believe the service is worth about $10,000 per mile per annum, and I believe the Postmaster General can get the service for $10,000 per mile per annum if he is permitted to use the discretion which he ought to have the right to use in the perfection of an ordinary business transaction. If we grant the appropriation which I favor, I hope the Postmaster General will exercise his discretion to get the kind of rate per mile for the use of the tube service if it is used that any other business man would exact if the transaction were between two business men instead of between the Government of the United States and an outsider. The evidence before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads in the hearings upon the pneumatic-tube service disclosed the fact that the average gross earnings per annum are about 26 per cent, and the representatives of the tube companies said that they paid about $8,500 a year for expenses per mile. That is exactly one-half of what they receive. If they pay $8,500 per annum per mile for expenses, and they are paid $17,000 per annum per mile for the service, and $17,000 per annum per mile represents 26 per cent gross, what is left after the expenditure of $8,500 per annum per mile would be 13 per cent net.

They said in response to inquiry that they only made 1½ per cent on their investment, and they did not reply to the question which I asked as to what became of the difference between the 1½ per cent and the 13 per cent that I maintain they make. I believe the Government ought to get this service upon the basis of 6 per cent net, and if it does it will get the service for not more than $10,000 per mile per annum. Therefore I favor the extension of the tube service, but I am in favor of the retention and continuance along decent business lines and with due regard for the economic expenditure of public money. I want to add just one word more, and that is that if the appropriation is made the Postmaster General will have the discretion to negotiate for the kind of rate that ought to obtain.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TAGUE].

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I also yield two minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, after all the debate that has gone on upon this great question now before the House I want to say that, so far as I am concerned, I agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] that it is the duty of the Government to get the best contract it can, and in keeping with that suggestion I asked the representatives of the two companies whether or not they were ready to submit a price to the Government that was fair.

In reply to that request they have told me they are ready at any time to submit the books of their companies to any fair-minded commission and upon their report are ready to rest their case on the decision of that commission. Now, Mr. Chairman, I made the statement yesterday that the money to be expended in the appropriation previous to the one we are now acting upon was to be used for automobiles in place of the pneumatic service. As my colleague upon this floor said to-day, we were apprised of the fact yesterday that the Government officials, notwithstanding this House which appropriates the money has not yet had an opportunity to pass upon it, the representatives of the Postmaster General, are in my district at this time making arrangements for the purchase of automobiles and for the housing of automobiles, not knowing whether or not we are going to appropriate this money and not knowing whether they are going to get the appropriation for the automobile service.

Mr. Chairman, if we are to take the figures submitted to you by the committee that is now working in Boston, and we are going to get 40 automobiles in the city of Boston this year, then I, in the name of the city of Boston, protest against those automobiles going now upon our crowded thoroughfares. And let me say this question of economy is all bosh. Four hundred thousand dollars for new automobiles, $100,000 for airships, $500,000 taken from the pneumatic-tube service appropriation, and what is the result? Forty automobiles in the city of Boston! Mr. Chairman, during the debate last year the gentleman from Chicago [Mr. MADDEN] made a speech upon this same subject, and being a business man, one familiar with this question of automobiles and automobile trucks, he made a statement which I think is correct, that it would cost $3,000 a year for the upkeep and maintenance of an automobile in a city, and if that is so these 40 automobiles are going to cost in my city alone $120,000 for the maintenance and upkeep, while this appropriation for pneumatic tubes for the city of Boston is $115,000. Then, again, we are going to purchase some more automobiles. I do not know whether they are going to be purchased under specifications, which is going to give the privilege to any one automobile manufacturing concern as against all the other automobile concerns of this country or not. [Applause.] But at the figures stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], 40 automobiles, at $1,975, is $79,000, making a total of $199,000 for this year for automobiles in the city of Boston. Where is the economy? The defiant manner in which the Postmaster General is going ahead on this matter is in keeping with his previous actions. Ignoring this House and trying by his power in post-office appointments to compel Members to vote as he says and not as they would like to.

I can readily understand why some Members will vote against this amendment, not because they do not believe in it, but because they are obliged to seek favors for their constituents at his hands.

He complains of an insidious lobby, but I want to say here that I have never seen such an exhibition of lobbying in my limited experience as I have seen in this House since this question has been before us. Never have I seen such an utter disregard for the rights of Members of this House as has been shown by the Postmaster General. His word must be law, but I refuse to be led by any such conditions. I am seeking no favor from him, and I hope I never will be obliged to. His actions on this question, and on the question of rural delivery, which have caused so much uneasiness among my fellow Members, who have suffered from his unfair treatment, I regard as the cause of the defeat of many good Democrats. I believe that at this time this House should show that they are able to judge this and other questions for themselves. I am inserting with my remarks a letter from his honor the mayor of Boston, who asks that the tubes be retained:

BOSTON, January 11, 1917.

Hon. PETER F. TAGUE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: The business men of Boston are practically unanimous in the opinion that the best interests of the Postal Service require the retention and use of the pneumatic-tube service now in operation.

The streets of our city have never been of sufficient width to properly accommodate teaming and passenger traffic and to further encumber them by vehicles engaged in the collection or delivery of mail would work great injury.

During the three years that I have served as mayor I have not received a single complaint relative to delay in local mail delivery, and I am strongly of the opinion that a change in system would result in continuous complaint.

I sincerely trust that you will be successful in your efforts to persuade the postal authorities that it is the consensus of opinion among the business men of Boston that the present satisfactory system should be permitted to continue in operation.

Respectfully, JAMES M. CURLEY, Mayor.

I also wish to insert the clippings from Boston papers of January 12, 1917—Globe, Herald, and Post:

KEEP TUBE FIGHT OPEN—TAGUE AIDS IN BLOCKING ATTEMPT TO LIMIT DEBATE IN HOUSE ON POST OFFICE BILL.

WASHINGTON, January 9.

After an hour's argument by Representative TAGUE and Representative CONRY, of New York, Chairman MOON, of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads failed to get a rule to limit general debate on the Post Office appropriation bill and so to make possible the jamming through of Postmaster General Burleson's plan to abolish the pneumatic-tube mail service in Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, and the greater part of New York City.

Mr. TAGUE, who is leading the fight in the House against abolition of the tubes, based his argument on allegations that the report of the Burleson Investigating Committee, on which the Postmaster General reached his decision to abolish the tubes, was inaccurate and unreliable.

"I do not believe the gentlemen who investigated were disinterested," said Mr. TAGUE.

POSTAL AUTHORITIES PLAN MOTOR SERVICE—APPARENTLY CONFIDENT THAT PNEUMATIC TUBES ARE TO BE ABANDONED.

Although Congressman TAGUE and others are carrying on a fight on the floor of Congress for the retention of the pneumatic-tube service in this city and other large cities, the Post Office Department evidently feels certain of victory in its efforts to abolish the tubes and substitute automobiles.

So certain of success do the postal authorities feel that two inspectors from the office of First Assistant Postmaster General Koons are now in Boston looking over the situation with a view of installing the motor system. The inspectors here are Charles P. Stearns and I. O. Keen. It appears that the department is going right ahead with its motor proposition regardless of the action of Congress on the tube question.

If the comprehensive plan under consideration is carried out there will be no contract system of transporting mail between stations, as at present. The Government will own and operate its own motors. There will probably be 40 or 50 machines in the service, with a Government garage in which to house them. There are at present about 30 wagons and 11 motor trucks in use, all under the contract system. Their work is confined to the city proper, but it is probable that outlying stations like Quincy, Brookline, Newton, and others now served by trains will get their mail by automobile under the proposed plan.

Already schedules for the automobile service have been arranged and the inspectors are going over these. They will probably remain in town for about two weeks and in that time hope to get a pretty thorough knowledge of Boston's complicated postal district with its more than 80 stations.

No date has been set for the starting of this motor mail service. In fact, the money for purchasing the many machines needed for the work has not yet been appropriated. All the plans are being made, however, and this seems to indicate supreme confidence on the part of the department that its plan will be authorized and financed.

WILL NEED 40 AUTOS—FEDERAL POSTAL INSPECTORS ESTIMATE LOCAL NEEDS IF THE PNEUMATIC SERVICE IS ABANDONED.

About 40 motor vehicles will probably be needed for local transportation of the mails after the abandonment of the pneumatic-tube service, according to Charles P. Stearns and I. O. Keen, post office inspectors from Washington, who are in Boston checking up the plans of Postmaster Murray.

It is understood that the department favors the postmaster's scheme to have the Government assume the work of local transportation now performed by contractors. There appears to be a disposition to go ahead with the new plans, regardless of the possible action of Congress in the matter of public protests against the discontinuance of the tube service.

There are now about 30 wagons and 11 auto trucks used in the Boston district. If the present plan of having only auto service for mail transportation is carried out a Government garage will be needed, with a capacity of about 50 cars, and the contractors will go out of business.

Postmaster Murray believes the change will give additional speed in handling the mails and that service will cost less than it has and that the service will particularly benefit cities like Cambridge, Malden, Everett, and Quincy. The visiting inspectors will remain in Boston two weeks longer, familiarizing themselves with the local plans. Just when the new system will be adopted has not yet been settled.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think it would be unfortunate to abandon the pneumatic-tube service upon any investigation or report that we have had up to date. I have been impressed by the report of the Postmaster General containing the report of his investigating committee, and I want to cite just one instance of that report. On page 24 of that report is this statement:

It has also been demonstrated that an automobile can deliver the mail from the general post office to the Stock Yards Station in 17 minutes, while for any appreciable quantity of mail it requires 21 minutes by tubes.

Now, this is in Chicago, and the comparison is made here between 17 minutes by automobile and the admitted 21 minutes by tubes. There is an immense amount of mail that comes to Chicago of vital interest to the stock raisers of the country that goes to the stockyards in connection with daily consignments of stock. The eastern mail is taken off at Englewood; the mail coming over the Rock Island road is taken off at Englewood. All the rest of the western and southern mail goes to the post-office building downtown. Now, when you say you can take an automobile in 17 minutes from the post-office building to the Stock Yards Station and compare that with 21 minutes by tube, all I need to do is to say to you that the Stock Yard Station is more than 5 miles from the post-office building downtown, and the man does not live who can take an automobile through the congested districts of Chicago 5 miles in 17 minutes, nor twice 17 minutes, nor three times 17 minutes. That is an example of the testimony. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I made a minority report, in which, among other things, I stated I disagreed with the majority reducing the appropriation for pneumatic-tube service. The transportation of the mail is an administrative function. The appropriation of the funds with which to carry on this service is a legislative function. I do not think that the Congress ought to be called upon to determine whether or not this pneumatic-tube service should be continued. I think that is properly a matter which rests upon the executive branch of the Government. I know that for many years, under both Republican and Democratic administrations, it has been the custom for the administrative branch of the Government, whenever they had anything unpleasant to do, to try to shoulder it on the legislative branch, and therefore they will ask for a very small appropriation, and when it comes to administering that service they will say, "We can not give you this service because Congress refused or neglected to appropriate the money," and that is what is going to be done in the pneumatic-tube matter. If we do not increase this appropriation, they will throw the blame upon Congress and say, "Why, Congress did not provide the means, and therefore we can not give the service." Therefore I say, in fairness to Congress and to the executive branch of the Government, let us make the appropriation, and if the executive branch of the Government should demonstrate that it does not desire to spend it, the responsibility rests upon it for failing to supply this service. [Applause.] The Postmaster General can not then come back and say, "Here, I would have been glad to have given you any kind of service, provided Congress would have given me the money." The idea has been to shift the responsibility, which I do not think is proper, on Congress, and I do not favor it, and I do not believe we should vote so here. We should appropriate this money and place the responsibility where it belongs, upon the executive branch of the Government. Let them refuse and fly in the face of public opinion of Philadelphia, New York, St. Louis, Boston, and Chicago, if they so desire. That is my position, and I hope everyone will vote to increase this appropriation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota is exhausted. The gentleman from Tennessee has some time remaining.

Mr. MOON. How much time have I?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 26 minutes remaining?

Mr. MOON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HULBERT].

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, most of the discussion that has been had upon this question has been predicated upon the theory that no curtailment of the pneumatic-tube service in the city of New York is contemplated. That is, according to my understanding, erroneous.

The service in New York at the present time consists of approximately 27 miles of double 8-inch tubing, and there are transmitted through such tubes about 80,000 pneumatic-tube carriers daily between 4 a. m. and 11 p. m., by which means 5,000,000 pieces of first-class mail matter are disposed of.

Each carrier has a capacity of about 450 ordinary-sized letters or about 250 large-size letters, which are dispatched every 10 or 15 seconds, or at the rate of 6 and 4 per minute, respectively, and travel at a speed of 30 miles per hour.

The tube company installs and operates the system, for which the Government pays a rental of $17,000 per mile per annum.

There is a line in operation from the general post office in New York across the old bridge to the general post office, Brooklyn, and thence to Station L of the latter office, which is situated in the depot of the Long Island Division of the Pennsylvania Railroad at Flatbush Avenue. It is proposed to abolish this extension from the general post office, Brooklyn, to Station L.

Another line is in operation between the general post office, New York, and Hudson Terminal, and another from the general post office to Wall Street Station, to Station P in the customhouse. While these lines are very short, they accommodate the financial, banking, and shipping interests of the lower section of the city.

Another line is in operation on the west side of the city connecting the general post office and Stations V, at West Broadway and Beach Street; A, Prince and Greene Streets; O, West Eighteenth Street; C, West Thirteenth Street; Pennsylvania Terminal; Times Square; G, West Fifty-first Street; N, Broadway and Sixty-ninth Street; W, West Eighty-third Street; I, West One hundred and sixteenth Street; and J, West One hundred and twenty-fifth Street, near Eighth Avenue, continuing across town to Station L, One hundred and twenty-fifth Street and Lexington Avenue; thence to U, Third Avenue and One hundred and third Street; K, East Eighty-eighth Street; Y, Third Avenue, near Sixty-seventh Street; Grand Central; F, East Thirty-fourth Street; Madison Square; D, East Twelfth Street, to the general post office.

In connection with these lines there is also a cross-town line between the Pennsylvania Terminal Station, on the west side, and the Grand Central Station, on the east side, as is the case between Stations J and L on One hundred and twenty-fifth Street, thus creating two complete loops of pneumatic-tube service.

Now, let us see what is proposed to be done.

I will read from the annual report of the Postmaster General for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916 (dated Nov. 15, 1916):

> Following a thorough investigation and careful consideration by the department, it has been decided to issue an advertisement for proposals to perform mail service by pneumatic tubes in the city of New York, N. Y., in the territory south of the Grand Central and Times Square Stations, between the points between which pneumatic-tube service is now in operation and between the general post office at New York and the general post office at Brooklyn. A separate advertisement will be issued for the territory in New York north of the Grand Central and Times Square Stations, between which the service is now in operation. * * * As this loop is a part of the system of pneumatic tubes in New York City, a portion of which we are recommending be continued, the company may be willing to operate it at a cost commensurate with the results obtained therefrom. In order that the company may have an opportunity to do so, we are recommending that a separate advertisement be issued for the service north of Grand Central and Times Square Stations, but that the contract be not renewed unless a very material reduction in cost is secured.

I am at a loss to understand, after 20 years' residence and an active business experience in New York City, why there should be any discrimination between the service above and below Forty-second Street, because the natural trend of business growth and advancement has been uptown for years. When I came to New York City from a country town in western New York State the center of activity in the retail shopping district was on Fourteenth Street; it removed to Twenty-third Street, thence to Thirty-fourth and Forty-second Streets, and is pressing on toward Fifty-ninth Street, while the great increase in population has created additional congested centers on One hundred and twenty-fifth Street and upper Broadway and at One hundred and forty-ninth Street and Third Avenue, in The Bronx.

Now, as a matter of fact, most of the post-office substations below Forty-second Street have been permanently located, so that the fixed overhead charges of the operating company are ascertainable to a reasonable certainty; but, due to the constantly increasing population in the upper sections of Manhattan and The Bronx, and the physical changes being wrought in every neighborhood in consequence, there will be the necessity of relocating post-office substations on the upper loop, and, as the expense connected therewith for the removal and transfer of the tubes is assumed by the operating company, in accordance with the terms of the contract, it seems to me there is every prospect of a very much greater overhead expense in order to operate above Forty-second Street and less likelihood of the company being able to renew the contract at "a very material reduction in cost."

Mr. Chairman, much emphasis has been laid upon the adverse reports made by the postmasters of Boston, Chicago, and St. Louis, but all of the opponents of this amendment have carefully avoided any reference to the statement and opinion of the postmaster of New York, who, as my colleague [Mr. BENNET] stated, has had 45 years' experience in the postal service.

Mr. Morgan appeared before the committee on December 14, 1916, to which date, I am very happy to state, the committee had adjourned the hearing from the Monday preceding in order to give the business interests of New York City an opportunity to be heard. The postmaster pointed out that it required 36 minutes to send mail by carrier through the pneumatic tubes from Station P, at the Battery, to Station J, in Harlem, and if rehandled at the Penn Terminal Station 10 minutes additional time was required, or a total of 46 minutes, and that by auto from Station P up to Station J 2 hours and 31 minutes were required. Upon that comparison can there be any question as to the necessity for the renewal of the contract for the operation of the tube service upon the entire unit in the Borough of Manhattan?

Now, let me emphasize another point. The two most northern substations on the uptown loop—Stations J and L—are on the southern boundary line of the congressional district which I have the honor to represent. The northern boundary is only 16 blocks above. The district extends from the Hudson River to the East River and is intersected by the Harlem River, which separates the Boroughs of Manhattan and The Bronx. Because the people on the south side of the Harlem River, who are served from Stations J and L, have the advantage of the pneumatic-tube service their mail is delivered within from two to six hours sooner than is that of any of my constituents on the other side of the Harlem River, only a few blocks away, and in many instances is received fully 24 hours later. For example, I have mailed several communications at the same time from my office in the Woolworth Building in the middle of the day, of which those addressed to persons residing on the south side of the Harlem River were received that evening, while those addressed to persons on the north side of the Harlem River were not delivered until the next morning after the addressee had gone to business, and so was not received by him until he returned home that evening. This service is less efficient than that in any rural community with which I am familiar.

For some time the extension of the pneumatic-tube service under the Harlem River, which carries a commerce of 15,000,000 tons per annum, having a value of more than $1,500,000,000, necessitating the opening with great frequency of the many drawbridges that cross the river and seriously interfering with the transportation of the mails from Station L to Stations X and R in The Bronx by automobile, has been agitated. My colleagues [Mr. BENNET and Mr. BRUCKNER] and myself endeavored to secure the adoption of an amendment authorizing this extension when the Post Office appropriation bill was under consideration last year. While we failed, we were subsequently encouraged by the committee. Then came the report of the departmental commission appointed by the Postmaster General.

The service ought to be extended.

NEW YORK, February 24, 1916.

Hon. MURRAY HULBERT,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: By direction of the police commissioner, receipt is acknowledged of your communication addressed to him under date of February 23, requesting information as to the total number of persons and vehicles passing the intersection of One hundred and forty-ninth Street and Third Avenue for a period of 24 hours.

The recent count made by this department was for a period of 10 hours, from 8.30 a. m. until 6.30 p. m., during which period there was a total of 69,640 pedestrians and 7,344 vehicles counted as passing that point in all directions.

Respectfully, LAWRENCE B. DUNHAM,
Third Deputy Commissioner.

The estimated percentage of first-class mail (letters and cards) which would be transported by tube in the event of the extension of pneumatic-tube service:

For dispatch to other points, 95 to 97 per cent; for delivery on district, 90 to 92 per cent.

Very truly, yours, E. M. MORGAN, Postmaster.

On December 21, 1916, I introduced a bill providing for the extension, of which the following is a copy:

A bill (H. R. 19294) to extend the pneumatic mail-tube service and improve the efficiency of the postal system in New York City.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General is hereby authorized to enter into contracts for the extension of the pneumatic mail-tube service from Station L to Stations X and R, and from Station J to College and Hamilton Grange Stations, in the city of New York; and the sum of $85,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry out this work.

The amount necessary in order to continue the pneumatic-tube service is $976,000. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TAGUE] has been good enough to add the $85,000 required for the extension above provided for, making the amount to which it is sought to increase the appropriation, as recommended by a majority of the committee, to $1,061,000. Unfortunately, this will only provide the money, and will not compel the Postmaster General to contract for its expenditure for the purpose intended. I conceive that a specific direction to that effect would, under the rules of this House, be subject to a point of order. But we may be able to get our relief in the Senate. In all events, I can hardly believe that the Postmaster General, who is not directly responsible to the people for the great office that he occupies, will defy the will of the people as expressed by their Representatives, whom they have chosen to act for them, and I trust that the amendment will prevail.

In conclusion, I wish to state that the representatives of the business interests in New York did not feel that the presentation of their case in behalf of the people of New York City would be complete if the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads were not afforded an opportunity of coming to New York and making an inspection of the situation for themselves. So on behalf of the various organizations, whose representatives appeared at the hearing, I extended to every member of the committee an invitation to come over to New York. The committee intended to close its hearings on Thursday evening, December 14, and it was hoped that the members could conveniently arrange to spend Friday or Saturday, or both, of that week in New York City so that they could see not only the manner in which the pneumatic tube operates in New York City but so that they might appreciate the congested conditions, and I mentioned that we would try in the meantime, if we could, to provide them with a snowstorm. I would remind the gentlemen of this House that on the following morning we were accommodated both in Washington and New York with a lusty blizzard, but the committee did not feel able to avail themselves of the invitation.

Under general leave granted to extend my remarks, I desire to insert in the RECORD a letter which I received from the postmaster at New York, dated December 12, 1916, and the statements of Inspector Thomas Myers, in charge of the traffic department of the New York police department, and Mr. W. F. Deberard, representing the Merchants' Association of New York and other New York associations, who attended the hearing on December 14, 1916:

UNITED STATES POST OFFICE,
New York, N. Y., December 12, 1916.

Hon. MURRAY HULBERT, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I have before me your letter of the 11th instant requesting to be furnished with certain information regarding the pneumatic-tube service in this city, for use in the hearing next Thursday morning (Dec. 14) before the House Committee on Post Office and Post Roads, and in compliance therewith have to advise you as follows:

Question (1). Do you favor the authorized use of the pneumatic-tube connection between the customhouse and the appraisers' stores for postal purposes?

Answer. Yes; with suitable post-office connections.

Question (2). Would such use facilitate the delivery of first-class postal matter from the downtown financial and commercial district to the Foreign Station?

Answer. Yes.

Question (3). Would such service extend the time within which supplementary mail could be sent from the downtown financial and commercial district to vessels departing for foreign and domestic ports?

Answer. Yes; later mailing time would be possible for foreign supplementary mail.

Question (4). Can you estimate the percentage of first-class mail which would be transported by this tube in the event of its authorized use by the postal authorities?

Answer. All of the first-class mail from the downtown financial and commercial district for foreign dispatch mailed between 4 a. m. and 11 p. m.

Question (5). Do you know what the additional expense to the Government will be to extend the use of this tube for postal purposes?

Answer. I am not aware of the additional expense involved; this would be a matter for departmental adjustment with the contractor for pneumatic-tube service.

In connection with the answers to questions 2 and 3, I have to state that there is absolutely no doubt that if this tube line were turned over to the Post Office Department it could be utilized to advantage in the transmission of mails. All of the letters, documents, etc., now transmitted through the line could be sent by the Post Office Department for the Treasury Department, and the surplus capacity of the line used to transport the regular mails, provided the line was connected to two of the present post-office stations, namely, Foreign Station and Hudson Terminal Station, both of which are located a short distance from the line, and it is very probable that some arrangement could be made with the New York Pneumatic Service Co. to operate it in connection with its system of mail tubes which connect the stations throughout the city.

Very truly, yours, E. M. MORGAN, Postmaster.

STATEMENTS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE.

Mr. HULBERT. Now, we have brought here to-day the inspector of the New York police in charge of traffic, with a view to giving you not only some facts with regard to congestion south of Forty-second Street—concerning which there does not seem to be any doubt in anybody's mind—but for the purpose of proving also that there is a very substantial congestion above Forty-second Street, and that the congestion above Forty-second Street is multiplying, and in some instances is greater now than the congestion below Forty-second Street, because it seems to be the opinion of the Postmaster General and of the committee who have investigated this matter at his direction that there is less necessity for the operation of the tubes above Forty-second Street than there is below, and with that idea in mind I have brought from my office this morning this large map in order that the inspector, when we call him, may give you the respective areas of the borough, and then show you that the total amount of traffic in all four boroughs outside of Manhattan is less than that in the Borough of Manhattan.

I will therefore introduce Inspector Thomas Myers, of the New York police department, in charge of the traffic bureau.

STATEMENT OF MR. THOMAS MYERS, INSPECTOR IN CHARGE OF THE TRAFFIC DEPARTMENT, NEW YORK POLICE.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I have been sent here by the police commissioner of the city of New York, a man who never loses sight of an opportunity to preserve life, property, and limb of the people of the city of New York.

I have been sent here because I am directly in charge of the traffic squad of the entire city, not the Borough of Manhattan alone, which seems to be the borough now questioned, but the entire city.

Now, it may be of interest to you to know just what the traffic squad is and what they are trying to do. The police force of the city of New York, as you know, is composed of an army of nearly 11,000 men. The traffic squad is composed of 650 specially selected and specially trained men from among that 11,000, and is taught the manner and the best methods of regulating traffic. I have charge of those 650 men. Those men cover the important traffic centers throughout the city. Out of that 650 men we find it necessary to place all of them except 76 right in the Borough of Manhattan—a little spot on that map which you can see there—the widest point of which is but about 2 miles and the length 12½ miles at the longest point, 19 square miles of territory, two and a half million people.

Mr. HULBERT. Right there, Inspector, will you give us the figures showing the area of Manhattan Borough?

Mr. MYERS. Of the different boroughs?

Mr. HULBERT. Yes.

Mr. MYERS. The Borough of Manhattan is 19 square miles.

Mr. HULBERT (indicating on map). This is the Borough of Manhattan.

Mr. MYERS. Brooklyn, 21 square miles.

Mr. HULBERT. This is Brooklyn [indicating].

Mr. MYERS. Borough of Queens, 117 square miles.

Mr. HULBERT. This is Queens [indicating].

Mr. MYERS. Borough of The Bronx, 42 square miles.

Mr. HULBERT. This is The Bronx [indicating].

Mr. MYERS. Borough of Richmond, which is Staten Island, 57 square miles, three times as large as Manhattan.

Now, as I stated before, we find it necessary to place all of those men except 76 in the Borough of Manhattan, to properly regulate the traffic. That traffic has increased to such an extent in the last few years that we have laid awake nights thinking about it. We have studied, we have devised every way that could be thought of by human mind to regulate this traffic, and I want to say that we are now out to the last ounce in the matter of traffic regulations, the matter of handling the traffic on the streets of New York. And I dare say—and I do not fear contradiction in this—that we have the best traffic squad in the world; we have the best traffic regulations in the world, but notwithstanding all that, as I said before, we are out to the last ounce in the matter of handling traffic in the city of New York.

Mr. HULBERT. How many automobiles were there in New York during the past year?

Mr. MYERS. In 1915 there were 102,000. On yesterday there were 140,000, an increase of 38,000 in one year.

Mr. HULBERT. How many trucks were there in that 140,000?

Mr. MYERS. About 21,000.

Mr. HULBERT. And how many of those trucks were in the mail service?

Mr. MYERS. At the present time there are 123 mail trucks, averaging 2½ tons carrying capacity, 6 feet wide, 15 to 18 feet long; 20 parcel-post trucks; and 80 horse-drawn vehicles.

Mr. HULBERT. Now, by reason of your special study of the traffic problems of the city of New York, have you determined the needs and have you made any recommendation to the board of aldermen respecting the limitation or the control of the speed of trucks which are 2½ tons or more?

Mr. MYERS. Two tons or more.

Mr. HULBERT. Will you tell us what has been done with respect to that?

Mr. MYERS. From my experience since I have been assigned to the traffic squad and 26 years' experience in the city of New York, two years in charge of the entire traffic squad, eight years connected with the traffic squad in various ranks—lieutenant, captain, and up to inspector in charge of all the traffic squad—I have found it necessary, on account of the loss of human life caused by vehicles in the city of New York, to recommend—or to have my police commissioner recommend to the board of aldermen—that the speed limit of all trucks, 2½ tons or over, be reduced to 8 or 10 miles an hour. I recommended 8 miles an hour, but the commissioner submitted to the board 10 miles an hour. I am going to insist on that same thing again. Gentlemen, something must be done in the city of New York when you stop to think that every 14 hours of the 365 days in the year a human life is crushed out in the city of New York.

Mr. HULBERT. You mean by some vehicle?

Mr. MYERS. I mean by a vehicle—a street accident. One human life every 14 hours, and some person is maimed or injured in vehicular accidents every 23 minutes. The thing has gotten even to such a state as that in the city of New York.

Mr. HULBERT. Inspector, is there any device that you know of that can be attached to trucks having a capacity of more than 2 tons so that their speed can be mechanically regulated?

Mr. MYERS. I failed to state that at the same time I recommended that trucks be equipped with governors—speed governors—so that they could not violate the speed regulations.

Mr. HULBERT. Will you explain—if you will permit an interruption—will you explain the difficulty that you have in regulating the speed of mail trucks at the present time as compared to other automobile vehicles?

Mr. MYERS. I was just going to reach that. I was going to say that had I been called down here—or sent down here—to help take the present mail trucks that we have in the city of New York off the streets, why, I would not have been surprised at all; but I was really surprised when the police commissioner said, "They are trying to give us more mail trucks in the city of New York; see what you can do. You know what the trucks are doing to the children and the people of this city."

Now, from my experience I consider one mail truck at the present time, on account of the right of way which we give the mail trucks and the right of way which they take—and which every policeman is loath to interfere with on account of the United States mails——

The CHAIRMAN (interrupting). While you are right on that I want to ask you, does that tend to make the Government truck safer or not?

Mr. MYERS. It makes it more dangerous.

The CHAIRMAN. More dangerous, when everybody gives them the right of way, more dangerous than any other time?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir; the mail driver drives out from his post office and he jangles his bell and he rushes through the streets, and other drivers of horse-drawn and motor vehicles have to jam their brakes and traffic must be stopped and pedestrians run to the sidewalk. Every day this occurs right from the old post office down in Mail Street and Park Row. I see it every day of my life; the mail truck coming out from that post office and going right through the crowded streets.

Mr. MADDEN. Haven't you the same right to regulate the speed of the mail traffic that you have the other traffic?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MADDEN. Why don't you do it?

Mr. MYERS. Well, we do it to this extent: You understand that the speed ordnance of the city of New York now permits 15 miles an hour, and that between 15 and 20 miles we must show that there was some recklessness. As a matter of fact, that makes the speed limit practically 20 miles an hour. Now, a truck of 2½ tons, loaded, going through the streets at 18 or 20 miles an hour—which they do—is dangerous, because a man can't stop a truck the same as he can a pleasure automobile.

Mr. COX. Have you any record showing how many of these persons were killed by mail trucks, when you say that one was killed there every 14 hours in the last year?

Mr. MYERS. No, sir; I haven't any record of that. I just got this notice yesterday to come down here, and I didn't have time to get statistics together, but here is the data I have:

Out of the persons killed there were 102 children under 6 years old; 179 between the ages of 6 and 16.

The CHAIRMAN. Where were they killed; where these pneumatic tubes run?

Mr. MYERS. They were killed by trucks; killed by motor trucks in 1915.

Mr. COX. As I understand you, you say you have no data showing how many people were killed by Government mail trucks during the last year?

Mr. MYERS. No, sir; I do know that people have been killed, but I haven't the data of the exact number.

Mr. COX. You have no data showing how many persons were injured by Government mail trucks, when you say there would be a person injured every 23 minutes? You have no data showing how many were injured by mail trucks?

Mr. MYERS. No, sir; but I do know people have been injured by mail trucks.

Mr. COX. Does the data show in what part of the city these injuries occurred, as Judge MOON indicated here? Has it occurred in the territory where the tubes are located, or other places as well?

Mr. MYERS. The Borough of Manhattan shows a greater percentage than any of the others.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean all over the city?

Mr. MYERS. No; I mean all over Manhattan.

The CHAIRMAN. How many trucks are there running in the city of New York?

Mr. MADDEN. Six thousand, about.

Mr. MYERS. I have the data of commercial trucks here. Commercial wagons, of course, might mean small wagons. There were 21,000 licensed as commercial.

The CHAIRMAN. How many automobiles are there that aid in that congestion of the city?

Mr. MYERS. One hundred and forty thousand.

The CHAIRMAN. That covers the whole city?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, how many Government trucks are there?

Mr. MYERS. I just gave it to you, sir. I was just giving it for the Borough of Manhattan, 143, and 80 horse-drawn.

The CHAIRMAN. One hundred and forty-three out of a total of what?

Mr. MYERS. Twenty-one thousand trucks.

The CHAIRMAN. That includes, of course, the trucks that carry all of the Government mail except about 10 per cent, 60 per cent of which goes through the tubes. Now, there is a little balance of it that goes by the trucks, doesn't it?

Mr. MYERS. I don't understand you.

The CHAIRMAN. What part of the letter mail goes by automobile?

Mr. MYERS. I can't answer that.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, just assume that it will take 20 to 25 more trucks in the whole of the city of New York to carry the amount of first-class mail that is now conveyed through pneumatic tubes, how much would that add to the danger to life and property in your city?

Mr. MYERS. Twenty-five, did you say?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. MYERS. I would, in the lowest estimation, say that by adding 25 mail trucks to the traffic of the city of New York you are adding 250 trucks actually to our traffic and the matter of operation, the matter of dealing with other vehicles, and the danger that they would cause.

The CHAIRMAN. Let us call it 250 that were added, what proportion would that bear to the whole number of trucks and automobiles, and things that congest traffic?

Mr. MYERS. Well, the only way that I can answer that——

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). How many automobiles did you say they have?

Mr. MYERS. One hundred and forty thousand.

The CHAIRMAN. 140,000 automobiles and 21,000 trucks. How many wagons are there?

Mr. MYERS. 73,000 about—73,000 last year.

The CHAIRMAN. How many does that make as a total?

Mr. MYERS. 214,000.

The CHAIRMAN. 214,000 vehicles there now, and you say if the Government should see fit to put in 25 more or 250 more, as the case may be, that it would make an intolerable condition in traffic and make it dangerous to life.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Chairman, I say the condition is now intolerable, and to add one more drop to the already full bucket is going to show more than if you were shy 100,000.

Mr. STEENERSON. In what respect does the traffic rules that you enforce against mail drivers differ from those enforced against all other trucks? Or do you treat them the same?

Mr. MYERS. No, sir.

Mr. STEENERSON. Where is the difference?

Mr. MYERS. They are given the right of way; that is, if we establish a one-way street, which we have already found it necessary to do in the Borough of Manhattan, where we have 27 or 28 one-way streets—streets in which vehicles must travel in one direction—the mail wagon don't respect our one-way streets, because they say they have contracts and can't go around the block, but must take the shortest route they can, even against this congested traffic.

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, you permit them to go in the opposite direction from other vehicles?

Mr. MYERS. Yes; where they desire to do so.

Mr. STEENERSON. That is one distinction. Now, is there any distinction as to the speed?

Mr. MYERS. They are governed by the same speed regulations; yes.

Mr. STEENERSON. You enforce the same regulations as to speed on them?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEENERSON. But the difference is that you have to allow these Government automobiles to travel either way.

Mr. MYERS. Well, I might add a little further to that. They are given special privilege when they are coming to street crossings. Other vehicles a great many times are held up to allow them to proceed.

Mr. STEENERSON. That is in the discretion of the policeman—the traffic officer. He holds them up, gives them the signal not to cross.

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEENERSON. Now, he signals them not to cross if they are private automobiles or trucks, but being mail wagons he may permit them to cross?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEENERSON. Out of order; but he wouldn't do that if there was danger of a collision, would he?

Mr. MYERS. No, sir.

Mr. STEENERSON. He would use his own discretion as to whether it was safe to permit a mail wagon to cross?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEENERSON. Is there any other distinction?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir; there is another distinction that seriously interferes with the control of chauffeurs of mail trucks, and that is that if they violate any law they must not be in any way interfered with or stopped, but the officer must proceed with them to the end of their route, no matter where that is—at the end of upper Manhattan—before they place them under arrest.

Mr. STEENERSON. That is the law.

Mr. MYERS. That is the rule that we work under in New York. That is in order not to interfere with the mail.

Mr. STEENERSON. In consideration that the mail must not be stopped.

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, you say these special privileges that you have given to Government trucks make them more dangerous than the others?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, now, you have the right in the city of New York to enforce your regulations against the Government vehicle as well as others; why don't you enforce it?

Mr. MYERS. They have the right of way, Mr. Chairman, that we couldn't take away from them.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course they have got the right of way, but they have got no right to violate the ordinances of your city.

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, the city, I suppose with the cooperation of the Government, has established these rules for the government of the traffic squad.

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir; to facilitate the movement of the mail.

The CHAIRMAN. That is true, but you must not put the blame upon the Government if there are disadvantages arising from your own traffic regulations.

Mr. STEENERSON. Has the question ever arisen as to whether the Government could enforce this privilege over other traffic or not?

Mr. MYERS. That has never been done, to my knowledge.

Mr. STEENERSON. But it is assumed without question that you can not arrest a mail driver until he comes to the end of his route.

Mr. MYERS. Yes; otherwise you would be interfering with the United States mail.

Mr. STEENERSON. And that has the preference over other traffic?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEENERSON. That is what is supposed to be the law, whether it is or not?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEENERSON. And that is the way you enforce it?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, this permitting them to go in the opposite direction from other vehicles on certain streets, where there is a one-way traffic established, has that ever been discussed as between the Federal officers in charge of the mail and the city officers; or is that simply a concession that you make?

Mr. MYERS. That is just a concession.

Mr. STEENERSON. You say they claim they have contracts that require them to travel both ways?

Mr. MYERS. I have heard that expressed by one connected with some one or other of the stations when I visited the stations to take up the matter of establishing one-way streets. "We can't go through there because that would mean 30 seconds or a minute more, and would mean so much more mileage," they would say.

Mr. STEENERSON. The objection was raised on the part of those in charge of mail traffic that their contract required them to travel in that direction, in the opposite direction from the rest of them?

Mr. MYERS. Well, I wouldn't say just in so many words. I would say that they claim that they have a contract whereby the mail has to be delivered in such and such time, and that they had figured on the basis of going through that street and in that direction.

Mr. STEENERSON. In order to make the schedule?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir; continuing around the block.

Mr. STEENERSON. And you conceded that right without any contention or dispute?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEENERSON. Supposing they had the superior right?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Inspector, it is generally agreed that the Government requires of the city authorities that the wagons be given the right of way; isn't that the request from the Government?

Mr. MYERS. Well, since time immemorial, since I have known anything about the traffic or police business, they have been given that right. I can't say just how it is.

Mr. TAGUE. In your city, for instance, if you oblige the Government trucks to live up to your street requirements they never would get the mail to its destination on time?

Mr. MYERS. Certainly not.

Mr. TAGUE. Now, again, when you follow a driver to the end of his route you are not allowed to take him off his mail wagon until a substitute can be put in his place?

Mr. MYERS. That is right.

Mr. TAGUE. Do you know of any time where a mail driver in your city—how many times have they been found guilty of violating the law, so far as violating the traffic laws are concerned, at least, by overspeeding? Isn't it generally conceded that they are allowed the right of way?

Mr. MYERS. I am not prepared to answer that question definitely.

Mr. MADDEN. Your own point is that the traffic in the city of New York is too dense now; that you can't put any more traffic on the streets with due regard to the safety of life and limb?

Mr. MYERS. That is what I am here for; yes, sir.

Mr. HULBERT. Inspector, the fact is that at points of intersection, where there is special congestion, you endeavor to move the traffic first in one direction and then in the other direction on the cross streets by periods, do you not?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HULBERT. And if after you have begun to move the traffic uptown on a street or avenue going north and south, a mail wagon is approaching on a street running east and west, you have to break into the traffic moving in its regular period, in order to permit the mail wagon to cross, don't you?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HULBERT. And the fact of your breaking in on that period, under those circumstances, prevents the continuity of the periods in which you attempt to move the traffic, does it not?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEENERSON. Another question there—whether it is legal or not, as I understand it, you do give the mail trucks preference in certain respects over other trucks, and I would like to know whether, in your opinion, the addition of more mail trucks would endanger the people on the streets more—that is, one additional mail truck—whether it would endanger pedestrians and other traffic there more than the addition of another truck of equal size, whether they are more dangerous on account of the special privilege you extend to them?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir; and that, combined with the special privileges that they take where policemen, where traffic policemen are not stationed, amounts to 10 to 1.

Mr. STEENERSON. They are more dangerous than other trucks, then?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEENERSON. For these reasons?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HULBERT. Inspector, assuming that there were no mail trucks on the streets of New York at all, so that there would be no special privilege to any class of vehicles upon the streets, wouldn't that fact make more easy the regulation of traffic north and south, east and west at points of congestion? Now, is not the action of the police officer influenced by the fact that these mail wagons are carrying the United States mail?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HULBERT. Has any action been taken by your department to prevent the use by mail wagons of the one-way streets by going in the opposite direction?

Mr. MYERS. No, sir; we haven't taken any action to prevent them going in opposite directions. They have, in establishing one-way streets, taken it up with the postmaster in New York, and he cooperated with us in so far as a little regulation of Dye Street at the lower post office; but that interfered much which way the trucks went.

Mr. HULBERT. Is not the effect of a mail wagon going in the wrong direction on a one-way street to tie up all of the vehicles on the block in that street until the wagon has traversed the entire distance of that block?

Mr. MYERS. Well, I wouldn't say that it would tie it up for the whole block, but it would tie it up just at the place where they met.

The CHAIRMAN. Just the length of the truck.

Mr. MYERS. Probably two or three trucks, not one truck.

Mr. STEENERSON. To what extent would it delay the mail to have them comply with the rules as to one-way streets? Would it materially delay the transportation of the mail?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir; if the mail wagons are required to comply with the one-way streets that we are now establishing and traveling at times blocks six or seven hundred feet long to go around and come up right in the other streets, they will travel miles farther than they are traveling now, and instead of 25 or 30 minutes they will be an hour and fifteen or an hour and a half going over the same route to comply with the regulations. And I want to say right here, if we are successful in getting by this ordinance this coming winter before the board of aldermen reducing the speed of all trucks to 8 or 10 miles an hour to preserve life, and then have them comply in addition to that with traffic regulations, the speedy movement of the mail will be at an end in the city of New York.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Inspector, you stated a few minutes ago that one mail truck on the streets of New York, on account of its having the right of way on the street, on account of the reckless manner in which the driver is operating the machine, would be equivalent to 10 privately owned and operated trucks.

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MADDEN. The chief of the traffic squad of Philadelphia, in his testimony the other day, said that 1 mail truck was equivalent to 322 privately owned trucks. You don't agree with him?

Mr. MYERS. I am not responsible for him.

Mr. HULBERT. May I interrupt you to suggest that the streets of Philadelphia are very much wider than they are in New York.

Mr. MYERS. I want to be conservative.

Mr. STEENERSON. I would like to ask you—as I understand your view, it is that the danger from congested traffic is constantly growing?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEENERSON. And that it has now reached a point where it is necessary to have more strict traffic regulations?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEENERSON. And that if you do have more strict traffic regulations, slower speed, more one-way streets, and if you enforce these traffic regulations as against all vehicles, not only Government vehicles but other vehicles, that it will increase—it will either delay the transportation of the mail unreasonably or it will make underground transportation of mail absolutely necessary to the safety of the people of New York?

Mr. MYERS. That is exactly what I claim; yes, sir. And now I can not understand for my life why anyone would suggest putting more trucks on the streets of New York when we are racking our brains to get underground channels for pedestrians to cross thoroughfares, overhead viaducts, or some way to getting out of this terrible traffic jam.

Mr. STEENERSON. In other words, you claim the only alternative we have is either to have a delayed mail service—an unreasonably delayed mail service—or greater facility on the streets?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEENERSON. Why, by reason of congested travel?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir; that is it exactly.

Mr. HULBERT. You have some figures here with regard to the question of congestion, haven't you?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HULBERT. Suppose you present those figures to the committee. Give us, first of all, the average congestion in the city.

The CHAIRMAN. Before you do that, I want to ask you a question. How rapidly is the automobile being used—increasing in use on those streets?

Mr. MYERS. It increased within the last year 39,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, now, do you expect that to be the limit or will there be more?

Mr. MYERS. Not when Ford is making them for $340 apiece. I can't see any limit.

The CHAIRMAN. If they continue at that rate of increase for a year or two, you won't be able to move on that street at all, will you?

HELP PROTECT YOURSELF.

Here are some specific rules to help you save your life and property:

You who walk: (1) Don't run across streets through heavy traffic. The busiest man I know wastes at least 30 minutes a day. Why risk your life to save 5 seconds crossing the street? (2) Over 22,000 persons were injured last year and 650 killed by street accidents. That means 1 person killed every 14 hours and 1 injured every 23 minutes. (3) Cross streets at crossings only. Watch for the policeman's signals. He is always willing to help you. (4) Never attempt to cross a street with a bundle or umbrella over your head or reading a newspaper. Either hides oncoming vehicles from your view. (5) Never jump off a moving car. Wait for it to stop, and then look out for traffic. (6) Stand still if you get caught in a traffic jam. It may save your life. (7) Children suffer the heaviest toll of death because they are the most reckless.

Here are some of the ways in which children, the heaviest sufferers, are killed or hurt: Hitching on backs of wagons or street cars, roller skating in the roadway, sliding on push mobiles in the roadway, daring each other to run across the street in front of approaching vehicles, engaging in street fights, building bonfires, playing on fire escapes and unprotected roofs, riding bicycles in heavy-traffic streets. Advise your children not to do these things.

You who drive: (1) Help people to help themselves. (2) Don't imagine you are within your rights if you go at the maximum speed allowed by law. You must not endanger the safety of others. (3) Your responsibility does not end with the honking of the horn when others are in your path. (4) Your automobile may be under control, but how about the other fellow's? He may be a crazy man. You don't know. (5) Be sure your brakes are right and your steering gear is true before leaving the garage. (6) Learn the hand rules, and always signal before making a turn or coming to a halt.

Here are some precautions against—

Burglars: (1) When you leave your house don't advertise the fact by pulling down the shades or by leaving a note in the letter box saying that you will be back at such and such a time. Sneak thieves profit by such advice. It is an invitation for them to enter. (2) Be careful not to admit strangers to your house or apartment. Make those who claim to be agents or delivery boys show their credentials. If in doubt, always telephone your caller's employer before admitting him. (3) When you go on vacation or close your house or apartment for any considerable time, be sure your windows and doors are fastened. Don't rely on ordinary locks. Nail the windows if necessary, and particularly dumb-waiter and fire-escape windows. Heavy bolt locks, independent of ordinary spring locks, are the most secure for doors. (4) When going away for the summer report the fact to the nearest station house, so that the patrolman may watch your property more closely. (5) When your front doorbell rings and you press the button and no one comes to your apartment notify the janitor immediately. You may have admitted a thief.

Pickpockets: (1) Be careful when you get into a crowd. Keep your coat buttoned up and an eye on your pockets. (2) Don't be too eager to pull out your watch and give the time of day to everybody who asks you for it. That's a good opportunity for somebody to grab it and run. (3) Never fall asleep in a subway, elevated, or surface car. This gives pickpockets a good chance to steal your valuables. (4) Don't show your money in public places. It is an invitation to criminals to follow, assault, and rob you. (5) Don't, when shopping, lay your hand bag on counters while looking at goods. This is the opportunity thieves are always waiting for. (6) Don't carry your hand bag suspended by a strap from your wrist. Hold it tightly in your hand. This prevents thieves from opening the bag or pocketbook and extracting your money or valuables from it.

Disease: (1) Respect your neighbor as much as yourself. Don't beat your rugs or stir up ashes so that your dirt will be blown into his apartment to fall on his food or be breathed by him. (2) Don't throw your garbage or ashes at the cans provided, and don't fill them to overflowing. Don't leave them uncovered. If you do any of these things, you are selfishly indifferent to the health and comfort of others. (3) Buy by standard weight or measure, not by basket or prepared package. (4) Don't buy fish, meat, or fruit from dirty dealers who fail to protect their wares from dust, dirt, and flies. (5) Report to the health department any insanitary conditions. (6) The policeman is your friend; get his advice. (7) If you are well, keep well by helping others. (8) Don't spit on the sidewalks and public floors, to the disgust and danger of other persons.

Miscellaneous: (1) Have you a good, clear description of your personal property? Could you, if requested, quickly supply a description of each member of your family? Such descriptions are essential if anything serious should happen in your house. Write them in a book. (2) If you lose your watch you should be able instantly to give the police its case and movement number and a good description of the timepiece. (3) Keep your eyes open. Learn to observe. It costs nothing and it is a habit that once formed will always help you. (4) When you see a crime committed, or observe a suspicious person or condition, notify the police at once. The more you cooperate with the police the more the police can accomplish for you. (5) Don't put flower boxes or other loose objects on your window ledges unless properly secured. Many persons are seriously injured every day by such articles. (6) Don't place anything on the fire escape which would obstruct it in case of fire. To do so is nothing short of criminal. (7) Regard the policeman as your best friend. You are paying him to keep your street safe and orderly. He is entitled to your help.

Take this home and hang it up.

ARTHUR WOODS,
Police Commissioner.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Chairman, that is true. If they continue at that rate, it will not be a matter of traffic regulation; it will not be stopping and starting traffic; it will be a procession, a parade, and it is almost to that point now.

The CHAIRMAN. The most dangerous thing of all, the thing that imperils New York, is the Government trucks?

Mr. MYERS. No, sir; I am not biased. It doesn't make any difference to me, except that I should say that the Government trucks, in my opinion—1 truck amount to putting 10 commercial trucks on the street, because the commercial trucks will keep to the right-hand curb and are governed by the signal of the traffic man, and they are ready to obey, because they know they will be yanked if they don't.

Mr. COX. What average speed does the auto traffic in the congested districts maintain?

Mr. MYERS. You mean the ordinary traffic?

Mr. COX. The average speed. Now, take one of your congested districts that you have been talking about, how long will it take an automobile traveling with the procession, along with the congestion, say, to travel 5 miles?

Mr. MYERS. I would say that it would be about 8 miles per hour.

Mr. COX. That would be the average rate of speed of the auto trucks in your congested districts per hour?

Mr. MYERS. Well, they keep up; the auto trucks keep up, as a rule.

Mr. COX. The average rate of speed is about the same between the automobile and the auto truck in the congested districts?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. COX. About 8 miles per hour?

Mr. MYERS. Yes; about 8 miles an hour, counting stopping and starting.

Mr. RANDALL. Now, you say that a Government mail wagon or a Government automobile is ten times as dangerous as a private automobile; it will average that?

Mr. MYERS. Now, I don't think I said it in just so many words.

Mr. RANDALL. You said the addition of 1 Government wagon would amount to 10, as compared with 1 commercial wagon.

Mr. MYERS. I mean the general regulation of traffic, because other drivers have to pull up and turn out and give way, and all that, and it amounts to placing 10 trucks on the street, in my opinion.

Mr. RANDALL. Do the drivers of Government mail machines claim authority or any permission or instruction from the department to violate local regulations?

Mr. MYERS. I don't know what they claim.

Mr. HULBERT. What is the ordinance on that point?

Mr. MYERS. The ordinance is that they are supposed, in so far as speed is concerned, it specifically states—of course that takes in the Government trucks, the speed ordinance——

Mr. RANDALL (interposing). Do you not know, as a matter of fact, that the instructions from the Post Office Department to drivers of Government-owned mail machines are that they will obey the local regulations absolutely, and that the violation of local regulations will be considered cause for removal?

Mr. HULBERT. I would like to state that there are no Government-owned machines in New York City. The machines are owned by contractors who do the work under contract for the Government.

Mr. RANDALL. Then you can not hold the Government responsible for the contractor.

Mr. HULBERT. That is the difficulty; we can't hold anybody responsible.

Mr. MADDEN. The point that makes them dangerous is the fact that they are obliged to make a train within a given period of time?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir; and if they are held up—which they must be by the conditions of traffic—I mean the enormous amount of traffic that is on the streets of the city of New York at the present time—if they are held up, which they are bound to be at places, then when they get through they are going to make time to meet the train or get to their destination.

Now, it seems to me, that if we could have more underground channels, instead of less, and get the vehicles off the streets it would be a great thing.

Mr. COX. How many square miles of congested district in New York City do you have?

Mr. MYERS. Well, I will say in Manhattan it is about all congested.

Mr. COX. How many square miles does that amount to?

Mr. MYERS. Nineteen square miles.

Mr. COX. Have you any figures or data showing how many people visit Manhattan every day?

Mr. MYERS. The borough president said that there were 1,000,000 visitors in addition to the two and a half million already there.

Mr. COX. That makes three and a half millions per day.

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir. May I add in connection with that, that a tabulation the department has made here last November—it is greatly increased over that—November a year ago, 1916—on 464 crossings——

Mr. COX (interposing). In Manhattan?

Mr. MYERS. On Manhattan—show that on those crossings, to and fro, 15,000,000 crossed.

Mr. HULBERT. Every day?

Mr. MYERS. No; within 10 hours; 15,345 pedestrians.

Mr. HULBERT. How many vehicles?

Mr. MYERS. Something like 3,000,000 vehicles. "

Mr. HULBERT. Right at that point, Inspector——

Mr. MYERS (interposing). That means back and forth. That is, on 464 crossings.

Mr. HULBERT. Right at that point, will you tell the committee how the total vehicular traffic of the Boroughs of Richmond, Brooklyn, Queens, and The Bronx, taken collectively, compares with the vehicular traffic of the Borough of Manhattan alone?

Mr. MADDEN. That is every 10 hours, you mean?

Mr. MYERS. Well, I will give you the 10 hours for—in the Borough of Brooklyn 236,262 vehicles cross the street intersections. You understand I mean that is not all the street intersections in the Borough of Brooklyn, but only a tabulation.

Mr. HULBERT. That is at the point of congestion?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HULBERT. For a period of 10 hours?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir; and 36,843 pedestrians.

Mr. STEENERSON. Is that the total at all crossings?

Mr. MYERS. No; at the congested intersections.

Mr. STEENERSON. At each crossing?

Mr. MYERS. No; at all the crossings in Brooklyn.

Mr. COX. How many traffic men do you have?

Mr. MYERS. Six hundred and fifty; but in addition to that it has gotten to such a state in the city of New York that every man is more or less a traffic man. Our police commissioner insists that they pay special attention to the traffic on account of this enormous amount of loss of human life.

Mr. STEENERSON. Have you a minimum rate of speed for automobiles and trucks there as well as a maximum?

Mr. MYERS. No, sir.

Mr. STEENERSON. Have you considered any other remedy for this congestion except the lessening of the number of trucks? Have you considered the question of excluding private and pleasure automobiles entirely from your streets?

Mr. MYERS. No, sir.

Mr. STEENERSON. Wouldn't that be a remedy?

Mr. MYERS. Well, of course, any vehicle that you would exclude from the streets would be a remedy.

Mr. STEENERSON. And why haven't you considered the question of placing the sidewalks on the second story, the same as they have over in Chester, England, where the people walk on the second story and leave the street to the vehicles?

Mr. MYERS. I wish we had some second-story sidewalks, underground sidewalks, or underground channels whereby we could get out of this maze of traffic.

Mr. MADDEN. Those second-story sidewalks in Chester, England, were built 3,000 years ago.

Mr. HULBERT. We used to have bridges across Broadway in New York 60 years ago.

Mr. MADDEN. There were only about 2,500 people living in Chester, England, then, too.

Mr. STEENERSON. I only asked if they considered placing sidewalks on the second story.

Mr. HULBERT. I think, gentlemen of the committee, if you would permit the inspector to give you at random a few of the statistics in regard to the congestion at points in different sections of the city, perhaps we would get a better perspective.

I would suggest that he take up Manhattan first.

The CHAIRMAN. Before you do that I want to ask you—is it your opinion that it would be advisable to take all of the mail service off of the streets and put it underground in New York?

Mr. MYERS. Absolutely.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, you are not an expert mail man?

Mr. MYERS. I don't know anything about the tube at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, if that were done, if those 180 vehicles were taken off, would that add materially to your progress on the streets there, considering the large number of automobiles?

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Chairman, yes, sir. I will say that 95 per cent of the complaints that I get personally are about the mail trucks. "Why do you permit mail trucks—I was nearly run down at such a corner last night by one of those juggernauts; why do you permit those things?" Those are the kind of complaints that we have to investigate.

New York is dead against the mail truck on top of the ground. I am dead against anything that is going to jeopardize human life. I am not here in the interest of the pneumatic tube; I do not know anything about pneumatic tubes; but I am here in the interest of street traffic and safety. This comes from the heart when I tell you that.

The CHAIRMAN. You think the great danger, then, that is pending now and that you want to avoid is the addition of about 1½ per cent of the present traffic in mail to your streets? That is about what it will be.

Mr. MYERS. I didn't know until you made the statement that that is true.

The CHAIRMAN. You are carrying everything now, except about that much, on top of the ground.

Mr. MYERS. There is too much now.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, that carried by the tubes underground is a very small percentage of the mail, and the other can not be carried underground by the tubes at all; and your contention is that you are much imperiled if we add 1½ per cent to the amount of mail we are now carrying over the streets?

Mr. MYERS. If you only add one hundredth part of 1 per cent, you add something, and if that one mail truck——

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). Why is it that your contention is against this Government service, when you are permitting daily and hourly increase of automobiles by the hundred, that greatly more add to the danger?

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Chairman, we have never been given an opportunity to appear, to curtail the number of trucks that are on the streets of the city of New York now.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, isn't this the point about the whole matter, that New York feels that it would be—that it would have a better service for its letter mail than is now had?

Mr. MYERS. That does not enter into it.

The CHAIRMAN. That is about all there is to it, and that seems to me—it does not appeal to my judgment at all—that there is any disadvantage to New York's traffic in adding 1½ per cent to the surface traffic. It is the question of your having the tube service, rather than any contention in reference to that traffic proposition, because it is so infinitesimal that I can not see myself that it would make any great difference, particularly when you are adding to the automobiles by the hundreds and making no effort whatever to stop that.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Chairman, they have made efforts to limit them. We have made efforts to limit the size, weight, and character of motor trucks. We have made efforts to reduce the speed of the motor trucks.

The CHAIRMAN. You gentlemen understand that the recommendation of the department goes to the extent of interfering with this particular part of your city's transportation by tube?

Mr. HULBERT. Of course.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the recommendation, as you understand it, with reference to this particular section?

Mr. HULBERT. Are you referring now to the section below Forty-second Street or above Forty-second Street?

The CHAIRMAN. The section where he says this street congestion is.

Mr. HULBERT. He is talking generally now with regard to the congestion of the whole Borough of Manhattan.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, hadn't you better get down to just what you want to suggest?

Mr. HULBERT. I was just trying to do that on two occasions, but the chairman interrupted me and stated before I did that he would like to ask some further questions, so I have not pressed the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Then go ahead.

Mr. HULBERT. Now, will you give us the figures, selecting any points in the Borough of Manhattan above and below Forty-second Street, merely for the purpose of comparison?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MADDEN. Don't you think, Mr. Hulbert, that, having stated that there are 15,000,000 pedestrians pass over 400 crossings in the Borough of Manhattan a day, and 3,000,000 vehicles, that that is the statement of the case?

Mr. HULBERT. Well, it might be interesting to the committee to know that we can pick out specific instances below Forty-second Street where more people pass in 10 hours than there are in the State of Nevada.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; we know that. I think the statement he has made ought to cover the case, and I think we know that fact anyway.

Mr. MYERS. Now, gentlemen, the only thing I want to say further is this, that if, by my coming down here it would mean keeping five more motor trucks off the streets of the city of New York, that it would be worth the trip.

Mr. HULBERT. Well, Inspector, won't you give us a few of those figures? I just want to show the spread of congestion?

Mr. MYERS. Well, gentlemen——

Mr. RANDALL. Why not have him compare the traffic congestion above and below, instead of comparing it to the State of Nevada?

Mr. HULBERT. That was only a gratuitious suggestion on my part. He isn't comparing it to the State of Nevada.

Mr. MADDEN. There is just as much congestion above Forty-second Street as there is below, is there not?

Mr. MYERS. In a great many places there is just as much congestion above Forty-second Street as there is below.

The CHAIRMAN. There are more vehicles pass around Fifty-ninth Street and Broadway and Columbus Circle than any other place in New York. There are 39,000 vehicles and 91,000 pedestrians pass around Columbus Circle.

Mr. HULBERT. Now, will you give us a few of the figures uptown?

Mr. MYERS. Take it uptown in New York, at Central Park and West Ninety-sixth Street, 8,310 vehicles and 127,000 pedestrians at one crossing.

Mr. MADDEN. In a day?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HULBERT. Central Park west is a thoroughfare upon which there are trolley tracks.

Mr. MYERS. Trolley tracks on one side of the roadway, and vehicles must pass up and down on the westerly side of those tracks. It is very dangerous. There isn't a year that two or three people are not killed on that street.

Mr. HULBERT. That is all in 10 hours?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. Are there any mail wagons that travel across that crossing?

Mr. MYERS. Well, I see mail wagons traveling all over. I see them in my dreams. [Laughter.] That is how much it amounts to in the city of New York. I don't care whether the Government operates them or private individuals.

Mr. MADDEN. You are simply talking about the traffic, aren't you?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir. Now we will take way over on the East Side, at Third Avenue—that is over in The Bronx. We will take some figures in The Bronx, Third Avenue and One hundred and twenty-fifth Street, 11,000 vehicles and 25,000 pedestrians. That is well uptown. I am comparing these to show that below Forty-second Street is not the only congestion in the city of New York.

Mr. STEENERSON. You are talking about The Bronx, now?

Mr. HULBERT. He is talking about Manhattan. He started to give some figures and then he said they were in The Bronx, and he wouldn't give those.

Mr. MYERS. One hundred and sixteenth Street and Lenox Avenue, 7,000 vehicles and 22,000 pedestrians. That is in the Harlem section.

One hundred and sixteenth Street and St. Nicholas Avenue, 11,000 vehicles and 21,000 pedestrians.

Mr. MADDEN. How far is that from the Battery? How far north?

Mr. HULBERT. Here is the Battery here [showing on map], Mr. MADDEN. The point he is talking about is at the upper end of Central Park west, I should say about 7½ or 6 miles.

Mr. MADDEN. The congestion is all the way from the Battery to a point 7½ miles north?

Mr. HULBERT. And beyond that. There is great congestion at One hundred and twenty-fifth Street, the point he has just stated.

Mr. MYERS. One hundred and thirty-fifth Street and Lenox Avenue, 8,000 vehicles, 28,900 pedestrians in 10 hours. Now, these figures show down at Broadway and Fulton Street, 10,300 vehicles and 223,000 pedestrians, a parade, a continuous parade all day. You see the vehicles are lower there, 10,300.

Mr. HULBERT. What is the congestion, for instance, at Fifty-ninth Street and Second Avenue, and Fifty-seventh Street and Fifth Avenue, if you happen to run across that at the same time?

Mr. MYERS. Gentlemen, there are such miles of figures here that it takes quite a little time to find them.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose you just put them in the record.

Mr. HULBERT. Can we put them into the record, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. Now, I want to get down to this question a little closer than we are. I think it is a little confusing. It is to me at least. Now, here is a summary of recommendations of the commission in which they say:

"That an advertisement be issued for proposals to perform mail service by pneumatic tubes in the city of New York, N. Y., in the territory south of the Grand Central and Times Square Stations, between all points which pneumatic-tube service is now in operation, and between the general post office of Brooklyn, from March 5, 1917, to June 30, 1926, subject to cancellation by the Postmaster General on six months' notice."

Now, the department concedes that you ought to have the tubes in all that territory, and it seems only that the question of six months' cancellation could be involved there. Now, second:

"That a separate advertisement be issued for proposals to perform mail service by pneumatic tubes in the city of New York, N. Y., in the territory north of the Grand Central and Times Square Stations, between all points between which pneumatic-tube service is now in operation, from March 5, 1917, to June 30, 1926, subject to cancellation by the Postmaster General on six months' notice."

There the six months' notice, it seems to me, is all that is in question. Third:

"That the proposals in response to the advertisements for mail service by pneumatic tube in the city of New York, N. Y., in the territory north of Grand Central and Times Square Stations be not considered for acceptance unless there be a material reduction from the present rate of payment."

It seems to me that is the only question involved there.

Mr. HULBERT. But our contention is that this whole system must be considered as a unit, and our contention is that if it is divided up into two units that it will result in a continuation of the service below Forty-second Street, but that it may not result in a continuation of the service above Forty-second Street; and we are attempting to show you that by the development of commerce in our city, the general trend of the business to move up town, that the necessity of protecting the future New York, as well as to take care of the present, requires that this entire matter should be regarded as a unit.

The CHAIRMAN. There isn't any reason, it seems to me, why there should be any less. Of course, considered as a unit—but why mistrust that part? The unit is conceded to you.

Mr. HULBERT. For the simple reason that unless this matter is treated as a unit, unless, for instance, it recognizes the principle that there is just as much reason for paying the same price above Forty-second Street as there is below; that if the opinion expressed by the Postmaster General is adhered to, we are likely not to be able to get service above Forty-second Street, and the service below Forty-second Street would be very substantially crippled if we did not have the service above Forty-second Street. However, all that matter, if the chairman please, is something that will be brought out by the next witness, whom I assume Mr. Bennet will call, Postmaster Morgan. I believe he is here. I merely wanted to lay down the foundation for what I understand Mr. Bennet is going to assume from the testimony of Postmaster Morgan, by first putting on the expert of the city to show general conditions of congestion, and with a few more questions, if the chairman will permit me, we will conclude with this witness.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, I was trying to make my position plain that I do not see any use of investigating a part of the city that is conceded under all circumstances.

Mr. HULBERT. We are talking now in regard to general conditions, but we expect to give you a comparison of conditions above Forty-second Street and below Forty-second Street, to show that there is the same necessity for continuing the unit above Forty-second Street as there is below Forty-second Street. Now, the chairman states there isn't any dispute with regard to conditions below Forty-second Street, and our contention is that the conditions above Forty-second Street are so similar in character to those below that there ought not to be any division of opinion with regard to the necessity of a continuation of the service above Forty-second Street. Now, if we were agreed in that, then what would be the necessity of dividing the unit at all? Why not consider the service a whole unit, as it has been considered in the past?

The CHAIRMAN. It is just reaching the minds of the committee, as to the conditions in that part of the city where there is contention.

Mr. HULBERT. That it what we are doing.

Mr. STEENERSON. For one, Mr. Chairman, I believe I would have them represent their case as we have it planned.

The CHAIRMAN. I have no objection to their presenting it that way, and I was only giving my own view about the matter. You can take any course you want to.

Mr. HULBERT. I understand the chairman has ruled that we may put figures in evidence without taking up the time to offer specific references.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. HULBERT. Now, Mr. Inspector, will you tell us what is the effect of snowstorms upon the movement of traffic, and particularly with respect to the larger-sized trucks in the city of New York in the wintertime?

Mr. MYERS. Well, it amounts to a great deal. We find the trucks which go on the street in the wintertime, on account of the new north and south channels in the city—they have put on above half a load, maybe less than half the time, on account of the few streets, the main channels of travel that are cleaned by the street-cleaning department at a time, and, as I say, the principal travel in the Borough of Manhattan in New York being north and south—the island being but about 2 miles wide, and there being few outlets for traffic, it amounts to a great deal.

Mr. HULBERT. And that delays the mail?

Mr. MYERS. That delays the mail.

Mr. HULBERT. The snow in New York City is removed by the city authorities, is it not?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HULBERT. And, of course, they do not remove it from all the avenues and all the streets at one time?

Mr. MYERS. No, sir.

Mr. HULBERT. And the propensity of the vehicles, or the drivers of the vehicles, is to use the streets from which the snow has been removed?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HULBERT. And that results in a great congestion, does it not?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HULBERT. And has a tendency to retard expeditious delivery of mail, where the mail is being taken to the trains or brought from the trains, if they are automobiles or horse-drawn vehicles?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HULBERT. Now, to what extent are the conditions produced by snow aggravated in the wintertime?

Mr. MADDEN. You mean how much more dense does it make the traffic?

Mr. HULBERT. Yes; and how much does it retard the movement of traffic?

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, the density would have a tendency to retard traffic.

Mr. MYERS. Well, I would answer that question roughly by saying——

Mr. MADDEN (interposing). What number of streets out of the whole number are likely to be used as traffic streets when you have a heavy snowfall? That is the story we want to get at.

Mr. MYERS. Well, there are only one or two channels, north and south channels, of traffic that can be used at all, and, of course, the traffic becomes congested.

Mr. MADDEN. For example, if you had 10 streets you would be able to use only 2 or 3 in case of a snowstorm?

Mr. MYERS. We have about nine north and south channels. Of course, some of them are set off by Central Park, but six of these channels are passable now. The other three, on account of subway construction, etc.—which, of course, eventually will be open—are almost impassable. That will reduce it down to one or two channels in the winter with snowstorms.

Mr. HULBERT. What were the conditions as to snow obstruction during March, 1916, and what was the effect upon the movement of the vehicular traffic?

Mr. MYERS. Well, I should say that it reduced it to less than one-half.

Mr. HULBERT. How long did those conditions of obstruction continue in March, 1916?

Mr. MYERS. I can't state definitely, but it seems to me that during that winter there were about 60 days out of the winter—something like that—that affected traffic in that manner.

Mr. HULBERT. To what extent is the usual speed of the automobiles decreased when the streets are obstructed by snow, as was the case in March of last year?

Mr. MYERS. I didn't just get that question.

Mr. HULBERT. Well, 50 per cent. How does the congestion of the streets in New York City in July and August compare with that existing in other parts of the year? Is it more or less?

Mr. MYERS. It falls off about 50 per cent in July and August.

Mr. HULBERT. So that if test were made in July and August of any year with respect to traffic conditions you would not get the same result from that test as you would if the test were made in the fall or the early spring?

Mr. MYERS. We could hardly make a comparison.

Now, if I may say just one word—as you understand, I am not here in the interest of the tube or the automobile or anyone else. I am sent here by the police commissioner in the interest of the facilitation of street traffic and the safety of the people who use the streets.

Now, may I add this: I know a little something more than street traffic. I was born and raised in the West, and I can put hinges on a barn door made out of a boot leg nailed on with the back of an ax. [Laughter.] I know more than street traffic, and I have seen traffic in most every large city in this country, from here to California, and when I say that traffic conditions, traffic congestion in the city of New York now is about to the limit, I know what I am talking about.

You remember last year—I just want to use this same little illustration—last year we had a little epidemic in New York known as infantile paralysis. Millions of dollars were spent; the brains of the best medical men in the country were wrecked trying to find the germ. It wasn't a question of money; it was a question of isolating the germ, in order that something could be done. Here we come along and we show you the germ. We show you the truck, what it is doing; it is killing our children in the city of New York, mowing them down. One hundred and five children between the ages of 3 and 6 years were mowed down, crushed out in the city of New York, until it has gotten to such an extent that we have started a campaign—may I offer this circular to show you what it has got to [handing circular to chairman]. If any member of this committee could take my job for one month or one week, I think he would be convinced that to add even one motor truck to the streets of the city of New York would be a detriment.

Mr. HULBERT. May that go in the record, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. To add any other automobiles would be a detriment, too?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEENERSON. Did you mean 105 killed in a day?

Mr. MYERS. No; I meant 105 by motor trucks; 1 person killed every 14 hours; 1 person injured every 23 minutes during the year 1915.

The CHAIRMAN. How many were killed by automobiles?

Mr. MYERS. By automobiles—I will just give you the total: Six hundred and fifty-nine killed by vehicles. That includes all vehicles, horse-drawn, automobiles, and motor trucks.

Mr. STEENERSON. And there were 105 killed in one year—105 children?

Mr. MYERS. I have the figures right here.

The CHAIRMAN. You have a statement as to how many were killed by Government autotrucks?

Mr. MYERS. Two hundred and eighty-one children were killed by vehicles.

Mr. STEENERSON. In one year?

Mr. MYERS. One hundred and five were killed by motor trucks in one year. One person is killed every 14 hours, and one person injured or maimed every 23 minutes.

Mr. HULBERT. Just one question, if you have concluded. It is your opinion that if any action is taken by the Government which will put more trucks on the street, that some action will have to be taken by the city of New York to put vehicular traffic under ground?

Mr. MYERS. Well, I would not say under ground, but something will have to be done more than has been done, because the traffic regulations—we are out to the last ounce in the matter of traffic regulations.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Inspector, do your statistics show how many persons the mail trucks killed or injured?

Mr. MYERS. No, sir; I told you that before. I had just a few hours to gather together this data, and I just got the motor trucks.

Mr. AYRES. You do not have it segregated?

Mr. MYERS. No, sir.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, may I submit for the record the copy of a letter which I wrote the police commissioner on December 11, the contents of which the committee will of course appreciate?

The CHAIRMAN. It may go into the record.

Mr. HULBERT. It was only a short time that the commissioner had to get together that data.

(The letter referred to follows:)

DECEMBER 11, 1916.

Hon. ARTHUR H. WOODS,
Police Commissioner, City of New York.

MY DEAR COMMISSIONER: For use on the hearing next Thursday morning (Dec. 14) before the House Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, which proposes to curtail the pneumatic-tube postal service in New York, I would like very much to have any of the following information which you may be able to supply:

(1) Statistics regarding the congestion of traffic in the various sections of the city, and particularly the principal thoroughfares connecting the business and residential sections of the city.

(2) Statistics showing the number of pedestrians crossing at the principal street intersections on mail routes.

(3) Number of accidents caused by automobiles and horse-drawn vehicles, and particularly those used in the mail service.

You will appreciate, of course, that I wish this information for the purpose of opposing, on behalf of the commercial interests of New York City, any effort to discontinue or curtail the pneumatic postal tube service in the greater city, and hope that you will be able to send it in Wednesday night's mail.

Thanking you in advance for this information, I am,

Very truly, yours,

MURRAY HULBERT.

STATEMENT OF MR. W. F. DEBERARD, REPRESENTING THE MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION OF NEW YORK, AND OTHER NEW YORK ASSOCIATIONS.

Mr. DEBERARD. I wish first to offer some general observations upon the character of the evidence that has been laid before you in the form of a report made to the Postmaster General by a special committee of post-office employees. The essential conclusion contained in that report is the result of a comparison of the expedition and movement of mail by automobile, as compared with its movement by pneumatic tubes. The tests that were made appear to be unfavorable to the expedition of the pneumatic-tube service in all the cities except New York, where no comparison was made.

I find it necessary to criticize the methods by which the conclusions of the committee of post-office employees is made, in that it is incomplete, and to criticize those conclusions as insufficient and causing misleading conclusions.

The CHAIRMAN. Are you speaking of New York?

Mr. DEBERARD. I am speaking in general on the report of the committee of post-office employees upon which the recommendations of the Postmaster General are based.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it your purpose to have your argument confined to New York, or are you taking up the whole pneumatic-tube proposition, outside as well as in New York?

Mr. DEBERARD. I do not understand your question, sir.

Mr. MADDEN. He did not understand you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. I say, Is it your purpose to confine your argument to New York, or are you taking up the whole pneumatic-tube proposition in the country in general, outside of New York as well as in New York?

Mr. BENNET. We do not seek to limit it. Our purpose is to present the case for the New York tube system, and this only.

Mr. STEENERSON. It seems to me it would be relevant.

The CHAIRMAN. I am not saying it would not be relevant. I just wanted to find out what he desired to talk about.

Mr. DEBERARD. The conclusions of a certain committee, which I have mentioned, namely, a committee of post-office employees, who reported to the Postmaster General, which conclusions, I believe, are before this committee in the form of recommendations from the Postmaster General, are fallacious and lead to mistaken conclusions on the part of this committee as to the value of the pneumatic-tube service.

Mr. BENNET. Generally?

Mr. DEBERARD. Generally speaking; yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, point them out.

Mr. DEBERARD. I shall endeavor to do that, sir.

There is contained in the report of the post-office committee, beginning on page 13, the results of tests that were made by automobile service in comparison with pneumatic-tube service. The results stated as to automobiles are not qualified in any way at all. They are put forward as though they had been reported as a fair comparison, as if reflecting service conditions under which autos would necessarily be operated in carrying the mails. Such service conditions involve a consideration of 365 days in the year, while these tests were confined, in most cases, to three or four mails, within a period of two or three days, in the case of Boston, and in one case it was a week. The conditions when those tests were made were peculiarly favorable to good results to automobile operation. They were made during the months of July and August, at which time, as has been testified by Inspector Morris, in the case of the city of New York, the congestion of street traffic decreases by about one-half. The same conditions obtained as to all other cities reported. The summer season——

Mr. MADDEN. You mean to say that the reports submitted are of tests that did not take into consideration the conditions of congestion of traffic?

Mr. DEBERARD. That is it. The congestion in nearly all the cities is due very largely to the growth of the use of the automobile as a pleasure vehicle. The very large proportion of them are owned by wealthy people, and during the months of July and August people of that class are customarily absent from the city and take their autos with them, thus removing them from the streets. I make that statement on the authority of the traffic branch of the police department of the city of New York, and I believe it is practically true in all large cities that the large proportion of automobile traffic disappears from the streets during those months, thereby greatly reducing the congestion. Moreover, during the months of July and August traffic in package commodities, those that are handled by manufacturers in the city, by jobbers, wholesale distributors, and others, is reduced considerably.

There is only one other month in the year where the amount of business traffic is less. The decrease in the movement or congestion of traffic in the city of New York during the months of July and August is customarily from 40 to 50 per cent less than in the month of January, for example.

Mr. MADDEN. Does it decrease that much?

Mr. DEBERARD. The decrease is about one-half; yes.

Mr. BENNET. You mean that the volume of traffic decreases that much?

Mr. DEBERARD. Yes; the volume of traffic, thereby reducing congestion, which is the greatest obstacle to getting through the streets with auto mail wagons. The movement of vehicles through the streets of New York City is so reduced during the summer months that vacations and leaves of absence of members of the traffic squad are concentrated in these months because of that reduction of traffic.

This report makes little or no mention of the very formidable impediment to automobiles in the streets in the winter season. Mr. Morgan has given a very clear indication of the effects of snowstorms, interfering with the regular and speedy movement of the mails. During the past year there were five or six snowstorms during the month of March. There was a snowfall of 28 inches in the aggregate. It was impossible for the street-cleaning department to come anywhere near its regular schedule in removing the snow, despite the fact that they had between 13,000 and 14,000 men employed. These men were employed three weeks, and during those three weeks the business men of the city found it impossible to send their business over their local routes at more than half their customary speed, and, likewise, it was almost impossible to fully load the wagons; so that very formidable obstacle to local traffic existed during the entire month of March. For a period of three weeks it was with extreme difficulty that the wholesale houses were able to move off the several main streets that had been cleaned by the department. The result was that all the cross streets and outlying streets were deserted by traffic except that immediately located upon them.

The traffic was concentrated into a relatively few general routes. It took two or three times the ordinary time to move from one place to another. The traffic department of the city asserted that on an average it would take twice as long to move between given points than it ordinarily took.

Postmaster Morgan has shown very clearly the effect of these conditions on the movement of the mail and the impracticability of automobiles performing their duty, carrying their maximum load, under these conditions. There is not one word in this report to indicate that these tests paid any attention at all to the obstacles to traffic. The comparison as put forward, while there is no statement or omission of essential points, tends to misleading and fallacious conclusions in using it as a comparison between the autos or wagons and the pneumatic tubes as a means of conveying mail—conclusions that are certainly unwarranted by the facts.

The pneumatic tubes are not subject to these conditions. The city of New York was able to carry on its correspondence during the month of March and during parts of December only because of the existence of the pneumatic tube. There were 210 failures on the part of automobile vehicles during that time to make connections with the railroad trains, as Postmaster Morgan has pointed out; and those are the conditions which must be met if it is undertaken to carry the mails by automobiles.

The CHAIRMAN. What do those cities do which have no pneumatic tubes?

Mr. DEBERARD. They struggle along as best they can.

The CHAIRMAN. What does the fourth-class mail do?

Mr. DEBERARD. Practically all of it lies. The delay is very great. There is extreme delay in the movement of second, third, and fourth class mail.

The merchants made some tests about that time in sending papers throughout the country in order to learn the extent of the delay that ensued.

The CHAIRMAN. Those delays were caused, in part, by the movement of trains.

Mr. DEBERARD. Very well; but that is no reason why the tests should not show some delay in New York City. It was only on account of the pneumatic-tube service that the first-class mail was handled as it was.

Mr. STEENERSON. While we are on this subject I should like to call your attention to what appears to me to be an important factor. The tests mentioned by Postmaster Murray, of Boston, seem to have taken place on a Sunday, and, naturally, the traffic would be less than otherwise; but he also stated—or might have stated, if he did not do so—that there was less impediment in the tubes. Mr. Morgan mentioned that the automobiles would have to stop at the various stations, thus making the movement very much slower than the transmission mentioned by Mr. Murray, who transmits direct from one terminal to another.

Mr. DEBERARD. I think Mr. Murray's contract is for a single contract, while this in New York is for a particular route for a term of time. In other words, it seems to me that these tests, instead of making them under the conditions which actually exist in the case of the autos, as in the case of Chicago, for example, so far as I can find out, where the tests were made between the central post office and the stockyards, where there was no stop on the way, should be made under the conditions as they actually exist, where stops have to be made, as in New York City.

The CHAIRMAN. What do you represent—the city of New York?

Mr. DEBERARD. I represent the Merchants' Association of New York.

The CHAIRMAN. Are you employed regularly by this association in New York?

Mr. DEBERARD. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Do they pay you a salary?

Mr. DEBERARD. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. How much?

Mr. DEBERARD. Six thousand dollars a year.

The CHAIRMAN. You appear in all such matters as this, do you not?

Mr. DEBERARD I appear in a great many of them.

Mr. STEENERSON. The statement of Postmaster Morgan in regard to the speed of automobiles seemed to indicate that they were slower by reason of stoppage at every station, whereas in Boston the conditions in that respect were different. Do you contend that the conditions described by Mr. Morgan were actual service conditions in New York?

Mr. DEBERARD. That is the fact. The schedules in the New York service specify the time, and the speed is approximately 12 miles an hour. To that is added the time allowed for stoppage, loading, and unloading at each of the intermediate stations.

Mr. BENNET. There is no through transportation from one station to another, is there?

Mr. DEBERARD. No; that would necessitate too many automobiles to enable the department to send out all the mails.

Mr. BENNET. And it would not be practicable, would it?

Mr. DEBERARD No, sir.

Mr. BENNET. That is all.

Mr. MADDEN. You made a statement as to the traffic conditions throughout the conditions—traffic conditions in New York and in other parts of the country. You are familiar with those conditions?

Mr. DEBERARD. Very largely. I will ask Mr. Meade if I am not familiar with those in New York?

Mr. MEADE. That is correct.

Mr. MADDEN. The mere fact that you are paid a salary would not prejudice you in your study of this question, would it?

Mr. DEBERARD. No; not in the slightest. I am not interested in any tube company or any other company.

Mr. MADDEN. Very well.

Mr. BENNET. Having knowledge of the subject, you desire to present it to this committee; is that correct?

Mr. DEBERARD. Certainly.

Mr. STEENERSON. You want to help us reach a proper conclusion?

Mr. DEBERARD. Yes, sir; that is it. If you will look up the point to which I have directed my criticism, you will note there, on page 15 of the post-office employees' report, the movement of 77 carriers, requiring 42 minutes and 53 seconds. It will be found that the intervals between the dispatch of the separate carriers were 27 seconds, whereas it has been shown by other testimony that under your service conditions the usual interval is 9 or 10 seconds, or with a maximum of 15 seconds. These tests were made on Monday, when it is possible that there was less than the usual number of men available for that work.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that true?

Mr. DEBERARD. I have simply stated it as an explanation of the extraordinary time required or occupied.

Mr. TAGUE. You believe it is far nearer the truth than that it should take a carrier four minutes to travel in a tube, in Boston, less than half a mile, don't you?

Mr. DEBERARD. I am merely stating the facts and conditions.

Mr. TAGUE. In this matter of headway between movements——

Mr. DEBERARD. There have been some conflicting statements made here. Mr. Morgan has already stated what the interval ought to be. Personally I have not made any observations and, consequently, I am not competent to state definitely an opinion. But I do find here that, under the conditions, the time occupied was not normal.

Mr. HULBERT. In connection with the inquiry submitted by Mr. Steenerson, do you take into consideration the fact that the traffic in New York is longitudinal, whereas in Boston the traffic spreads in different directions?

Mr. DEBERARD. That would increase the congestion throughout Manhattan.

Mr. HULBERT. That would have to be considered with respect to the necessity of having an automobile, operating from Station L to Station J, stopping at stations along the line, rather than having a through route.

Mr. TAGUE. Do you believe the congestion is greater in New York than right in the vicinity of the Boston post office?

Mr. DEBERARD. I have not had an opportunity to make any comparison, sir.

I want to call your attention to a practical point in the movement of mail in New York City. It is a rule in our banking institutions in New York and in our business houses that all mail received on a given day shall be cleared up before the close of business. It is highly important that this should be done, especially in the case of banking transactions, in which balances are transferred from one part of the city to another at the close of the day, or before the close of the day. There is a continuous stream of letter mail of a high degree of importance going into all the downtown branch post offices, such as Wall Street Station, the Hudson Terminal, and others, for dispatch that day; and in order that it may reach the correspondents of the banks and business houses early the following morning, or at the earliest possible moment, it is necessary to have a tube system.

One of the most important mail trains is the Transcontinental Express, leaving at half past 9. It carries a very heavy body of mail. The connections are scheduled for all important lines cressing it and for all important junction points. The train is scheduled to reach the Pacific coast in order to make connection with trans-Pacific steamers, so that connection may be made on certain days with steamers to Australia, with which this country has a large and rapidly increasing and important business. Mail destined for that train is conveyed by automobile that leaves Hudson Terminal at 8.40.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you understand that there is any recommendation by the Postal Committee to substitute automobile service for pneumatic-tube service in New York City?

Mr. DEBERARD. I will connect up with that in a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. I wish you would connect up with a few of the questions as you go along.

Mr. DEBERARD. If I may be permitted to continue——

The CHAIRMAN. I would like for you to answer my question.

Mr. DEBERARD. It has an important bearing on the pneumatic-tube service, which should be dealt with as a complete system.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose we are not proposing to use automobiles in New York. Suppose the committee does not cut the service off.

Mr. DEBERARD. It is made possible to cut it off under the proposal of the Postmaster General and under the clause which provides for six months' cancellation.

The CHAIRMAN. That is possible in every contract.

Mr. MADDEN. I think it would be interesting to the committee to develop the case. We should like to get it in the record in the way the gentleman desires to present it.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. Go ahead.

Mr. DEBERARD. The last auto arrives at 8.40 and arrives at Grand Central Station at 9.06. The pneumatic service continues to dispatch mail arriving at the Hudson Terminal and other branches for 10 minutes after, and during those 10 minutes the volume of late letters that are intended to reach the Transcontinental Express reaches 10,000 or 12,000. This steamship correspondence is the means of conducting business with Asiatic and Australian points. If connection was not made with this train, there would be from 10,000 to 12,000 letters left over.

Mr. MADDEN. If there were no tube service, and you had to rely entirely upon the automobile service, those 10,000 or 12,000 letters would be left over in the post office.

Mr. DEBERARD. With the automobile service alone, that would be so.

Mr. MADDEN. Yesterday, when the First Assistant Postmaster General was on the witness stand, he testified that when the mails were closed, the movement by both automobile and tube was closed.

Mr. DEBERARD. My information is based on a statement made to me by Postmaster Morgan, on schedules as given by him to me.

Mr. MADDEN. What difference in time is allotted for the movement of a letter from the post office, according to your information, through the pneumatic tube and the movement by automobile?

Mr. DEBERARD. The movement by pneumatic tube is 10 minutes later than by auto. From Station P and other down-town branches the tube collects from 10,000 to 12,000 additional letters after the mail which goes by automobile is closed at the post office. These letters would otherwise be delayed until the next day, making a delay of from 10 to 12 hours in their delivery, according to the time they arrived at the office. In case they missed connection with the Japanese or Australian steamer, the delay would be from two to three weeks.

Mr. RANDALL. Because they sail only once in two or three weeks?

Mr. DEBERARD. Yes.

Mr. RANDALL. This delay would occur only on a certain day, once in every two or three weeks, then, when a connection would be made with a steamship sailing from the Pacific coast, which, as you say, is once every two or three weeks. Is that true?

Mr. DEBERARD. Yes. The same condition would occur three or four times a week in the case of sailings to Europe. In making connections of this sort the mails from out of town are also put through the pneumatic tubes. It is thus seen that it is not a matter which particularly or peculiarly concerns New York City alone, but it affects all the great cities throughout the country by reason of the European correspondence, which is becoming increasingly more important by reason of the great development of the export trade of this country. In that connection the pneumatic tube is of the utmost value as an auxiliary—more valuable than any other method of conveyance. It is of value to the business community—of most inestimable value—because it enables the quick transmission of business communications concerning transactions of very great importance, which are facilitated by the quick transmission of mails.

For instance, a letter may be written by a man in Chicago and sent to New York, may be received in New York in the morning, be answered the same day, and, by reason of the quick service afforded by the pneumatic tubes, be replied to and the reply sent out that afternoon, and be received in Chicago the next morning. Or the service would work the other way, as the case may be. It is a great advantage any way you look at it. The same thing applies to correspondence between the cities, and it is necessary that the pneumatic-tube service should be preserved in all the great cities, because, if we have it only in New York, it is only one-half of an instrument which is not fully effective unless it is complete.

Mr. RANDALL. What time does the big bulk of mail move in New York City?

Mr. DEBERARD. It is mailed practically in all important offices just as rapidly as the letters can be answered.

Mr. RANDALL. Is it not a fact that the big bulk is mailed between 3 and 5 o'clock in the afternoon?

Mr. DEBERARD. Undoubtedly.

Mr. RANDALL. Then you think that the mail is all worked out in the post office ready to dispatch at 8.30?

Mr. DEBERARD. At 8.40.

Mr. RANDALL. It is not as a matter of fact worked up until 11 or 12 o'clock at night.

Mr. DEBERARD. I am not fully informed as to the movement of mails at that time, but it is sent out as rapidly as it is possible to sort it. It is sent out as soon as it is sorted and distributed.

Mr. RANDALL. The great bulk of mail goes into the post office between 3 and 5 o'clock in the afternoon. It is impossible to clean it up before 11 or 12 o'clock at night. How are you going to get it out on that 8.40 mail?

Mr. DEBERARD. Mr. Morgan can speak more accurately than I can with respect to the extent that they can handle this mail for the Transcontinental Express. Business men can always inquire, but they can not always get the proper information at the time. Another thing: This is an indispensable instrument for the exchange of mail. New York has a population of about 6,000,000 people. There is a very large interchange of correspondence between the different parts of the city which does not go on the railroad at all. Persons who use the mails—and everybody does—desire that their communications and articles sent through the mails shall reach their respective destinations as quickly as possible. It is possible now that letters originated in one extremity of New York, by means of the pneumatic tube and the dispatch which it permits, to reach their destination on the same day, and sometimes within a very short time on the day of mailing.

If the pneumatic tubes were done away with the time of movement by autos between the outlying points of New York would be very much increased.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Morgan tells me that every parcel of mail delivered between 3 and 5 o'clock in the afternoon would be worked out by 8 o'clock, and also a great deal of the third-class mail. The parcel post would not be worked out on account of the lack of assistance and lack of room. The first-class mail, however, received between 3 and 5 o'clock in the afternoon would be entirely worked out by 8 o'clock.

Mr. RANDALL. Why does he keep his men there working until 11 or 12 o'clock at night?

Mr. BENNET. Because of the other classes of mail matter.

Mr. DEBERARD. Mr Morgan presented to you a statement as to the movement of local mail between Station J, One hundred and twenty-fifth Street, and Station P, near the Battery, showing a difference of nearly two hours in time of movement between the pneumatic-tube and the auto service. It should be pointed out that the time between the dispatch of wagons or autos from Station J is a very important matter. The most frequent movement is at hourly intervals; the longest movement is at two-hour intervals. A one-hour movement takes care of the early morning mails and the inward late afternoon mails.

Between those times the interval is two hours, so that if a letter be mailed by about 11 o'clock in Harlem and it were necessary to use automobiles as a means of transportation, assuming that it was mailed in Harlem, it would require two hours to reach the Battery, and perhaps it would reach there too late to get out by mail on the same day. It is absolutely true as to mail put in the Harlem office later than 12 o'clock.

As to the mail service in Brooklyn, there is only one extension to the service there, from the general post office to the Long Island Station. That carries a very considerable body of mail, which is of very considerable importance. It catches the Long Island trains and reaches its destination by way of the Long Island Railroad. There are no other facilities for permitting an interchange of local mails in the great Borough of Brooklyn, containing about 2,000,000 people.

So that for large areas of Brooklyn it is impossible for a person to receive a letter upon the same date that it is mailed in Harlem. The result is that very few people use the mail for that interchange of communication. On the contrary, where the pneumatic-tube service has been fully developed for the distribution of local mail there has been a very large increase in the interchange of local letters. The Borough of Queens, north of Brooklyn, contains now between 600,000 and 700,000 people. It has no tube service. It is dependent upon the wagon service. It is a perfect hive of industry, flooded with factories, more coming there all the while, and it is of the highest degree of importance that these factories be able to reach by letter their distributing and selling offices located along the lower part of Manhattan, which is now impracticable. The same conditions prevail as to The Bronx. There are several thousand people in the Borough of The Bronx, to which must be added the residents of the extreme upper part of the island of Manhattan, so we have a facility now existing for the prompt interchange of local letters so restricted as to be available and to serve about two million and a half people out of a total of 6,000,000. Our contention, therefore, is that every facility that now exists should be preserved beyond any question; that those facilities should be so extended as to promote the use of the tube for the interchange of local letters. That facility is reasonable. It is a reasonable demand on the part of a large part of the population that is now deprived of it.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you had any experience in postal affairs?

Mr. DEBERARD. I have not.

The CHAIRMAN. You spoke a while ago about letting by separate contract a part of this service. Now, if it is a matter of fact that bids could be submitted for this service separately by the Philadelphia Pneumatic Tube Co., and another would be willing to bid for that service $12,000 per mile instead of $17,000 per mile, would you regard it as a good proposition on the part of this committee to present such bid?

Mr. DEBERARD. I should not regard any proposition of two public-service corporations performing similar functions that need to be performed as a whole to be put into the same territory in such a manner as to divide the function between them and prevent the proper operation of the function which would result in another——

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). If, then, another tube company were to come in and bid for a part of the service in that city, it would not be good policy to accept a less bid than $17,000?

Mr. DEBERARD. You misunderstood me. I did not intend to convey any such impression. My understanding was that if the present system of——

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). If that can be done and as good service given, it ought to be done.

Mr. DEBERARD. If equally good service can be given to New York at a lesser cost, I can see no reason why it should not be done. But as to the proposition of dividing the territory in the manner indicated, I should have serious objection, for it is impracticable for two companies to interchange business and properly forward it.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a matter of administration. The Post Office Department could work that out.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] desire to occupy the floor?

Mr. MOON. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COX] for 10 minutes. Mr. Chairman, how much time have we?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 21 minutes remaining.

Mr. MOON. Then I yield to the gentleman 10 minutes.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, of course this amendment is going to be voted into this appropriation bill. I entertain no doubt about it. Judging from the past, I have made up my mind that it is next to an impossibility to defeat any appropriation which tends to take money out of the Treasury, and this is going to carry, notwithstanding the fact that the Postmaster General says there is no use for it and it is not needed and that it is an expensive service for transportation of the mails. I wish the Members would get this clearly in their heads, that it is only first-class mail that goes through the tubes. I wish you would further get it into your heads that it is only a very small per cent of first-class mail that goes through the tubes. I wish you would further get it into your heads that the reason for that is because of the smallness of the tubes, and especially the smallness of the containers which carry the mail. There was a time—and I wish you would get this in your heads—before the day of auto trucks and before the day that the fourth-class parcel-post matter was worked out in its present state, that, in all human probability, those pneumatic tubes served a very valuable service, but the coming of the auto truck and the development of the Parcel Post has absolutely done away with the necessity for all these tubes, in my opinion. However, I am willing to defer to the decision of the Postmaster General so far as affects the city of New York. I wish I could find how many Members of the House have read this report taken before our committee concerning these tubes. Is there any man from the State of Illinois, is there any man from the city of Chicago, who is unwilling to stand upon the testimony of Dan Campbell, who has been postmaster of the city of Chicago for the last 11 years?

When you are sick, why do you send for a physician or an expert? Because you do not know how to treat yourself. Is it not fair, is it not right, that upon these questions we ought to be governed most exclusively by the judgment of postal experts? Mr. Campbell—and I have not time to read his evidence—came before our committee and made his own statement, and offered to read before the committee the statements of 22 of the supervisory officials of the great post office of the city of Chicago, all of them saying, every one of them, without a single exception, that there is no use for the tubes there. Why? He assigns the very reason I assigned you a moment ago. He said: "Gentlemen, they can take care of the mail facilities of the city of Chicago without the purchase of another automobile." They have 206 there now. That they can take care of the mail facilities of the city of Chicago and give them just as good mail facilities as they have got now, aye, gentlemen, better, by the use of the automobiles than by the use of the tubes.

Why, as a result of the tubes in the city of Chicago the great packing houses offered the Post Office Department here to put on their own automobile routes and do away with the tube. That is Mr. Campbell's statement. He wrote that letter to the Post Office Department here, and the department did not take up his proposition to let them put the automobile service on, but the department itself put it on for them.

Now, the packing houses, that do a billion dollars' worth of business per year in the city of Chicago, come to the Post Office Department and say, "Here is our proposition: There is nothing in the tubes; let us at our own expense put on an automobile service, and we will pay the bill." What do you think of it?

Now, I am quoting here what Dan Campbell says. I am quoting, gentlemen, what 23 of the supervisory officials of the post office of the city of Chicago said to our committee. Dan Campbell says he does not need these tubes; that he will do the service and save $140,000 a year without the tubes.

Oh, this congestion! There is nothing in it. I think there were said to be 118 cases of delay and accident. Seventy of them were investigated, and the Government was not to blame in the least. In one case a man was drunk, standing up against a telephone pole, and as the Government automobile skidded by he fell over the machine and got hurt. Another man was drunk in a blind alley, and one of the automobiles ran over him one night and he got hurt. That is about the size of it.

What is true, gentlemen, in the city of Chicago is true also of the city of St. Louis, and what is true of the city of St. Louis is true also of the city of Philadelphia, and the same thing is true of the city of Boston.

Now, let us come down to "brass tacks." What is there in this thing? There is but one thing in it. One of my friends here—somebody over on that side—revealed the whole story, and that is, are you going to run your arm into the Treasury of the United States and float a losing proposition? It is conceded that unless this money is appropriated, and unless the Post Office Department goes ahead and uses it, somebody who holds this stock is going to lose. Are you willing to enter upon that era of campaigning? It is too high a price for me to pay. If you are going to take out of the Treasury of the United States one-half million dollars merely to uphold the value of this stock, I will not do it. That is all there is in it. There never was anything else in it.

These tubes were originally constructed away back yonder, I think in 1893, up in the city of Boston, where my friend Mr. TAGUE lives, solely as a commercial enterprise. That is the way it started. It was regarded as a commercial enterprise, and after being tried out as a commercial enterprise it was found to be a dismal failure, and somebody had to be found to buy that old junk, and that person was your poor, old, innocent Uncle Sam. And you are asked here to uphold it and load it on him.

Now, I have not got anything in the world against the transportation of the mails in the cities; nothing on earth. I was glad, though, and rejoiced when I heard somebody over here on this side expose the alliance that has existed on this floor for so many years, the alliance between the city and the country fellows. I have seen the city Members vote to increase the salaries of rural carriers. Oh, yes. I have seen the country Members again line up to increase the salaries of the railway postal clerks and the city letter carriers and the post-office clerks in the first and second class offices. I have seen that alliance going on here for years and years, but never until this morning did I ever see a man who had the nerve to come on the floor of this House and disclose it.

I am not fighting this because I have anything on earth against these tubes that are used in transporting the mails; I am fighting it because, in my judgment and in my opinion, there is a principle behind the proposition to decrease this service, and that principle is well stated in the report of the Postmaster General. That principle is that these tubes are of no use, that they are unnecessary and expensive. I am fighting it upon the ground that the money ought to be saved and economized and used for the purpose of extending mail facilities at other places where it is needed. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I feel that too much has already been said upon this subject. The only question here is whether we ought to continue a service that is shown by the proof to be of no value or of but little value to the people of the United States compared with the better and more effective service that can be rendered in the places where we propose to discontinue this service.

Now, New York, except as to a part of it, is an exception to the rule and to the report that is made in this case, and the congestion in the city of New York is such at points that it is deemed advisable at the present time to continue the pneumatic-tube service there. As to the other cities, the committee reported that they ought not to have the service.

Remember this was a committee of experts from the Post Office Department, required by law to investigate and make this report. The report is approved by the Postmaster General. It is approved by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. Of course, it is disapproved by the gentlemen in the cities that have the benefit of this appropriation, not because it is of value to the public—because you have more judgment than to believe that, as compared with another service—but because the tubes are owned by people in these cities, and their investment may be affected thereby.

This is an evolution, just like all other methods of transportation. The automobile service is a superior service to the tube service. The proof in the whole matter shows that the automobile service is quicker and better, and so far as the mail is concerned it is less dangerous, because it does not destroy any part of the mail. The proof shows that the Government can get this better and superior service at about one-third of what it has to pay for the pneumatic-tube service.

So it is irrelevant what the people who own the tubes may get or not get out of it. Our first duty is to the Government. It is to give to the people of these cities the best service we can. We offer the best service. We offer it for less money, and therefore it ought to be accepted, regardless of the private interests of the corporations which control these tubes. Why, the officials of your Government in the cities of Washington, Chicago, and other places say that the service is not of sufficient value to them to be maintained and that it ought to be abandoned. They ought to know. They do know, and this demand for the protection of private corporate interests in these cities, to the destruction of the welfare and the interest of the American people, ought not to receive a response from any man in this House. It is simply a question whether our Government shall take advantage of these conditions which will enable it to give more effectual and valuable service for less expense than the antiquated service now in operation.

The corporations that own this property, according to the proof, get 28 per cent interest every year upon these tubes. They pay large sums to the officers who own most of the stock. They get a net profit of 14 per cent, as shown by their own proof. I believe that if the facts were known and developed here as they have been on a previous occasion, it would appear that the profit is twice that amount. But whether it is a large or a small profit, we as Representatives have to settle but one question. We are not involved in the interest of these private citizens. If, as I said, we give a better service and give it for less money, and save to the Government two-thirds of the cost, we ought to do it. I heard a gentleman suggest here that when the pneumatic-tube people were asked if they could give a service for less cost they made the answer that their books might be examined, and that they were willing to do that which was right. This record shows that upon inquiry from the corporate owners of these concerns they refused to say whether they would give this service for less money or not. We know that it is not worth $17,000 a mile. We know that it is nothing less than the most consummate piece of peculation to charge that amount of money for this service. We know that less than 2½ per cent of all the mails of our country that are delivered through these cities is carried through these tubes, and we pay but a little more for the 98 per cent that is carried by other vehicles. Yet we are asked here to submit to this graft upon this Government. I am going to talk plainly about it, because as shown by the proof heretofore and as shown by the proof now, from its very inception it has become nothing less than a loathsome, larcenous graft. Need protection! Ah, the cities themselves from whence come the Representatives who sustain this corporation need protection that we, the whole people, ought to give to them. Mr. Chairman, this is not a big matter. It is a small matter, but that system can not continue. Every man who has studied it a moment knows that if the tube system must continue at all, it must be of sufficient size to carry something other than 5 or 6 pounds of letters. We know that the Governments which have investigated this system have repudiated the present system as worthless. They will not follow it. The proof shows that in London to-day, while this great war is going on, there is being run under that city a great tunnel 9 feet in diameter, through which the mails are to be carried upon cars. That might be worth something to us here if we could expedite all the mail of every character; but to preserve intact at this enormous expense a little 8-inch tube that carries only 60 per cent of 12 per cent of the mail is an outrage upon this Government. We ought to abandon it just as we abandoned the slower and more ineffectual methods of carrying the mails in other ways.

Do you talk about congestion in these cities? Do you suppose if we withhold 25 or 30 or 100 automobiles from our congested streets in New York City or other cities, that will have any effect upon the ultimate congestion there? Is everybody going to stop the use of automobiles because thoroughfares may be congested at times? Shall the Government forego all of its rights and privileges, and every economic proposition, because some man is killed by an automobile in a congested part of the city? Ah, when men want that to which they are not entitled, when men want to extend their hands into the National Treasury for the purpose of protecting a graft in any city or in any part of the country, when they want to make the whole American people pay tribute to a few corporations, they dodge the main issue. They decline to rest their case upon the real facts, and they sometimes resort to the question of danger to the public on the highway. Do you suppose that if these tubes were closed up automobiles would stop or would be any less dangerous? I refer to that only as an indication of the futility of the whole argument. It is just the single question of honesty or dishonesty. That is all it is, gentlemen. Take your choice, and vote for the interest of the corporation or for the Government, just as you choose. [Applause and laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the committee all debate is now closed on this amendment, and all amendments relating to pneumatic-tube service. The Chair will ask the Clerk to report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. TAGUE: Page 15, line 17, after the word "devices" in line 15, strike out "$449,500" and insert "$1,061,000 for continuance of service now existing in New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, St. Louis, and Brooklyn."

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. BENNET) there were—ayes 123, noes 84.

Mr. MOON. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. MOON and Mr. TAGUE.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 152, noes 104.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For inland transportation by steamboat or other power-boat routes or by aeroplanes, $1,224,000: Provided, That out of this appropriation the Postmaster General is authorized to expend not exceeding $100,000 for the purchase, operation, and maintenance of aeroplanes for an experimental aeroplane mail service between such points as he may determine.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. TILSON. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order, and the gentleman from Connecticut desires to offer an amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand the purpose of this appropriation of $100,000 carried in this proviso, it is to enable the Postmaster General to carry on experiments, to purchase a Zeppelin to carry the mail in competition with the railroads of this country.

Mr. MOON. I do not know that it is in competition with anything; it is an experiment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order so far as the words "or by aeroplane," in line 10, and also against the proviso in the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. MOON. No; Mr. Chairman, I think the point of order made on the words "or by aeroplane" is correctly made. If the gentleman does not want the experiment, all right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MOON. Right there, Mr. Chairman, the increase in this appropriation on account of these words that were stricken out was $100,000, and if they go out the amount ought to be reduced. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, line 10, strike out the sum "$1,224,000" and insert "$1,124,000."

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, just what part went out on the point of order raised by the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. MOON. The words "or by aeroplane" and the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee reducing the amount by $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Railway Mail Service: For 15 division superintendents, at $3,250 each; 2 assistant superintendents, at $2,350 each; 15 assistant division superintendents, at $2,250 each; 118 chief clerks, at not exceeding $2,100 each; 474 clerks, grade 10, at not exceeding $1,800 each; 2,053 clerks, grade 9, at not exceeding $1,700 each; 429 clerks, grade 8, at not exceeding $1,600 each; 8,204 clerks, grade 7, at not exceeding $1,500 each; 796 clerks, grade 6, at not exceeding $1,400 each; 2,408 clerks, grade 5, at not exceeding $1,300 each; 4,122 clerks, grade 4, at not exceeding $1,200 each; 78 clerks, grade 3, at not exceeding $1,100 each; 79 clerks, grade 2, at not exceeding $1,000 each; 2,605 clerks, grade 1, at not exceeding $900 each; in all, $28,208,300: Provided, That hereafter clerks assigned as clerks in charge of crews consisting of more than one clerk shall be clerks of grades 5 to 10, inclusive, and may be promoted one grade only after three years' satisfactory and faithful service in such capacity: Provided further, That railway postal clerks shall be credited with full time when deadheading under orders of the department, and the appointment and assignment of clerks hereunder shall be so made during the fiscal year as not to involve a greater aggregate expenditure than this sum; and, to enable the Postmaster General to reclassify the salaries of railway postal clerks and make necessary appointments and promotions, he may exceed the number of clerks in such of the grades as may be necessary: Provided, That the number of clerks in the aggregate as herein authorized be not exceeded.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question of the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. In my district there is a great deal of complaint on the part of business men and others over the delay of the mail. The mail is often 24 hours late. I have been told that this is due to the policy of the Post Office Department in taking off these railway mail clerks. I was told that mail postmarked on the 21st of December, for instance, was worked by the railway mail clerks coming out of Chicago on the 27th of December. I have been told that mail has been delayed the same way in other parts of the country. My information is that the delay is due to the policy of the department in taking off railway mail clerks and putting them into the terminals at a reduced grade or salary. Mail that in former years was worked in postal cars is now taken into the terminals and held until it can be worked there; put into proper vouchers to go on its way.

In looking over this paragraph I find that the clerks provided for in the paragraph are very much less in number than have been carried in former bills. For instance, in the act providing for the Post Office Service for the fiscal year 1914–15 there were 1,587 more postal clerks provided for than are provided for in this bill for 1917–18, notwithstanding the natural increase in the volume of mail generally and the great increase of parcel-post packages during that time.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman wants to know what I know about it?

Mr. MAPES. I want to ask if the Post Office Committee has ever made any investigation of this subject or the cause of these delays?

Mr. MOON. I do not think the Post Office Committee has gone into any investigation of that sort, because there has been no complaint of that sort before the committee. I understand, only in a general way, that in the administration of the office of Postmaster General, by the advice of his employees, he has in many instances reduced the crew because it is not essential to the public work; the crew can be reduced and the men be kept at work with less expense to the Government. Whatever action has been taken in the line has effected an economy. I do not think it will be found upon investigation, although I know nothing about it, that any delay has occurred by the lessening of the crew. We have had no complaint before us. Of course, during the holiday season there are more or less delays with any sized crew.

Mr. MAPES. I will say to the gentleman that in my district mail from Chicago can come over in one night's run, but there has been complaint from business men, which I have taken up with the department, that it is often 48 hours from the time their mail is put in the post office at Chicago before it is delivered in Grand Rapids and Holland. There is no delay in the train service to that extent.

Mr. MOON. I do not know, of course, any specific cause for delays. It may be that the gentleman has some cause for complaint, which he ought to bring to the notice of the department. The Post Office Committee is a legislative committee and does not undertake to settle any administrative proposition. We furnish all the service that the department says that it needs, and in some cases the committee thinks that they get some that they do not need, but the committee has been very liberal in giving all that was asked for where it did not appear clearly that too much had been asked for.

Mr. MAPES. Can the gentleman tell us why there has been such a material reduction in the number of clerks?

Mr. MOON. That was due to readjustment largely of the crews. The department felt that it could get along with the number of men recommended; of course, these men have gone to other positions where their services were needed more. There may not be much difference in the cost in dollars and cents, but the department regards it as a better administrative proposition. I think the gentleman can have his troubles corrected, if they are not merely temporary.

Mr. MAPES. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to this fact: In line 3, page 17, this bill provides for 796 clerks in grade 6; in the act of 1914 there were 2,318 and in 1915 there were 3,708 in grade 6, several times more than are carried in this bill several years later.

Mr. MOON. New clerks, the gentleman is talking about?

Mr. MAPES. No.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman will find that the grades have been changed from one to the other.

Mr. MAPES. Take grade 5. In 1914 you provided for 5,292, and in this bill you provide for 2,403.

Mr. MOON. Well, some have gone up in automatic promotion and the grades changed. It is impossible for me to tell the gentleman why it is that the department makes a specific recommendation as to the change of a few clerks, except in a general way. I, of course, can not go into detail and tell you so many more clerks are needed at one place and so many less at another. It is in the general administration of the department and the effort to economize and obtain good, efficient service that these reductions have been made. If it so happens that at some place the service is not as efficient as it had been, of course it would be erroneous to make those changes there, and I would suggest that the gentleman refer the facts in his case to the department and they no doubt can correct it.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, it is perfectly patent that mail that was heretofore worked on the railway postal cars and now turned into the terminals to be worked there must necessarily be delayed, and when there is any great volume of mail it is simply piled up in these terminals until the clerks in the terminals can work it over. This means a delay sometimes of 24 hours, and sometimes a delay of several days, as I am informed. It is simply evidence of the fact that this particular economy of the Post Office Department is at the expense of the Postal Service.

Mr. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 18, line 3, after the word "exceeded," strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the words "Provided further, That hereafter when railway postal clerks are transferred from one assignment to another because of changes in the service their salaries shall not be reduced."

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, on that I make the point of order that it is new law.

Mr. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that the point of order will lie, for the simple reason that previously in the paragraph there were at least two provisions that were subject to the point of order, and the point was not raised.

Mr. MOON. What has that to do with this?

Mr. VAN DYKE. Consequently this amendment is germane to the section under discussion, and I believe is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. MOON. I am perfectly willing to have the Chair rule upon it. I do not care to discuss the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment changes existing law and sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For inland transportation of mail by electric and cable cars, $581,000: Provided, That the rate of compensation to be paid per mile shall not exceed the rate now paid to companies performing such service, except that the Postmaster General, in cases where the quantity of mail is large and the number of exchange points numerous, may, in his discretion, authorize payment for closed-pouch service at a rate per mile not to exceed one-third above the rate per mile now paid for closed-pouch service; and for mail cars and apartments carrying the mails, not to exceed the rate of 1 cent per linear foot per car-mile of travel: Provided further, That the rates for electric car service on routes over 20 miles in length outside of cities shall not exceed the rates paid for service on steam railroads: Provided, however, That not to exceed $15,000 of the sum hereby appropriated may be expended, in the discretion of the Postmaster General, where unusual conditions exist or where such service will be more expeditious and efficient and at no greater cost than otherwise, and not to exceed $100,000 of this appropriation may be expended for regulation screen or motor screen wagon service which may be authorized in lieu of electric or cable car service.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes on a matter which is related to this section, though perhaps not in order upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, in my judgment, it was most unfortunate that the point of order was made against that part of the bill which provided for the experimental use of aeroplanes for the mail service. I have great faith in the future of aerial navigation. I believe that it is the duty, and at this time it would seem to be the opportunity, of the United States to take the lead in the development of aeronautics for peaceful purposes. I had prepared an amendment increasing the amount in the bill from $100,000 to $200,000.

In Europe, as we know, the development of the use of aircraft has been abnormal, not to say uncanny, but almost exclusively for war purposes. It is already the principal factor in directing the army in action, and performs a most important function in the navy. It is the natural enemy of the submarine and possibly the best agent with which to fight this dangerous sea craft. All of Europe, however, has done nothing, comparatively, toward its use for peaceful purposes. Here we have the great opportunity of developing this new means of transportation for use in peaceful pursuits, and we should not neglect it. After the present war is over naval armament may decrease, large armies are sure to dwindle, but I for one believe that the air service has come to stay, and that it will grow in importance in peace as well as in war. If we should ever be so unfortunate as to become involved in war, every expert who is able to drive an air machine will be worth his weight in gold.

Considerable sums have been appropriated for use by the Army and Navy and are being expended just now in attempting to establish and build up in this country an adequate aviation service as a part of our national defense. Here is an opportunity to utilize by cooperation some of this money for peaceful purposes, because the Army and the Navy have expressed themselves as ready to cooperate with the Post Office Department in providing for the delivery of mail by aeroplane. I believe that there should be an appropriation made, and I hope that the other end of the Capitol will add such an appropriation to this bill, in order that we may begin the use of aeroplane service in the carrying of the mails. I should like to see an aeroplane route from every large city to every other. I should like to see before the end of the fiscal year for which we are now appropriating an aeroplane mail route from my home city of New Haven to the city of New York, and one from New York to Philadelphia or Washington. There is much important mail that might well be carried in this way. It would thus serve a positively useful purpose in our business life, besides the training that it will give the aviators and the development in aircraft that will surely result from it.

We have already appointed a national advisory board to handle the subject. That body has appointed a subcommittee composed of Lieut. Col. Squier, now in charge of the aviation section of the Signal Corps of the Army, Dr. Stratton, Director of the Bureau of Standards, and Dr. Marvin, Director of the Weather Bureau, who have offered to the Post Office Department their fullest cooperation.

We are at this time carrying the mail by aeroplane from the Mexican border to Gen. Pershing at Colonia Dublan, a distance of 110 miles. It takes a passenger automobile eight hours to make that trip. It takes an autotruck train more than a day, and yet the aeroplanes we now have in the service carry the mail and make the trip in 66 minutes. Gen. Scriven, now the head of the Signal Corps, a short time ago made the trip as a passenger by aeroplane from Columbus, N. Mex., to Colonia Dublan. Gen. Pershing could come to the border for a conference in 66 minutes and nobody know anything about it. We should not neglect the opportunity we have of developing and using this great service.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. FESS. In carrying the mail down on the border, have there been any interruptions in the service?

Mr. TILSON. The horsepower of the engines in the first aeroplanes that we used down there was not powerful enough and they did not succeed well in the higher altitude. The horsepower of the engines, however, has been increased up to 160, and any we now have of this type make the regular trip without any difficulty. As I have said, regular service is now maintained between Columbus and Colonia Dublan.

Mr. FESS. We could have reliance upon mail delivery in that way in the future?

Mr. TILSON. Undoubtedly. Perhaps weather conditions might interfere to some extent, but that is one reason why we ought to adopt the service, so that we may develop a service which will be of great value in time of peace and of absolute necessity in time of war.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform the committee the weight of mail being carried in these aeroplanes?

Mr. TILSON. Well, there are all kinds of aeroplanes capable of carrying different weights. It depends upon what you build your aircraft for, as I said before.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has stated a concrete instance of mail being transported from the border down to the camp where Gen. Pershing's troops are encamped. Can the gentleman give the amount of mail one of these aeroplanes has carried, and of these aeroplanes?

Mr. TILSON. I do not know just the amount in pounds and ounces, but I know that Gen. Scriven, a man probably twice the size of the gentleman, was carried as a passenger, and his weight alone would make a considerable package of mail.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is not any great feat. We all know that aeroplanes have reached that development where they will carry an extra passenger beside the navigator. The gentleman has made some investigation and says this service is practicable, and I wish to inquire how much weight is being carried, and the gentleman does not seem to have that information.

Mr. TILSON. I do not know exactly how much could be carried by one of our present machines. Probably four or five hundred pounds. In Europe the very large aeroplanes seem to carry indefinite weight in the shape of bombs, machine guns, wireless apparatus, and such appliances, and it seems to be capable of indefinite expansion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TILSON. I ask unanimous consent for three minutes more in order to yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman speaks of the use of aeroplanes in Mexico. Can they fly high enough to be immune from attacks of the enemy on terra firma?

Mr. TILSON. Oh, yes. So far as Mexico is concerned, there are no aeroplanes to be used against us there and no antiaircraft guns, but in the European war it is necessary for them to fly very high. The highest battle I think I have heard of was fought at an altitude of over 19,000 feet, which is nearly 4 miles high—certainly too high for any antiaircraft gun yet produced.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I yield.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Could an aeroplane carry in the atmosphere of Alaska?

Mr. TILSON. I do not think there will be any difficulty at all to get sufficient horsepower to carry in all sorts of altitudes and latitudes. When you reach 19,000 feet, that is a considerable altitude.

I think we ought not to lose the opportunity of developing this service. As I said in another connection, after this war is over the armament of navies may decline; the armies of Europe will certainly dwindle, but the air service will remain as the greatest development of this awful war. Why should not we, the greatest of nations now at peace, point the way in the use of this wonderful agency for purposes of peace? Let us use it in peace time for economic purposes as well as for the training of men for service in time of war. It will be of incalculable advantage to us if we can develop a number of men who are experts in the navigation of the air. They will be literally worth their weight in gold, in case of war. For that reason, it seems to me, instead of simply training men to fly in time of war for purposes of destruction, necessary as this may be, we should also use the same agency for the purposes of peace. I shall be very sorry not to see an experimental appropriation in this bill to begin the good work; but I hope the omission will be supplied in another body before the bill comes out of conference.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the gentleman acquainted with the purpose of the Postmaster General in asking for this appropriation, that it is to experiment with Zeppelins?

Mr. TILSON. I do not understand it to be so.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman had read the Postmaster General's report he would not have any mistaken idea about that.

Mr. TILSON. I do not believe that to be the present attitude of the Post Office Department. I talked with Mr. Praeger, the Second Assistant Postmaster General, and I feel sure he has no such idea whatsoever in reference to the use of the Zeppelin. His idea is, if I understand his position right, that this appropriation is to be used for aeroplanes as stated in the part of the bill stricken out on the point of order of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. CANNON. Would an amendment using the word "aeroplane" exclude the use of a Zeppelin?

Mr. TILSON. I am not sure, but think that would exclude a Zeppelin.

Mr. CANNON. It seems that the objection of the gentleman from Wisconsin is that a Zeppelin might be used. Now, I am inclined to believe that an appropriation ought to be made for one or both, and if there is any doubt about the use of a Zeppelin can not the gentleman devise an amendment which would apply to an aeroplane and exclude a Zeppelin?

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman will permit, I will say that the word "aeroplane" means a machine heavier than air and that always has been its well-defined meaning and that would exclude a Zeppelin. Furthermore, you could not undertake to build a Zeppelin with $100,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask the same privilege.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I would ask unanimous consent to return to the paragraph in reference to aeroplanes for carrying mail.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to return to the paragraph indicated.

Mr. MOON. We can not go back to that paragraph now.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I thought the gentleman was in favor of the proposition?

Mr. MOON. But I am not in favor of going back right now.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOON. Would it not be better for these gentlemen to defer those speeches until we get down to the main part of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, confirming the position I took in making the point of order concerning a provision that has just been referred to by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], I wish to call the attention of the committee to the report of the Postmaster General upon which I base my objection. It is found on page 46 of the report, and is as follows:

From published reports of aerial operations abroad it would appear that the dirigible-balloon type of airship had been so perfected that it would convey great weight. In fact, the last statements that appear in connection with the subject assert that 300 passengers may be carried in an airship. This would approximate 15 tons net weight. The department is interested in determining the practicability of this method of transportation with a view to its utilization. It is suggested that authorization be given for experiments to be made with this type of conveyor. For aerial experimentations an appropriation of $100,000 is recommended.

With the extravagant use of public money by the Signal Corps services in the appropriation carried in last year's military appropriation bill of $13,000,000, under which they are authorizing experiments in every machine shop in this country that will manufacture or attempt to manufacture some motor that may be of use in aerial navigation, I think we have gone plenty far enough with that extravagant policy without delegating a similar line of experiment to another branch of the service. Let the naval and the military arms of the Government develop these matters, and when developed, for which the Government is paying heavily, then it will be time to utilize that service in connection with the Postal Service.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For transportation of foreign mails, $3,720,900: Provided, That the Postmaster General shall be authorized to expend such sums as may be necessary, not exceeding $103,000, to cover the cost to the United States of maintaining sea post service on steampships conveying the mails.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Will the chairman advise us whether this appropriation is the same as it was last year?

Mr. MOON. It is a decrease of $79,100.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Has the committee any information as to the stoppage of or the interference with United States mails on the high seas?

Mr. MOON. No. That has not been brought to our committee at all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is reported occasionally in the newspapers that there has been some stoppage of United States mails.

Mr. MOON. It may have been done, but I have never paid any attention to the newspapers about these things.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is the gentleman or the committee advised as to a foreign censorship exercised over the mails of the United States?

Mr. MOON. Nothing of that sort has been brought before our committee. It is a matter, I take it, that belongs to the Department of State rather than to the Post Office Department.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is a fact, however, that foreign mail that is coming in bears evidence of being censored by a foreign power.

Mr. MOON. That is a matter over which we would have no jurisdiction.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If it does not affect the appropriation I will not press the inquiry.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of clerk-hire increase in the present bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOON. Leave has been granted to everybody heretofore.

The Clerk read as follows:

For stationery for the Postal Service, including blanks, books, printed and engraved matter, binding and carbuo paper, and other miscellaneous items for the money-order and registry systems; also the preparation, publication, and free distribution by postmasters to the public of pamphlet containing general postal information; and also pay of one envelope inspector at $1,800 per annum, and one assistant at $900 per annum $522,000.

Mr. MOON. In that which has just been read, in line 17, there occurs the word "carbuo." It should be "carbon."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

POSTAL SAVINGS SYSTEM.

For the purchase of supplies for the Postal Savings System, including blank books, forms, pamphlets, rubber stamps, canceling devices, certificates and cards and stamps for use in evidencing deposits, and free penalty envelopes; and for the reimbursement of the Secretary of the Treasury for expenses incident to the preparation, issue, and registration of the bonds authorized by the act of June 25, 1910, $25,000.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, this is a decrease in this item of $50,000. It was made on the suggestion of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General. Heretofore it has been $75,000. On consideration of the matter by the department, they think they will probably need an additional $35,000, and I move to amend so that the law may be in accordance with the previous law on the subject. I move to amend by striking out "$25,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$75,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 22, line 6, strike out "$25,000" and insert "$75,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For inland transportation by star routes (excepting service in Alaska), including temporary service to newly established offices, $8,675,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for continuance of any star-route service the patronage of which shall be served entirely by the extension of rural delivery service, nor shall any of said sum be expended for the establishment of new star-route service for a patronage which is already entirely served by rural delivery service.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

In various times in the past I have criticized the Post Office Department in general and the office of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General in particular because of the parsimonious attitude of that office, as I viewed it, in the matter of the establishment and improvement of star routes. I rise now for the purpose of bearing testimony—I think it is my duty to do that—to a more satisfactory view and attitude evidenced in the last few months on the part of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General's office in this regard. Not that we are securing or have secured all the star-route service that we should have in the western country, but we are receiving—at least, that has been my experience—a more sympathetic and—part of the time, at least—a more favorable consideration of our requests.

The department in the past has been possessed of and obsessed with the idea that those who have gone to the frontier and who have settled in far-distant localities are not entitled to much consideration at the hands of the Postal Service unless it can be shown that the service that they ask for and desire will measurably pay. We all know that in the widely scattered settlements and homes of the mountains and of the western plains the service can not be made to pay from the standpoint of the actual local stamp cancellation. At the same time we have always held to the view that an American settler, an American citizen, an American pioneer, wherever he might go, was entitled to have the Postal Service of the country follow him, not necessarily with frequent service, but with occasional service at least.

I want to bear testimony to the fact that the department in the recent past has improved much in its view, attitude, and action in these matters as compared with the policy of a number of years past. There is still room for further improvement, but I feel it my duty to say that we are securing better service and more favorable consideration of our requests than formerly.

The carrying of mail over the star routes of the sparsely settled and mountainous portions of the West is one of the services and enterprises of Government which still retains much of the character and flavor of the adventurous occupations of the old frontier. With wagon and sled, on horseback, on skis or snowshoes, and in these later days sometimes with a jitney, crossing sun-scorched and wind-swept plains and snow-covered highlands, toiling through gorge and canyon, breasting mountain torrents and scaling mountain passes, the star-route carrier, in torrid heat and numbing blasts, carries to the isolated ranch, the newly-established homestead settlement, the snowbound miner and prospector, letters from the old home and the newspapers and magazines which keep the dwellers in these frontier sections in touch and sympathy with the doings of the great world outside. It is a service of the most arduous and exacting kind and character, and yet, of all governmental services with which I am familiar, it is the least adequately compensated. Like all pioneer work and like many of the world's most rugged tasks, he who performs it is called upon to take a considerable portion of his recompense in the satisfaction of a hard and useful service well performed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, while I am on this subject of western overland postal routes, known as star routes, let me call attention to the fact that the star-route service in the sparsely settled and mountain West is the first cousin and the immediate successor of the old transcontinental pony express, that picturesque service performed by the hard riding, death-defying couriers of the desert and the mountains, whose exploits and adventures appealed so strongly to the hearts and imaginations of a former generation.

The pony express became possible through the courage and daring of those who serving as the scouts and guides of expeditions, civil and military, which penetrated or crossed the region of the frontier, acquired the experience and developed the nerve which made them competent to traverse wide, unguarded areas with speed and certainty.

The winged couriers of the air brought us yesterday from a beautiful city of that section so recently the frontier, in whose early, heroic, and adventurous days he was so striking and conspicuous a figure, the story of the peaceful passing over the range to his final camping ground of one of the finest and most heroic figures of the old scouting, pioneering, and pony express days—Col. William Frederick Cody. [Applause.]

It is meet and proper, in my opinion, that we should pause a moment in the consideration of these items covering the Postal Service in that western land so recently desert and wilderness, now so strangely a combination and mixture of these conditions and of culture and cultivation and development of the highest order, to speak of this man, who was the beau ideal of the romance and the chivalry, of the courage and the daring of the good old pioneer days of the Golden West.

Whatever others may have contributed to the history of that time and region to the work of development that has brought so marvelous a transformation into many sections of the old West, of the mountains, and the plains, no one will challenge Col. Cody's premiership in contribution to those thrilling and inspiring episodes, to the pleasing and picturesque illumination of those incidents and characteristics of his period and section, which have most charmed and challenged, inspired and thrilled the Nation and the world.

Superbly comely and handsome in form and figure, with a poise and carriage which any king might have envied, possessed of a personal courage never questioned or challenged, intrepid as a gladiator, courtly as a prince, kindly and considerate in act and attitude, it scarcely required the genius of a Buntline to enshrine him the hero and idol in the hearts of the youth of the land, young and old, which his native qualities made him to those who knew him.

Other men have illustrated in a more marked degree some one of the many attractive qualities and shining virtues which Col. Cody possessed, but no man ever lived in the West who combined, as he did, the sterling qualities which make men useful in stirring and soul-testing days, with the graces of person and manner which complete and round out the figure of an ideal representative of a time and condition curiously blending the extremes of hardship and romance.

He passed away as he had lived, a courageous soul, calm-eyed and even-pulsed, in the presence of the inevitable, heroic, gracious, considerate, and thus preserved for the Nation the charming ideal of character which has and will continue to make the story of William F. Cody, "Buffalo Bill," of intense and absorbing interest to those whose hearts remain young and respond to the thrills of romance and adventure. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of rural carriers, substitutes for rural carriers on annual leave, clerks in charge of rural stations, and tolls and ferriage, Rural Delivery Service, and for the incidental expenses thereof, $53,000,000.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I wish to offer at that point, unless it is desired that I wait until the whole section shall have been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state to the gentleman that the bill is being read by paragraphs.

Mr. MOON. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That not to exceed $20,000 of the amount hereby appropriated may be used for the compensation of clerks in charge of rural stations: Provided further, That on and after July 1, 1917, rural carriers shall receive a salary not exceeding $2,000 per annum, and their maximum salary shall be based on the length of their routes, the time required to serve them, and the number of pieces and weight of mail transported: And provided further, That on and after July 1, 1917, the minimum compensation of rural carriers shall be as follows: On routes of 24 miles and over, six times a week, $1,200 per annum, payable monthly; on routes 22 miles and less than 24 miles, $1,152; on routes 20 miles and less than 22 miles, $1,080; on routes 18 miles and less than 20 miles, $960; on routes 16 miles and less than 18 miles, $840; on routes 14 miles and less than 16 miles, $720; on routes 12 miles and less than 14 miles, $672; on routes 10 miles and less than 12 miles, $624; on routes 8 miles and less than 10 miles, $576; on routes 6 miles and less than 8 miles, $528; on routes 4 miles and less than 6 miles, $480. A rural carrier serving one triweekly route shall be paid on the basis for a route one-half of the length of the route served by him, and a carrier serving two triweekly routes shall be paid on the basis for a route one-half of the combined length of the two routes: And provided further, That no rural route on which the use of a motor vehicle would be required shall be established unless a motor vehicle can be operated thereon with reasonable regularity for 12 months in the year: And provided further, That when any route is authorized that absorbs or eliminates existing routes the carriers affected thereby shall be retained in the order of their relative efficiency.

Mr. MOON and Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Mississippi rise? The gentleman from Tennessee is the chairman of the committee.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I desire to make a point of order.

Mr. MOON. And I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order will be reserved, and the Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MOON. The point of order, Mr. Chairman, if made at all, will come after the amount, "$53,000,000."

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. It comes after that language.

Mr. MOON. I want to offer an amendment, Mr. Chairman, which does not affect that.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Tennessee offered his amendment to the first part of the paragraph, of course the regular proceeding would debar the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. My point of order is made to that part beginning on page 26, line 9, the proviso there, and running down to line 12 on the same page; beginning with the word "and," on line 9, and ending with the word "year," on line 12.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on another provision in that paragraph, on lines 13 and 14 of page 25. I want to make a point of order on the words "the time required to serve them, and the number of pieces and weight of mail transported," on lines 13 and 14.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order on that part of the paragraph commencing on line 10, on page 25, and all of the succeeding parts of the paragraph down to and including line 15, on page 26, for the reason that it is new legislation, not authorized by existing law, and in contravention of existing law.

Mr. MOON. That is from line 7, after the "$53,000,000," is it?

Mr. TOWNER. It commences on line 10, or rather near the end of line 9, at the beginning of the proviso.

Mr. MOON. Beginning with "Provided, further." The balance of it you will not make a point of order on?

Mr. TOWNER. No.

Mr. MOON. Now, Mr. Chairman, in behalf of these apostles of the free rural carriers [laughter], I will concede the point of order on all this language.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and directs the Clerk to strike from the bill, commencing on page 25, line 9, the language "Provided further," down to and including the word "transported," line 14, and on page 26——

Mr. TOWNER. Down to and including line 15, on page 26.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MOON. There ought to be a period after the word "stations."

Mr. MANN. Does it strike out all of the paragraph after the word "stations"?

Mr. MOON. Yes; it all goes out. There ought to be a period after the word "stations."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the section to which the gentleman from Tennessee offers his amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of rural carriers, substitutes for rural carriers on annual leave, clerks in charge of rural stations, and tolls and ferriage, Rural Delivery Service, and for the incidental expenses thereof, $53,000,000.

Mr. MOON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOON: After the amount "$53,000,000," on page 25, line 7, insert:

"Provided, That the greater maximum yearly salary shall hereafter be paid to the rural carrier on Lake Winnepesaukee who furnishes his own equipment."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I want to inquire how much of that paragraph went out?

Mr. MOON. All of it went out.

The CHAIRMAN. All of the paragraph following line 9, page 25, down to and including line 15 on page 26.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. AUSTIN: In line 4, page 26——

Mr. COADY. That is out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that that part of the bill has been stricken out.

Mr. AUSTIN. Then I offer it to follow the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Tennessee, the chairman of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the gentleman's amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. AUSTIN, following the amendment just adopted: After the word "equipment," on page 25, add the following: "On routes 26 miles and more than 34 miles, $1,248"——

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the amendment. It is contrary to existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment had better be read throughout. The Chair can not rule on it until the reading of it has been finished by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On routes 26 miles and more than 24 miles, $1,248; on routes 28 miles and more than 26 miles, $1,320; on routes 30 miles and more than 28 miles, $1,440; on routes 32 miles and more than 30 miles, $1,560; on routes 34 miles and more than 32 miles, $1,680; on routes 36 miles and more than 34 miles, $1,728.

Mr. MOON. I made my point of order because enough of the amendment has been read to show that the whole of it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. AUSTIN. I wanted to have the whole of it read, to show the gentleman that he ought not to make a point of order against it.

Mr. MOON. Now, it has all been read, and I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] on the point of order.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, this bill seeks to reduce the compensation of the rural carriers where the route is less than the standard route of 24 miles. If we have the right under the provisions of this bill to reduce the compensation on account of the reduced number of miles served by a rural carrier, we ought also to have the right to increase the compensation for carrying the mail more than the standard number of miles. In other words, if the carrier should be docked or reduced on account of a less number of miles, in all fairness he ought to be paid increased compensation where the department orders an extension of the route.

Mr. MOON. Does not my colleague understand that there is now a law providing for the compensation of carriers?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. MOON. And does not my colleague propose to amend that law?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; by improving it.

Mr. MOON. And because the gentleman proposes to change that law I make the point of order against it.

Mr. AUSTIN. I want to improve it in the interest of fairness.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair is not concerned with the merits of the proposition. The matter for the Chair to determine is whether the amendment is in order.

Under the rules of the House an amendment proposing legislation to an appropriation bill is not in order unless it comes within one of the excepted classes provided in the Holman rule.

The amendment in question is clearly legislation and does not come within the excepted clauses, and the Chair is constrained to sustain the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For village delivery service in towns and villages having post offices of the second or third class, $500,000.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee if this does not double the appropriation made last year for this purpose?

Mr. MOON. Yes; it doubles it.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. I want to ask the purpose of that increase. Is it to double the number of villages that are getting this free delivery?

Mr. MOON. Under the old law it was an experimental proposition, and there were a number of villages that got the benefit of the appropriation. The result of that was that every village which had the service reported to the department that it had brought better lighting, better streets, and better service to the patrons of the post office than any other method that had been had. The department required those conditions of better lighting and better streets and sidewalks before the service went into effect. They reported that it had been very beneficial to them all. The last Congress therefore made this a permanent law, and the experimental proposition was stricken out. This year we propose to extend it by doubling the amount, so as to let it go to other villages. I take it that the growth of this proposition will be something like that of the rural delivery, which was begun in the same way, and that finally it will be extended to all villages in the United States that now have neither city delivery nor rural delivery, and that this new service will ultimately accommodate perhaps 20,000,000 people.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Certain requirements will be made of the towns that apply for this sort of service?

Mr. MOON. Oh, yes. The department requires good sidewalks, good lights, and good streets. It is of great benefit to the towns that have it.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. I am in favor of it. Is it the probability that free village delivery will finally be provided in all the villages that comply with the requirements of the department?

Mr. MOON. Yes; so that we shall ultimately have free delivery in the cities, in the villages, and in the country.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Is there any rule now fixed by which the department determines what villages shall get this service?

Mr. MOON. No.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Is there any requirement of population?

Mr. MOON. No; it is in the discretion of the department. The villages that comply with the requirements as to light, and so on, get it. Most of them can do it.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. I am glad to state that under the experimental law which was passed, one of the villages in my district was a beneficiary, and this service has proven to be a very popular one. I would be glad to see it extended to other villages.

Mr. MOON. I hope that may be done.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Postmaster General is hereby authorized to prescribe regulations for the establishment and maintenance of a guaranty fund, to be derived from assessments levied against and collected from officers and employees of the Postal Service accountable for funds or property, with which to make good losses resulting from the failure of any officer or employee of the Postal Service to properly discharge his official duty and for the indemnification of the Government and any person or persons sustaining such loss or losses by payments out of such funds; but nothing herein shall be construed as binding the Government or the Postmaster General to make any such payment or reimbursement.

Mr. COADY. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the whole of section 2.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, the bill, so far as appropriations are concerned, has been completed. The sections numbered 2 to 11, inclusive are, all of them, new law. Therefore all of those sections are subject to the point of order unless the House thinks it wise to take up some one of them and waive the point of order.

I want to remark generally in reference to these sections of new law that, taken in the aggregate, these 10 new sections will secure the people of the United States against a loss of more than $100,000,000 annually.

This particular second section, which is objected to by the gentleman from Maryland, is objected to by the bonding companies of the United States. I take it the people have no objection to it, but the bonding companies that charge a high price for the bonding of officers and of people who make contracts with the Government are very bitterly opposed to this section. They had a hearing on it once before. The Government is not seeking to go into business in this matter, but it can provide for a number of its employees an indemnity that will protect the Government against all loss at a rate about 25 per cent less than these bonding companies charge.

It also will provide an indemnity for the Government against losses incident to the employment of men now not governed by the bonding companies, and the Government can save itself by hundreds of thousands of dollars by the failure of the bonding companies to respond to losses. Of course, the objection that this is new law is well taken. I am not going to insist on the gentleman withdrawing his point of order. If he thinks more of the bonding companies of Baltimore and other places than he does of the Government, let him make it. I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That section 3929, Revised Statutes, be, and is, amended so as to read as follows:

"The Postmaster General may, upon evidence satisfactory to him that any person or company is engaged in conducting any lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme of any kind offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance, or other contingency, or that any person or company is conducting any scheme or device for obtaining money or property of any kind through the mails by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations, or promises, or that any person or company is selling, offering for sale, or sending through the mails any article, device, or thing designed or intended for the conduct of a lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme of any kind offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance, or other contingency, or any unfair, dishonest, or cheating gambling article, device, or thing, instruct postmasters at any post office at which letters or other matter arrive directed to any such person or company, or to the agent or representative of any such person or company, whether such agent or representative is acting as an individual or as a firm, bank, corporation, or association of any kind, to return all such letters or other matter to the postmaster at the office at which they were originally mailed, with the word 'fraudulent' plainly written or stamped upon the outside thereof, and all such letters so returned to such postmasters shall be by them returned to the writers thereof under such regulations as the Postmaster General may prescribe. But nothing contained in this section shall be so construed as to authorize any postmaster or other person to open any letter not addressed to himself. The public advertisement by such person or company so conducting such lottery, gift enterprise, scheme, or device that remittances for the same may be made by letters to any other person, firm, bank, corporation, or association named therein shall be held to be prima facie evidence of the existence of said agency by all the parties named therein; but the Postmaster General shall not be precluded from ascertaining the existence of such agency in any other legal way satisfactory to himself."

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee what change there is in the law in this paragraph?

Mr. MOON. This is an enlargement of the original law. For the exact language I will refer the gentleman to the hearings, page 85.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I want to ask the gentleman if under the provisions of this section where it uses the words "scheme of any kind," whether or not, if this becomes a law, it would not forbid a newspaper which advertised an automobile contest for the purpose of increasing its subscription or a mercantile establishment offering prizes for conducting a special sale? Would not they be forbidden to advertise it?

Mr. MOON. What part of the paragraph does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Well, for instance, in line 21, where it says "or scheme of any kind."

Mr. MOON. Yes; that would enlarge the statute against gambling and unfair and dishonest cheating methods. There is no question about that, whether it was performed by a newspaper or a church bazaar or Masonic order or anybody else.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Under the statement of the chairman of the committee, Mr. Chairman, I will make the point of order against the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman can not make the point of order now. No point of order was made against it. The gentleman made a motion to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will have to reverse his ruling. It was made on the theory that the point of order was made and the gentleman from Tennessee conceded the point of order.

Mr. MOON. I said in the beginning that points of order were well taken if they were made, but the gentleman from Kentucky did not make the point of order, but proceeded to discuss his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was about to state that as the gentleman from Kentucky made no point of order and offered an amendment, it is too late now to make the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words in order to ask a question about this paragraph. I take it that this would prevent a church from sending out tickets through the mails if the purpose was to sell prizes.

Mr. MOON. I believe if churches are engaged in any matter that was construed by law to be a lottery that it would affect the church like any other person or institution.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I read from the paragraph:

The Postmaster General may, upon evidence satisfactory to him that any person or company is engaged in conducting any lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme of any kind offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance, or other contingency.

That would seem to prevent a church from selling tickets for a chance on articles at a fair or a political club from selling chances. And it would probably prevent a newspaper from offering prizes—a piano, for instance—in order to increase its subscriptions? I am seeking information as to the meaning of the paragraph. Would it stop the practices indicated?

Mr. MOON. The language of the paragraph is:

The Postmaster General may, upon evidence satisfactory to him that any person or company is engaged in conducting any lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme of any kind offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance, or other contingency, or that any person or company is conducting any scheme or device for obtaining money or property of any kind through the mails by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations, or promises, or that any person or company is selling, offering for sale, or sending through the mails any article, device, or thing designed or intended for the conduct of a lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme of any kind offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance, or other contingency, or any unfair, dishonest, or cheating gambling article, device or thing.

The whole effect of it is to prevent the passing through the mail not only the whole but parts of the scheme or device intended as a game of chance, lottery, or gift enterprise.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Must the scheme necessarily be false or fraudulent?

Mr. MOON. It does not affect those that are not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The newspaper that advertises a piano in order to increase its list of subscribers——

Mr. MOON. I do not think that would be subject to this act.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. I want to say to the gentleman that the Post Office Department has already determined that the giving away of pianos, diamond rings, and so forth, upon votes obtained in connection with subscriptions to a newspaper was not a lottery.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The Postmaster General has so ruled?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is the point I was trying to get at. What are we trying to do by this paragraph?

Mr. TOWNER. They have held that that is not a lottery. This applies to lotteries and fraudulent devices.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then fraud and false pretense must be shown, otherwise this paragraph is of no particular effect?

Mr. TOWNER. I would think so.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It may be, Mr. Chairman, that this is one of those paragraphs of the bill that will save the people $100,000,000, but I am not quite sure of it and I am not sure that any great purpose is being accomplished if proof has to be shown of fraud or false pretense. We are still subject to the receipt of cards, tickets, importunities to take chances, and we are still subject to the newspapers that want to give a piano away for the largest number of subscribers.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, this is only a revision of existing law, and it makes a very small change in the law. It was explained at length by the solicitor of the Post Office Department, Mr. Lamar, in the hearings, and it will be found on page 90, near the bottom of that page, that the purpose was to amend these two sections by giving authority to the Postmaster General to also issue such an order against any person or concern found to be using the mails in the traffic of anything intended for the conduct of a lottery or traffic in any cheating or gambling device.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does this give the Postmaster General greater or less power than he has had heretofore?

Mr. STEENERSON. It adds to the things which are prohibited in these statutes. It adds "or other contingency," in defining a lottery.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] was correct in his statement, and I assume that he was, the Postmaster General seems to have had the power to stop the passage through the mails of letters that contain evidence of lottery and games of chance.

Mr. STEENERSON. He certainly has that power under the lottery law.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What is there new in this paragraph giving increased power to the Postmaster General?

Mr. STEENERSON. The witness before the committee, Mr. Lamar, said it added "or other contingency."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. "Other contingency" might mean a newspaper that is giving a piano away.

Mr. STEENERSON. Oh, no. The necessity for a revision has been proven in many cases. The existing sections have been defined strictly, and they could not reach all of the evil that the statute was intended to remedy.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then the gentleman thinks that this tends to fortify the Postmaster General?

Mr. STEENERSON. I think it gives more protection to the public against fraud, and I think it is safe to pass it. We gave it very careful consideration.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How much money would the Postmaster General save by this?

Mr. STEENERSON. This is not a money saving proposition to the department, but it is to the people of the United States.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is true. A great deal of money is lost every year through fake advertisements and things of that kind. Does the gentleman know how much?

Mr. STEENERSON. I figured it out once that about $300,000,000 are obtained by schemes to defraud through the Post Office Department.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have heard it fixed at $500,000,000.

Mr. STEENERSON. I know there was one gentleman in New York who succeeded in mulcting the public to the extent of $17,000,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The question is whether the committee has given the Postmaster General sufficient authority to stop those frauds that are enacted through the Post Office Department.

Mr. STEENERSON. After prosecuting a great many cases the solicitor for the department has recommended this change to strengthen the law.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman for his very lucid explanation.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That section 4041, Revised Statutes, be and is amended so as to read as follows:

"The Postmaster General may, upon evidence satisfactory to him that any person or company is engaged in conducting any lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme of any kind offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance, or other contingency, or that any person or company is conducting any scheme for obtaining money or property of any kind through the mails by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations, or promises, or that any person or company is selling, offering for sale, or sending through the mails any article, device, or thing designed or intended for the conduct of a lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme of any kind offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance, or other contingency, or any unfair, dishonest, or cheating gambling article, device, or thing, forbid the payment by any postmaster to said person or company of any postal money orders drawn to his or its order, or in his or its favor, or to the agent of any such person or company, whether such agent is acting as an individual or as a firm, bank, corporation, or association of any kind, and may provide by regulation for the return to the remitters of the sums named in such money orders. But this shall not authorize any person to open any letter not addressed to himself. The public advertisement by such person or company so conducting any such lottery, gift enterprise, scheme, or device that remittances for the same may be made by means of postal money orders to any other person, firm, bank, corporation, or association named therein shall be held to be prima facie evidence of the existence of said agency by all the parties named therein; but the Postmaster General shall not be precluded from ascertaining the existence of such agency in any other legal way."

Mr. RICKETTS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The chairman of this committee has already indicated that sections 2 to 11 are all subject to the point of order.

Mr. MOON. What is that?

Mr. RICKETTS. If I understand the chairman rightly, he stated to the committee that sections 2 to 11 are all subject to the point of order.

Mr. MOON. I think so; but I hoped the gentleman on a matter of public morals so seriously affected as this section will not make the point of order.

Mr. RICKETTS. Oh, I do not expect to do that, Mr. Chairman; I simply wanted to say to the House that I would address myself to the provisions of section 10 here. I am compelled to leave soon or I would not take up the time of the committee now. In my district there are four distinct classes of people, namely, the miners who extract the coal from the bowels of the earth, the laboring men who work in the factories, the laboring men who work in the railroad shops, and those who are engaged in agriculture. All of these various classes of men are fairly well organized. I want to say to the Members of this body that I have received letters and telegrams from each and every class of people in my district objecting to this section 10, to this provision known as the Randall amendment, or the zone system.

On the 2d day of January the gentleman from California, Hon. CHARLES H. RANDALL, obtained unanimous consent of the House to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the zone postal system on newspapers and magazines. It seems from his statement in the RECORD that he is interested in the rider attached to the Post Office appropriation bill, which is now being considered by the House. Just why he should have introduced his argument in favor of this rider by extension of remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is not entirely clear to me, nor is it satisfactory, in my judgment, to many Members of this House.

This subject is one of vital importance to the laboring and poorer classes of people in America and should have been presented to this House in a separate and distinct bill, so that the same might have been fully discussed from every angle; but the committee has chosen to bring about this legislation affecting so many people, by hitching onto this appropriation bill a rider which proposes a zone system for the United States with reference to second-class mail matter, the rates of which are proposed to be greatly increased. When a rider is hitched to an important and necessary bill, the rider is usually looked upon as of questionable merit and as covering a subject that will not stand daylight investigation. In a word, an attempt on the part of interested parties to slip something over without discussion. If this zone scheme of rates is worthy of the slightest consideration by Congress, it covers a matter so very important and vital to the public at large that it should be presented as a separate bill and a fair investigation should be made as to its probable effects from every standpoint.

It would seem to me that the object of this legislation, in an indirect way, or in a roundabout way, or in a way not entirely commendable, is to put out of existence all publications with national circulation, including weekly and monthly magazines, and journals pertaining to such subjects as agriculture, medicine, engineering, religion, farm marketing, literature of all kinds, science, art, and practically every other known topic that is beneficial and of the utmost importance to the common people of America under the guise of lowering postage on first-class drop-letter mail, and for the purpose of increasing the revenue to the Government and making the Post Office Department self-supporting.

This rider, which is fathered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RANDALL], owner of a California county weekly, which enjoys free county mail privileges, provides for the zone system for second-class mail matter, the classification under which newspapers and magazines of every description are mailed. The rider is seemingly worked out, either through design or ignorance, to destroy all national magazines, farm journals, and marketing newspapers, and to hand over the patronage now enjoyed by these publications to the local daily papers. Under the rider publications will enjoy the present rate of 1 cent per pound within a radius of 300 miles. This takes very nice care of all daily papers, because none of them has a percentage of circulation outside of the 300-mile limit that is worth while. Daily newspapers are not only local in circulation but local in interest, aim, and object when it comes to the covering of news. The blow calculated as a knock-out punch, which is aimed at all publications having nation-wide circulation, appears in the proposed measure fixing the following second-class rates beyond the 300-mile radius:

From 300 to 600 miles, 2 cents per pound.
From 600 to 1,000 miles, 3 cents per pound.
From 1,000 to 1,400 miles, 4 cents per pound.
From 1,400 to 1,800 miles, 5 cents per pound.
Over 1,800 miles, 6 cents per pound.

The excuse for this proposed change in rates is given as the cost of handling the mail. It is very plain to be seen, however, that if second-class mail matter can be handled within a radius of 300 miles of the publishing point for 1 cent a pound, then the rates beyond the 300-mile radius, as proposed, are excessive, and are calculated to discriminate against the publication with national circulation.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICKETTS. Yes, sir; I will yield.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman name the county weekly that the gentleman from California owns?

Mr. RICKETTS. Well, I can not say I can name it. I saw it printed in all the papers and in one of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS that the gentleman is the owner of a weekly in California. If I am mistaken about that, I beg the gentleman's pardon, but I have been so informed.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from California has not owned any kind of a paper for over two years, and prior to that time the newspaper he did own was not circulated at free county rates, but circulated in the city of Los Angeles.

Mr. BENNET. If the gentleman will permit, I am very glad the gentleman from California made that statement, because I want to say very frankly as a member of the Committee on Rules that most of the periodicals of the country have sent us information that the gentleman was owner of a weekly newspaper directly benefited by the section, so I am very glad to hear he is not.

Mr. RICKETTS. The great magazines and periodicals of the country are of incalculable value in the education and culture of millions of wage earners, young men and young women, and the common people generally, who month by month absorb the contents of these high-class periodicals and not only gain an education but a higher and nobler conception of American citizenship.

Can the Congress of the United States afford to restrict the education of the masses, and a consequent wider conception among those who for one reason or another have been deprived of the advantage of schools? I say no, emphatically no. And this is what the proposed postal rates or zone system will eventually result in.

The publishers of magazines and periodicals can not be expected to donate their services to the uplifting of the people. The increased cost will fall on the consumer. The wage earner, struggling to make both ends meet, will keenly feel the increase. The result will be the diminution in the sales of periodicals and a consequent lessening of educational advantages and an ultimate loss to the general intelligence of the good people of America.

Just a few days ago this House passed the vocational education bill in which $500,000 was appropriated, the purpose of that bill being to reach the boys and girls of the country and to aid them along vocational lines.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RICKETTS. Mr. Chairman, I have not taken one second's time of this House during this session until now, and I would like to have my time extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RICKETTS. Everybody conceded that legislation was wise and I concede it to be wise. It was a step in the right direction, by which hundreds of people will be benefited; but let us not lose sight of the fact that many hundreds of people throughout the United States are being benefited by the magazines that are carried to their homes each and every month. Many of those magazines contain articles written by very capable men upon some of the most important subjects discussed, and of public interest in the United States and of interest to nearly all the people of the United States.

What is the position of the toilers of this country with reference to the proposed legislation? Do the poor common people of America indorse this legislation? Is it proposed in their interest? Is it meant and intended by the gentleman from California to promote their welfare and increase their sources of knowledge and their advantages for education? Certainly not. The interest of the common people is the last thought of Mr. RANDALL. He is more especially interested in protecting the daily newspaper, and I am against any such scheme or attempt on the part of any citizen of the United States to monopolize the reading matter of the Nation.

Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that the printing organizations, composed of more than 150,000 members, are affiliated with the Union Label Trades Department of the American Federation of Labor, which is composed of more than 720,000 members, all of whom believe that injustice will be done them if this rider to this Post Office appropriation bill is adopted.

There are numerous organizations throughout the United States which have their own publications and their memberships are scattered broadcast throughout the entire land, and should this rider become a law, these organizations and their members will be deprived of their most-favored magazine or periodical. And, again, thousands of members of labor organizations and other organizations are subscribers to papers and magazines which are published hundreds of miles from their homes, and should this rider become a law, these workers will have to discontinue their subscriptions to this class of reading material as soon as their present subscriptions expire; and they will be deprived of this line of education and, no doubt, the publishers of these same publications will have to suspend or go out of business entirely, not only because of this rider but also for the reason of the high cost of news-print paper, which is forced upon the editors of this country by the grand old "Paper Trust," as reported by the Federal Trades Commission. Why does not the gentleman from California go after this Paper Trust and try to correct its wrong against the American people? Why wink at this evil and pass it by, when it is affecting every man, woman, and child in the United States who reads the newspapers, periodicals, journals, and magazines of the country. In fact, people in all walks of life are affected by this gigantic trust, and yet never a word, not even a murmur, is to be heard upon the floor of this House against this great outrage upon the American people.

There are about 12,659,203 people in the United States engaged in agriculture, according to the census of 1910. Every one of these people will be affected by this rider, directly or indirectly. There are engaged in manufacturing and mechanical pursuits and allied industries in the United States about 14,261,376 people. All of this class of people will be affected by this increased rate on second-class mail matter.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. RICKETTS. I do.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to ask the gentleman whether an amendment to the zone proposition of this nature would be satisfactory, provided that all publications regularly admitted as matter of the second class in which less than 25 per cent is devoted to paid advertising, whether reading notice or display, shall be subject to the rate of 1 cent per pound and no more? I may say to the gentleman that that would exclude 99 per cent of religious, fraternal, educational, scientific, and laboring press of the country from the operation of this zone bill, for they contain less than 25 per cent of advertising.

Mr. RICKETTS. In answer to the gentleman's question I want to say I favor the increase of the rate of postage on magazines advertising on a flat rate, but I do think that this subject is so important to the people of this Nation it ought not to be legislated or enacted into law in a paragraphic way. I think it ought to be brought into this House in a bill.

Mr. MOON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICKETTS. I will.

Mr. MOON. Does the gentleman know that about six solid months have been spent in the investigation of this matter heretofore, and that there have been Federal commissions investigating this subject, and that one just reported a short time ago, the chairman of that commission being the late Republican candidate for President, Mr. Hughes, and that they have, every one of them, advised an increase in the rate?

Mr. RICKETTS. I was not aware of that, I will say to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MOON. It has been perhaps the best examined question that has become an issue before this body at any time.

Mr. RICKETTS. I have no doubt that some investigation has been carried on, and that the gentleman is correct as to some of the various commissions.

Mr. MOON. This committee, at a session some time ago, if you will get the hearing, had a very exhaustive examination of the whole question. It was examined by the department and then by the committee.

Mr. RICKETTS. As I understand it, notwithstanding the fact that various commissions have made various examinations about this matter, it has never been discussed by Members of this House, and, in my humble judgment, before any legislation is enacted here respecting as important a question as this, it ought to be discussed fully by all Members of this House, and not by any particular outside committee. [Applause.]

I have received telegrams from lodges in my district, different secret organizations, all objecting to this sort of legislation at this time, claiming that injury will be done these particular organizations, and opposing it.

The farmers of the country are reading the farm journals and gleaning from them the most modern methods of agriculture. They are seeking constantly to increase their vocational ability, but should this rider be enacted into law, a great many of them will have been shorn of the principle source of knowledge pertaining to their individual duties.

It is the province of these magazines, journals, and periodicals in the American homes to lessen the sources of social unrest among the masses. No other one thing contributes more largely to crime than idleness of body and mind. The minds of the American people are active and demand mental employment, and I am sure that many comforts are added to the firesides of our homes by these incoming periodicals. Why deprive our own dear people of these privileges, and that is what it means to pass this legislation, and I am against it.

The Post Office Department is self-sustaining. Then, why all this outcry about a loss of revenue to the Government? This department is meant and intended to be a great public utility for the use, benefit, and accommodation of the American people in the transmission of mails. Why, then, deprive the people of this great public service? There is no just or reasonable excuse for it. Why not let the present system of service, which is so satisfactory to all the people of the United States, remain as it is, which system has been a great benefactor in educating and enlightening generally the people of the country which we love so dearly? It is the policy of this Government and all our institutions to promote education in all lines, and in every available way, and to increase the facilities as the Nation progresses, so as to make the system more efficient and serviceable to all the people.

I am here inserting the items from which the revenue in the Post Office Department is obtained. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, the Post Office Department received revenue from ordinary postal revenues, revenues from money-order business, and revenues from postal-savings business in the enormous sum of $312,057,688.83.

The receipts are the largest in the history of the Government. The following table shows the growth of the Postal Service in the United States from the year 1800 up to the present time:

ECONOMY.

This House has just passed a vocational education bill which carries with it an appropriation of $500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917; $750,000 for the fiscal year 1918; $1,000,000 for the fiscal year 1919; $1,250,000 for the fiscal year 1920; $1,500,000 for the fiscal year 1921; $1,750,000 for the fiscal year 1922; $2,000,000 for the fiscal year 1923; $2,500,000 for the fiscal year 1924; and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and annually thereafter, the sum of $3,000,000.

Now, why did the House of Representatives make this appropriation? Because it is conceded by all who participated in the discussion of this bill and those interested in the bill that it is a step on the part of the Federal Government taken for the purpose of advancing the vocational education of the boys and girls of our country, who are badly in need of further instruction and greater opportunities in vocational lines.

Is this House in one breath going to make appropriations such as this for the benefit of the youth of our country and in the next breath deprive them of the greatest educational advantages which could possibly be theirs to enjoy—that of the magazines, journals, and periodicals which are published throughout the United States, which contain a fund of wisdom on nearly all subjects in which the American people are interested?

Gentlemen of the House, I know not what you may do with reference to this matter, but, as far as I am personally concerned, I shall by my vote and influence oppose this legislation, because I firmly and honestly believe it to be absolutely and unequivocally wrong.

As a friend to the wage earners of the country, the farmers of the country, and men in all walks of life, whenever and wherever it is within my power so to do, I shall protect their interests and the interests of the common people. Abraham Lincoln once aptly said, "God must have loved the common people; if He had not, He would not have made so many of them." [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I desire to adopt as a portion of my address to this House a poem written by Berton Braley expressly for the Coal Age, which so aptly and correctly describes this rider and its author. It is as follows:

PROFITS ÜBER ALLES.

[By Berton Braley, written expressly for Coal Age.]

Now this is the story of RANDALL, the Solon from out of the West,
Who said to the wise men of Congress, "My brethren, methinks it is best
To start a new system of postage; the second-class rate is too low——"
"Let's cut out the franking!" said some one, but RANDALL protested, "Oh, no!
The frank is a privilege precious, forever fulfilling our needs
For sending out unspoken speeches, and mailing quintillions of seeds,
We can not afford to forego it; but I have a far better way
To add to the Government's profits and help make the post office pay——"
"I know," cried a Congressman, loudly, "your meaning is plain as can be,
You want to abolish the practice of sending the newspapers free
Which don't go outside of their county—believe me, I'm with you, old scout,
It's really a graft most expensive, I'll aid you in cutting it out,
To cease such a species of outlay will save quite a bundle of pelf——"
"I don't want to stop it," said RANDALL, "I run such a paper myself!
My plan is far simpler and cuter," he added in confident tones,
"We'll just soak the magazines harder by slicing the country in zones
And piling on postage for distance clear up to 6 pennies a pound,
Thus gaining some millions of dollars for Congress to scatter around
In post-office buildings for Podunk—large buildings of costly design—
Or free distribution of papers—such papers, for instance, as mine.

"We'd drive many magazines bankrupt, we'd double the price of the rest,
We'd gather a tribute most heavy from people who live in the West,
We'd stir up old sectional feelings, on knowledge we'd levy a tax,
The publishing business would get it where chickens are given the ax,
But what do such little things matter? It's 'cash money' profits that count,
The people can go without reading if only the postal rates mount,
The technical journals can wither, the magazines all fade away,
That won't hurt my small county paper—so up with the postage, I say!"

Now this is the story of RANDALL, the Solon from out of the West,
And this is the innermost meaning of what he has tried to suggest,
He may not have said what is quoted, but if his new law is put through
The words we have rimingly noted will prove to be direfully true;
The spread of instruction is threatened, and if you don't want to allow
This drag on the progress of knowledge, just write to your Congressman, Now!

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, permission has been given in the House to everybody to extend remarks.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That section 213 of act of March 4, 1909 (Criminal Code), be and is amended so as to read as follows:

"No letter, package, postal card, or circular concerning any lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme of any kind, offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance, or other contingency, or concerning any article, device, or thing designed or intended for the conduct of such lottery enterprise or scheme; and no lottery ticket or part thereof, or paper, certificate, or instrument purporting to be or to represent a ticket, chance, share, or interest in or dependent upon the event of a lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme of any kind offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance, or other contingency, and no article, device, or thing designed or intended for the conduct of such lottery enterprise or scheme, or matter relating thereto; and no check, draft, bill, money, postal note, or money order, for the purchase of any ticket or part thereof, or of any share or chance in any such lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme; and no newspaper, circular, pamphlet, or publication of any kind containing any advertisement of any lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme of any kind offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance, or other contingency, or containing any list of the prizes drawn or awarded by means of any such lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme, whether said list contains any part or all of such prizes, or containing any advertisement of any article, device, or thing designed or intended for the conduct of such lottery enterprise or scheme, shall be deposited in or carried by the mails of the United States or be delivered by any postmaster or letter carrier. Whoever shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited, or shall knowingly send or cause to be sent, anything to be conveyed or delivered by mail in violation of the provisions of this section, or shall knowingly deliver or cause to be delivered by mail anything herein forbidden to be carried by mail, shall be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than two years, or both; and for any subsequent offense shall be imprisoned not more than five years. Any person violating any provision of this section may be tried and punished either in the district in which the unlawful matter or publication was mailed, or to which it was carried by mail for delivery according to the direction thereon, or in which it was caused to be delivered by mail to the person to whom it was addressed."

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Tennessee a question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MOON. A point of order has been reserved, and I want to ask the gentleman if it is his intention to make it final or reserve it for debate?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I reserve the point of order to ascertain whether it should be made. If those who use the mail merely to send through tickets for articles to be chanced off without fraudulent intent are to be imprisoned, it seems to me we should consider it. It is different from the other paragraph.

Mr. MOON. The general law would require intent of fraud to be done before there would be conviction. Intent actuates the man. If it was done innocently, you could not punish him for it.

Mr. William H. Lamar, Solicitor for the Post Office Department, says:

The changes in section 3929 were made primarily to make the statute that the Post Office Department had the administration of conform to the criminal statutes as found in section 213 of the Criminal Code with respect to lotteries, and section 215 with respect to fraud. Sections 3929 and 4041 are statutes which authorize the department to issue fraud orders and lottery orders and stop the use of the mails, while the other two sections, 213 and 215, are criminal statutes which are administered through the district offices. The changes which have been made in section 3929 broaden the effect of that statute with reference to the offering of prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance. The language is made broader than the present act by inserting the words "or other contingency."

Now, that is a statement from Mr. Lamar in reference to the scope of these statutes generally. I refer the gentleman to the examination of those pages, if he wants to do so. It broadens the scope and authority of the present law.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman from New York desires the exact change, the additions that have been added to section 6 are the following:

In line 9, page 31, after the word "chance," the following is new language: "or other contingency, or concerning any article, device, or thing designed or intended for the conduct of such lottery enterprise or scheme."

And in line 15, before the word "scheme," add the word "similar," and after the word "scheme" add the words "of any kind."

Line 16, after the word "chance," the following is new language: "or other contingency, and no article, device, or thing designed or intended for the conduct of such lottery, enterprise, or scheme, or matter relating thereto"; and on page 32, line 1, after the word "chance," the words "or other contingency" are added. And in line 4, same page, after the word "prizes," the following language is added: "or containing any advertisement of any article, device, or thing designed or intended for the conduct of such lottery enterprise or scheme."

Mr. MOON. I was reading to the gentleman from the statement of Gen. Lamar. He covers the whole matter. It is simply broadening the statute along that line.

Mr. MADDEN. It is intended to stop the shipment of slot machines.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Under this paragraph would a club or a church which organized a game of chance and sent tickets through the mail become punishable, or an individual or committee become punishable by fine or imprisonment?

Mr. BENNET. By reason of the additional language?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. This is the law, except as to where it is amended, and that is only intended to stop the shipment of slot machines.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw his reservation of a point of order?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That section 217 of the Penal Code be and is amended so as to read as follows:

"All kinds of poison, and all articles and compositions containing poison, and all poisonous animals, insects, and reptiles, and explosives of all kinds, and inflammable materials, and infernal machines, and mechanical, chemical, or other devices or compositions which may ignite or explode, and all disease germs or scabs, and all other natural or artificial articles, compositions, or materials, of whatever kind, which may kill or in anywise hurt, harm, or injure another or damage, deface, or otherwise injure the mails or other property, whether sealed as first-class matter or not, are hereby declared to be nonmailable matter, and shall not be conveyed in the mails or delivered from any post office or station thereof, nor by any letter carrier; but the Postmaster General may permit the transmission in the mails, under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe, of any articles hereinbefore described which are not outwardly or of their own force dangerous or injurious to life, health, or property: Provided, That all spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquors of any kind are hereby declared to be nonmailable, and shall not be deposited in or carried through the mails. Whoever shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited for mailing or delivery, or shall knowingly cause to be delivered by mail, according to the direction thereon or at any place at which it is directed to be delivered by the person to whom it is addressed, anything declared by this section to be nonmailable, unless in accordance with the rules and regulations hereby authorized to be prescribed by the Postmaster General, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than two years, or both; and whoever shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited for mailing or delivery, or shall knowingly cause to be delivered by mail, according to the direction thereon or at any place to which it is directed to be delivered by the person to whom it is addressed, anything declared by this section to be nonmailable, whether transmitted in accordance with the rules and regulations authorized to be prescribed by the Postmaster General or not, with the design, intent, or purpose to kill or in anywise hurt, harm, or injure another, or damage, deface, or otherwise injure the mails or other property, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both."

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I reserve a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania reserves a point of order.

Mr. BENNET. May I inquire what the changes are?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Before withdrawing the point of order I want to find out whether it will prevent a physician's prescription from going through the mails—the first two lines there relate to a percentage of poison. That might apply to medicine.

Mr. MANN. The only thing this section does is to amend the law with reference to the regulations made by the Postmaster General by leaving out the language "as to preparation and packing." That is all it does.

Mr. MOON. It is all the law now.

Mr. MANN. The Postmaster General is now authorized to authorize the transmission through the mails of these physician's prescriptions, and so forth, by making regulations as to the preparation and packing. With that preparation and packing left out, he has the authority to make the regulations, and the result of that is that all of these articles will be permitted to go through the mails.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That would permit the transmission through the mails of articles that contain only a percentage of poison used for medical purposes?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BENNET. It broadens the discretion of the Postmaster General as to the regulations.

Mr. MANN. It does not require him to make regulations as to the preparation of the article.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In view of the explanation that has been made, I will withdraw the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. STAFFORD. I renew the point of order. I have no objection to this paragraph being passed as it is, but if it is going to be used as a vehicle for tagging on some prohibition amendment I will make the point of order, so that the committee can finish the consideration of the bill to-night.

Mr. MOON. I do not think anything of that kind will be done.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the gentleman propose to make the point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman from California proposes to offer a prohibition amendment, I will make the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I will make the point of order myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California makes the point of order. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That on and after July 1, 1917, drop or local letters shall be mailed and pay postage at the rate of 1 cent per ounce or a fraction thereof, including delivery at letter-carrying offices and on rural routes where mailed.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that section 9 be passed over until we shall have disposed of section 10.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the request of the gentleman from Tennessee——

Mr. STAFFORD. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What was that?

Mr. MOON. I want to be perfectly candid with the gentlemen, Mr. Chairman, and unless we pass section 10 in some shape we will not have any money to carry out the provisions in section 9. There will be no use in passing it.

Mr. MADDEN. I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that I will make a point of order against section 10 when we reach it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the request. The chairman of the committee asks unanimous consent that section 9 be passed over until section 10 shall have been disposed of. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington objects.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman can make a point of order against section 9.

The CHAIRMAN. Section 9 has not been read. The Chair will direct the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That on and after July 1, 1917, drop or local letters shall be mailed and pay postage at the rate of 1 cent per ounce or a fraction thereof, including delivery at letter-carrying offices and on rural routes where mailed.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. RANDALL. I make a point of order on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, at that point I wish to print in the RECORD a letter from Postmaster General Burleson as to how much revenue the Government will lose if section 9 becomes a law. It is $27,000,000. I ask leave to insert it in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I shall not object; but I do not think the opinion of the Postmaster General is worth anything at all. He comes from a country town, and does not know anything about the delivery of city mail. In fact, I think it would increase the revenue, and any man who comes from a city would believe that.

Mr. COX. If the gentleman will read that letter, he will find out that it is based on facts and investigation.

Mr. MANN. It can not be based on facts. It is based on imagination.

Mr. COX. No; it is based on facts.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must admonish gentlemen to observe the rules of the House. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. STEENERSON. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. FARR. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question. Is it not a fact that recently the chairman of the Post Office Committee expressed the opinion that this provision in regard to drop-letter postage, if put into operation, might be self-sustaining?

Mr. COX. I do not know what the chairman of the Post Office Committee said.

Mr. STEENERSON. I understood him to state that.

Mr. LONGWORTH. He said there might be a loss of three or four million dollars the first year and that it would be self-sustaining after that.

Mr. STEENERSON. I think the chairman of the Post Office Committee is a very much better authority on postal matters than is the Postmaster General.

Mr. COX. The gentleman will find, if he will read that letter, that the Postmaster General states that the probable loss of revenue would be approximately $27,000,000, and he undoubtedly knows what he is talking about.

Mr. FARR. I want to ask the gentleman by what means the Postmaster General discovered that there would be such a deficit?

Mr. COX. By investigation.

Mr. FARR. What kind of an investigation?

Mr. COX. By taking an account of the drop letters at 50 of the large post offices in the United States for a certain period of time.

Mr. FARR. When was this done?

Mr. COX. During 1914.

Mr. FARR. How does the gentleman account for the discrepancy between these two gentlemen, the chairman of the Post Office Committee [Mr. MOON] and Postmaster General Burleson, as to the amount of this loss?

Mr. COX. I can not account for the discrepancy.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is, Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. EMERSON. Reserving the right to object——

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order has been demanded. The regular order is, Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The following is the letter referred to.

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., December 9, 1916.

Hon. W. E. COX,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. COX: In response to that part of your recent letter regarding the effect which a reduction to 1 cent an ounce or fraction thereof in the rate of postage on letters mailed for local delivery would have on postal revenues, I have to say that an estimate based on mailings of letters deposited for local delivery at city letter-carrier offices during the week ended October 7, 1914, shows that the probable loss of revenue on letters mailed for local delivery at such offices during the year embracing the week referred to, if such rate had been in effect during that year, would have been approximately $27,581,608. For your further information I inclose a copy of a memorandum embodying the estimate.

The estimate requested by you as to the effect on the postal revenues of the enactment into law of House bill 16145, introduced by Representative RANDALL May 31, 1916, providing for the zone system of postage rates for second-class matter, and also with respect to the fixing of the third-class rate of postage for catalogues and similar publications, will follow at an early date.

Yours, very truly,

A. S. BURLESON.

MEMORANDUM ON 1-CENT LETTER POSTAGE.

The period covered by the following statistics is the week of October 1 to 7, 1914:

The postage on letters mailed for local delivery at the 55 largest post offices for the week was	$790,898.71
Reports from 1,725 of the 1,759 city-delivery offices, including the 55 largest offices, show that the number of letters deposited for local delivery for the week amount to	51,604,967
The postage on these letters was	$1,060,831.49
Computing for a year on the basis above given, the loss of revenue which would result from the reduction of 1 cent an ounce on drop letters would be (while 34 of the 1,759 city-delivery offices are not included in the above statistics, it is believed that the estimated loss per year would be not less than $25,000,000. To confine the estimate to offices having gross postal receipts of as much as $100,000 the annual loss would be $24,000,000)	$27,581,608.00

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. That on and after June 30, 1917, all newspapers, magazines, and other publications regularly admitted to the mails as matter of the second class when mailed by the publisher shall hereafter be subject to the following rates of postage, the zone system now applying to parcel-post matter to be adapted also to second-class matter:

Local, first, second, and third zones (under 300 miles), 1 cent per pound.
Fourth zone (300 to 600 miles), 2 cents per pound.
Fifth zone (600 to 1,000 miles), 3 cents per pound.
Sixth zone (1,000 to 1,400 miles), 4 cents per pound.
Seventh zone (1,400 to 1,800 miles), 5 cents per pound.
Eighth zone (over 1,800 miles), 6 cents per pound:

Provided, That free-in-county circulation provided by law shall continue as at present: And provided further, That the Postmaster General may hereafter require publisher to separate or "make-up" to zones, or in such manner as may be directed, all matter of the second class when offered for mailing.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I make a point of order against the section.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I make a point of order against the section.

[Several other Members made the same point of order.]

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on this section myself, because the other section went out, and because everybody over there on that side seems to want to make a point of order. We will take up this matter in some other shape, gentlemen, and give you an opportunity to consider it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. We desire to thank the gentleman from Tennessee for making the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. That hereafter catalogues and similar publications shall be classified as third-class mail matter and pay postage as such.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that.

Mr. MOON. The point of order is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. STEENERSON. I should like to ask the gentleman to reserve the point.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was made, and the Chair has sustained it.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I have two or three amendments that I desire to offer. I will state in advance that each one of them is subject to a point of order. Still, I think I will give gentlemen an opportunity to take such course as they see fit.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the bill the following as a new section:

"The Postmaster General may, under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe, when the senders of mail matter so desire, accept for mailing the replies thereto without the prepayment of postage thereon, and collect from the addressees at the time of delivery postage at the regular rates and 50 per cent in addition thereto."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, this amendment has been under consideration many times in the Post Office Committee. It is fathered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD], and I do not think any objection can be raised to it by anyone who is acquainted with the facts. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD].

Mr. MADDEN. Let us take a vote on it.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, let us have a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the bill the following as a new section:

"That the Postmaster General, in cooperation with the State highway department of each State, shall designate the roads to be constructed in conformity with the provisions of the act of July 11, 1916, and that the Secretary of Agriculture shall approve the plans, specifications, and estimates for any project determined upon by the Postmaster General and the State highway department. The construction, work, and labor in each State shall be performed in accordance with its laws and under the direct supervision of the State highway department, subject to the inspection and approval of the Secretary of Agriculture."

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order.

Mr. MOON. Will the gentleman withhold it a minute?

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. MOON. I want to state that the purpose is to enable the designation of roads in conformity with the power under the Constitution and laws that belong to the Post Office Department, and not to the Agricultural Department, and to prevent, if possible, by the designation by that department of those interested alone in the establishment of post roads. The designation of the roads will be for the benefit of the Postal Service.

Mr. MANN. It looked to me as if it was a good amendment when I heard it read, but it ought to come from the Committee on Roads. They ought to consider it.

Mr. MOON. It ought to be so that the money will not be expended all upon automobile roads of the country, but upon the rural post roads.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order.

Mr. MOON. I concede that it is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the Postmaster General is hereby directed to report to Congress the amount paid by his department and other departments of the Government, including the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, for telephone service, and the number of messages, and also the money that would be saved to the Government, and the practicability and probable cost of the purchase of the existing telephone system of the District of Columbia under the power of eminent domain, to be operated by the Post Office Department.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order to that.

Mr. MOON. The point of order is well taken. I simply wanted to see where gentlemen stand.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as a new section the following:

"The sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to enable the Postmaster General to proceed to execute the objects of section 3 of the act of Congress approved July 24, 1866, providing for the inauguration of telegraphic service for postal, military, and other purposes, and for the appraisal of the properties therein mentioned; and if in carrying out such objects of said act he shall find that it conduces to a reduction of the expenditure herein authorized he may use any telephone lines for telegraphic purposes; and it shall be the duty of the owners thereof to render and permit such service on such lines as he may require, for which they shall be entitled to just compensation, the amount whereof, in case of dispute, to be determined by the Interstate Commerce Commission."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order to the amendment.

Mr. LEWIS. The point of order, Mr. Chairman, may not lie.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. LEWIS. The act approved July 24, 1866, gives certain rights over post roads for telegraph lines of the country, and provides:

Provided further, That the United States may at any time after the expiration of five years from the date of the passage of this act for postal, military, or other purposes, purchase all the telegraph lines, property, and effects of any or all of said companies at an appraised value to be ascertained by five competent disinterested persons, two of whom shall be selected by the Postmaster General of the United States, two by the company interested, and one by the four so previously selected.

The amendment offered merely directs the execution of the existing law on the part of the Postmaster General and provides the funds with which he may do so, to wit, $100,000. In my view of the rules it is therefore not liable to a point of order, because it is not new legislation. I send to the desk the statute itself.

I have in mind a case in the reports of the proceedings of this House some years ago that seems to be in point. I do not recall the reference, but I do recall broadly the characterizing facts. A former statute authorized the existence of a mint in one of the cities in the Southern States—I think perhaps New Orleans, although I am not certain as to that. An appropriation was urged in the manner this appropriation is being urged, for the equipment of the mint and the provision of salaries for officials therein. It was held by the Speaker then presiding that the appropriation was in order, since it merely complied with existing law.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not pretend to know what the law of 1866 is, but at any rate I recall this much of the reading of the law, that it provides for the determination of this question by a committee of disinterested citizens. But the gentleman's proposition provides for an adjustment of the price, to be made by the Interstate Commerce Commission, which was not a part of the law.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is in error as to that. That is an incident. The amendment proposes that the Postmaster General shall go ahead and execute the law by appointing his appraisers and giving notice—doing whatever is necessary to effectuate the law.

Mr. MADDEN. Then the gentleman proposes by his amendment to authorize the Postmaster General later on to take over these properties, which means the expenditure of an enormous sum of money that nobody knows anything whatever about?

Mr. LEWIS. He can not do that unless the Congress later so directs.

Mr. MADDEN. And it seems to me that an important question of this sort, regardless of what the law may be, ought to be considered in an orderly way, and ought not to be forced upon the House of Representatives at this late hour in the week at the end of the consideration of an important bill without any consideration whatever.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. FESS. How could a law of 1866 deal with telephones that were not invented until 12 years later?

Mr LEWIS. Mr. Chairman, I would say that the highest court in Great Britain has determined that the telegraph is the same as the telephone; both messages go over the same wire at the same moment, and they are used in that way throughout the world. There is no difference between the telegraph and the telephone wire, in law or mechanics.

Mr. MADDEN. But the gentleman from Maryland must be willing to concede that the question is of too great importance to be considered in such a slipshod way as this is proposed to be considered, that we ought to have time for discussion and investigation of the proposition before us.

Mr. LEWIS. Oh, there will be plenty of time for discussion. Moreover, this merely means that the Postmaster General shall act under this law.

Mr. MADDEN. I know, but it means that we are to act as a lot of automatons and turn over to the Postmaster General the consideration of a great question, that may involve the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars, without having any right whatever to give consideration to the merits of the matter that we turn over to him.

Mr. LEWIS. It does not mean that at all. He has got to report. He can not spend any money except that authorized in the amendment, and the value of the gentleman's point, it seems to me, is tested by what happened a moment ago. He objected to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], which merely directed the Postmaster General to report the facts on a like matter of small financial proportions. I think I understand the reasons for the gentleman's objecting to this amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, I am frank to say to the gentleman that I am opposed to Government ownership, if that is what he means.

Mr. LEWIS. That is what I mean.

Mr. MADDEN. I am very frank to say that.

Mr. LEWIS. And I think no amount of discussion would change the gentleman's views.

Mr. MADDEN. Aside from that, I believe in going at a thing in an orderly way, and I do not believe the membership ought to be asked to vote upon something they have had no opportunity to consider.

Mr. FESS. Mr Chairman, just one observation. The law in question here was enacted in 1866. The thing with which the law dealt was the telegraph. The telephone did not exist at that time and was not in existence until 12 years later. The amendment proposes to deal with a thing that did not exist through an agency, the Interstate Commerce Commission, which did not exist until 1887, nearly 20 years after that; and I do not see how these two subjects can be dealt with in accordance with the law that was passed when there was no conception of the two agencies referred to when it was enacted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair realizes the importance of the proposition, and the Chair, of course, has not had an opportunity to give it that thought and care which the Chair would like to give.

Mr. LEWIS. I have no objection to deferring the matter until the Chair can give it that consideration. Let the matter go over until some later date.

The CHAIRMAN. It is up to the Chair to rule now.

Mr. LEWIS. I am not demanding that a ruling be made at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands, but the Chair does not care to delay public business himself, and he prefers to rule upon the question now rather than to delay the public business by having it go over. Section 3 of the act of 1866 provides that the Government after five years may purchase certain telegraphic companies. The amendment offered provides an appropriation for the purpose of investigating and appraising the values and to enable the Postmaster General to determine whether or not expenses can be reduced by the purchase. The Chair does not think that carries out the act of 1866. The Chair thinks it adds legislation to it, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the bill the following as a new section:

"The sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to enable the Postmaster General to execute the provisions of section 3 of the act of Congress, approved July 24, 1866, to appraise, for postal, military, and other purposes, the lines, property, and effects of the telegraph companies subject to said act; and the Postmaster General is hereby directed to report the result of such appraisal to Congress on the first Monday in January, 1918."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard?

Mr. LEWIS. I simply desire to say it is free from the objection of the introduction of any new matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the bill the following as a new section:

"Provided, That the Postmaster General is hereby directed to carry out the provisions of the third section of the act of Congress approved July 24, 1866, and proceed to appraise the lines, property, and effects of the telegraph companies subject to the said act, and to submit his report thereupon to the Congress on or before the first Monday in January, 1918."

Mr MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against it.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that this amendment does not change existing law but simply directs an official to carry into actual effect existing law by taking the steps designed and implied in the act of 1866. If the Chair has familiarized himself with section 3 and the proviso he will recall the applicability of this amendment to the proviso and its complete nonrelation to any fact or circumstance not set forth in the proviso by expression or by implication. It may be this or it may be that, but it is not new legislation.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LEWIS. Surely.

Mr. MANN. Is the Postmaster General authorized now under the act of 1866 to do the things that are directed to be done by this amendment?

Mr. LEWIS. If he is, then the amendment is not new legislation.

Mr. MANN. Well, is he authorized?

Mr. LEWIS. If he is, then this is not new legislation.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman does not answer the question.

Mr. LEWIS. I am answering the question.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is not answering the question at all. I asked the gentleman whether the act of 1866 authorizes the Postmaster General to do the things which this directs him to do.

Mr. LEWIS. I think perhaps that argument would be more relevant to the previous amendment that provides some funds for the doing of things he is authorized to do.

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman is still evading an answer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say, for the information of the Chair, that the section of the law quoted by the gentleman from Maryland is permissive. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland is mandatory. Even if he had the power under the law this amendment changes the law.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair the amendment in question directs the Postmaster General to do something that now under the law he is not authorized to do; that it adds legislation, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order. The Chair asks the indulgence of the committee for a moment. Earlier this afternoon the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VAN DYKE] offered an amendment to page 18 of the bill, and the Chair sustained the point of order to it. Mr. VAN DYKE would like to argue the point of order to the Chair, and the Chair asks the committee if it is willing to open up the proposition and allow the Chair to vacate his decision and hear from the gentleman from Minnesota on the point of order?

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I will have to object; I can not go back in this bill. Mr. Chairman, I move the committee do now rise and the Chairman be instructed to report this bill to the House with amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, pending that I would like to ask the chairman of the committee whether or not the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads did not direct a report on the 5 and 10 per cent increase in salary?

Mr. MOON. It was presented to the House and stricken out on a point of order, like the others.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CRISP, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 19410, the Post Office appropriation bill, and had instructed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a moment there?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I take it if the previous question is ordered now without anything further, the vote on the bill and amendments would come Tuesday morning? I think we have that understanding.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the previous question is ordered that the vote be postponed.

Mr. MANN. Suppose you ask it first. Nobody will oppose the previous question.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the previous question is ordered upon this bill and amendments the vote be taken on Tuesday morning next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] asks unanimous consent that after the previous question is ordered the voting on the bill be postponed until Tuesday morning. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on ordering the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I will ask for a separate vote in the House on the amendment on the pneumatic-tube proposition.

Mr. MANN. That will come up Tuesday.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present the conference report on the bill H. R. 10384, "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States," for printing in the RECORD under the rule, and I desire to give notice that I will call it up immediately after the vote on the Post Office bill on Tuesday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama presents a conference report on the bill H. R. 10384, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 10384. An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States.

The SPEAKER. The report is ordered printed under the rules, and the gentleman gives notice that on Tuesday, after the vote on the Post Office bill, he will call it up.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 1093. An act for the relief of James Anderson.

H. R. 10007. An act for the relief of William H. Woods.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. On what subject?

Mr. CURRY. On the subject of the Mississippi and Sacramento flood-control bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the flood control of the Mississippi and Sacramento Rivers. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, January 15, 1917, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

MONDAY, January 15, 1917.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, the mention of Thy name is the recognition of the rights of men. We thank Thee that we have come to think of Thee not as the God of these States or of our Government but the God of all nations, and that we have come to know Thee not only in Thy relation to us alone but as we see Thee in the ever-increasing purpose that runs through the whole creation. We pray that we may fix our relation to all men on the basis of that righteousness which Thou hast revealed to us through Thy word, and that we may feel that our mission is a mission of kindness and peace and justice to all mankind. May we act under the inspiration of the great God whose throne is the habitation of justice and judgment. For Christ's sake. Amen.

[Telegram.]

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Hon. JOHN D. WORKS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Following resolution adopted by the board of directors of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce:

Whereas the Committee on Public Lands of the United States Senate has, after an exhaustive investigation, reported that fairness and justice to those who have developed our oil requires adoption of remedial legislation recommended by it, and that such legislation will fully safeguard interests of the Government and conserve fuel supply of the Navy: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco does hereby respectfully urge Senators and Representatives in Congress from California to use utmost endeavors toward immediate passage of general leasing bill, which contains provision for relief of oil industry.

SAN FRANCISCO CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
ROBERT NEWTON LYNCH,
Vice President and Manager.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have here a brief statement by Rev. Daniel A. Poling, president of the National Temperance Council, giving resolutions passed by that council at its last annual meeting, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement and resolutions were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE COUNCIL,
Boston, Mass., January 6, 1917.

I am sending you below the official resolutions of the National Temperance Council, adopted at its annual session on December 8, 1916. We would respectfully call attention to the fact that this organization, which is composed of 225 executive leaders of about 20 national temperance organizations, of several State temperance organizations, and many of the general reform societies, unanimously supports the measures now pending for national constitutional prohibition of the liquor traffic, prohibition in the District of Columbia, the Territories, etc., the closing of the United States mails against liquor advertising.

In behalf of these organizations, I earnestly urge your support and vote for these measures.

Very sincerely, yours, DANIEL A. POLING, President.

Resolutions passed by the National Temperance Council December 8, 1916.

In the interest of unity and cooperation among the organizations whose members belong to this council we recommend to all churches, temperance, prohibition, and reform movements of the United States active support of the following measures:

1. National constitutional prohibition.
2. Prohibition in the District of Columbia and the Territories and wherever else the Federal Government has jurisdiction, including prohibition of liquor shipments for mission fields.
3. Closing the United States mails against liquor advertising.
4. An aggressive campaign to secure the enforcement of the prohibitory laws through the officers of the law.
5. The renewal of a widespread educational campaign in the interest of total abstinence and prohibition, especially in cities.
6. Generous publicity in as many languages as possible, particularly in newspapers, with care that only exact facts be published, and demand that advertising organizations and the press refuse space to proliquor falsehoods.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I give notice, so that those who are interested may know, that upon the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] I shall address the Senate upon the pending bill, not to exceed half an hour, for the purpose of laying before the Senate the character of the measure.

In this connection, Mr. President, I clipped from a paper a day or two ago a rather interesting dispatch telling about the efforts of the Kingdom of Italy to utilize the water powers of that great country. I ask that it be read at the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[From the Christian Science Monitor.]

ITALY'S WATER POWER.

ROME, ITALY.

A review accompanied by statistical tables of the water power available in Italy for the generation of electrical force has been issued by the ministry of agriculture. The importance of the full utilization of this "white coal," as it has come to be called, has been brought home to the nation at large by the enormously increased cost of fuel, owing to the difficulties of maritime transports. For the last 30 years data as to the hydraulic force available in Italy have been collected methodically, but not all the watercourses have yet been studied from source to mouth, although the work has reached its thirty-eighth volume. Special attention has been paid in this study to the condition of the various rivers and torrents in time of droughts. Some of the largest rivers of Italy, such as the Po, Ticino, Mincio, Adige, Arno, Tiber, Garigliano, and Volturno, are of considerably less importance than the actual body of water would promise, owing to the very level course of the lower stretches and the height of the banks above low-water mark. The average driving power has been estimated at 123,200 horsepower for the watercourses along the Ligurian coast; 926,900 horsepower for the rivers flowing into the Tyrrhenian Sea; 195,500 horsepower for the rivers flowing into the Ionian Sea; 45,000 horsepower for the Sicilian watercourses; 553,100 horsepower for those flowing into the Adriatic; and 320,000 horsepower for the southern tributaries of the Po, making a total of 2,163,700 horsepower. The tributaries flowing into the left bank of the Po have not yet been accurately studied, but the driving force obtainable from them is roughly estimated at 774,000 horsepower and 2,052,000 horsepower is attributed to the remainder of the unstudied watercourses, bring the grand total up to approximately 5,000,000 horsepower.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I wish to say a word with respect to the article which has just been read. It evidently indicates that the countries of Europe are very much interested in the development of water power, and so are we. We do not think it is relevant to the bill which is under consideration, because we regard the bill under consideration as one which crushes out every right of a State to control that which has been recognized as the right of the State, and instead of developing it will absolutely retard, in our judgment, the development of water power.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CLAPP, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 7833) authorizing the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota to submit claims to the Court of Claims, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 925) thereon.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 3962) for the relief of the legal representatives of the estate of Henry H. Sibley, deceased, to submit an adverse report (No. 926) thereon, and I ask that the bill be postponed indefinitely.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the report go to the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. WADSWORTH, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 5768) for the relief of Frank Carpenter, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 927) thereon.

Mr. GRONNA, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally with an amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 3507. A bill for the relief of Elizabeth Marsh Watkins (Rept. No. 929);

S. 3895. A bill for the relief of the Portland Iron Works (Rept. No. 928); and

S. 6595. A bill to reimburse William Blair for losses and damages sustained by him by the negligent dipping of his cattle by the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture (Rept. No. 930).

Mr. FERNALD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2749) for the relief of George L. Thomas, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 931) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 141) for the relief of William E. Johnson, reported it with amendment and submitted a report (No. 932) thereon.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 7447) to amend section 269 of chapter 231 of the act of March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," reported it without amendment.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, on January 13, I submitted an amendment which I intend to propose to the bill providing appropriations for the District of Columbia. The amendment was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. It should have gone to the Committee on Appropriations. I ask that the Committee on the District of Columbia be discharged from the further consideration of the amendment, and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that disposition will be made of the amendment.

KANAWHA PACKET CO. V. UNITED STATES.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, with a great deal of regret I report to the Senate Senate bill 6632, which is a bill for the relief of a citizen of West Virginia, with a recommendation of the Committee on the Judiciary that the bill be referred to the Committee on Claims.

I desire to state that I felt that the Judiciary Committee was the proper committee to deal with the subject, but my associates on the committee disagreed with me, and I report back, at their direction, and ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it and the accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that disposition will be made of the bill.

APPOINTMENTS OF PRISON OFFICIALS.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I report favorably from the Committee on the Judiciary Senate bill 7561, to amend an act entitled "An act for the erection of United States prisons and for the imprisonment of United States prisoners, and for other purposes," to fix the terms of office of the superintendent of prisons, the wardens, and the deputy wardens, to provide for their appointment, and for other purposes. This is a bill providing that the office of superintendent of prisons and the office of warden of the three national penitentiaries be made presidential appointments, subject to confirmation by the Senate. I wish to state, in connection with the report, that there are three national prisons, one at Atlanta, Ga.; one at Leavenworth, Kans.; and one at McNeill Island, Wash. There is one superintendent of prisons. It is these four officers that will be changed by this bill from being officers who are merely designated by the Attorney General and subject to removal at pleasure by the Attorney General, without senatorial consideration of the appointments, into appointments that are to be made by the President, subject to the advice and consent of the Senate, and to be confirmed by the Senate.

I wish to say, Mr. President, that I have submitted this bill to the Senators from Kansas, and they each very cordially agree with me in the desirability of its passage. I have also submitted it to the Senators from Washington, and I understand that they each agree to the passage of the bill. The salaries of these officials are in no way changed. The only change that is made is that in recognition of the importance of the position of superintendent of prisons and the importance of the position of wardens of penitentiaries, they are made presidential appointments. I believe this proposed action is in accord with the practice in those States which have given special attention to their prison improvement, and my own observation of the working of the prison at Atlanta, Ga., satisfies me that a firmer tenure of office should be given to the wardens.

I desire to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. I think there is no opposition at all to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I simply want to say that while I do not object to the immediate consideration of the bill personally, I should prefer to have these places put under the classified service. That, however, seems hardly possible now. I think this proposed legislation will improve the present condition of things, and for that reason solely I do not object to the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, may we have the bill read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 5, after the name "March," to strike out "thirtieth" and insert "third," so as to read "approved March third, eighteen hundred and ninety-one."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 1, after the word "warden," to strike out "and deputy warden," so as to read:

That the warden for each of such prisons shall be appointed in like manner and for a like term, at annual salaries as follows, payable monthly.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 5, after "$4,000," to strike out "deputy warden, $2,000," and insert "and," and in line 6, after "$2,000," to strike out "deputy warden, $1,200," so as to read:

At Atlanta, Ga., and at Leavenworth, Kans., warden, $4,000, and at McNeil Island, Wash., warden, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 2, line 10, after the name "March," to strike out "thirtieth" and insert "third," so as to read "approved March third, eighteen hundred and ninety-one."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I ask that the bill as finally amended may be read, in order that we may see what it proposes to accomplish.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the bill as finally amended.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. THOMPSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia if there is any change in the proposed law, except that relative to the method of making these appointments?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There is no change at all in the present status of the offices, except to provide that their incumbents shall be appointed by the President and shall be subject to confirmation by the Senate.

Mr. THOMPSON. There is no change in the salaries?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. None whatever.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, the question of an office being vacated before a successor to the retiring official has been appointed, it seems to me, has been brought to our attention, and I think that the bill ought to provide that the officers referred to shall hold for a period of four years or until their successors are confirmed. We would not have had the trouble we have had in connection with appointments to the Interstate Commerce Commission if that were the law in connection with that commission.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I accept the amendment suggested by the Senator from Michigan, which will provide for a term of four years and until their successors are appointed.

Mr. GALLINGER. "Appointed and qualified."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. "Appointed and qualified."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, lines 9 and 10, it is proposed to strike out the words "and shall hold office for the term of four years" and to insert "for a period of four years or until their successors are appointed and qualified."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill as amended.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill as amended, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act for the erection of United States prisons and for the imprisonment of United States prisoners, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891, be, and the same is hereby, amended so that hereafter the superintendent of prisons shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for a period of four years or until their successors are appointed and qualified, at an annual salary of $4,000, payable monthly, his powers and duties to be fixed as now provided for by law.

SEC. 2. That the warden for each of such prisons shall be appointed in like manner and for a like term, at annual salaries as follows, payable monthly:

At Atlanta, Ga., and at Leavenworth, Kans., warden, $4,000; and at McNeil Island, Wash., warden, $2,000.

SEC. 3. That so much of section 4 of the act entitled "An act for the erection of United States prisons and for the imprisonment of United States prisoners, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891, as conflicts with the provisions of this act is hereby repealed.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend an act entitled 'An act for the erection of United States prisons and for the imprisonment of United States prisoners, and for other purposes,' to fix the terms of office of the superintendent of prisons and the wardens, to provide for their appointment, and for other purposes."

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. OVERMAN. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 18542) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 933) thereon. I desire to give notice that I shall ask the Senate to consider the bill to-morrow morning after the routine morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT submitted an amendment providing during the fiscal year 1918 for an increase of compensation at the rate of 15 per cent per annum to employees who receive salaries at the rate per annum of $480 or less, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

CORRUPT PRACTICES.

Mr. JONES. I submit an amendment which I intend to propose to the corrupt-practices bill (H. R. 15842), and ask that it be read.

The amendment was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

After section 19, on page 37, of said act, as reported by the Senate committee, insert the following as a new section, to be known as section 19½:

"SEC. 19½. No person, association, or partnership engaged or interested in, or employed in connection with, the manufacture, distribution, or sale of intoxicating liquors, shall contribute anything of value or pay any sum of money whatsoever to any person or political committee to be used for political purposes or in any way to assist or promote the nomination or election of any candidate for nomination or election to any office covered by this act, and no candidate for nomination or election shall knowingly receive, directly or indirectly, any sum of money or contribution of any kind from such person, association, or partnership to aid or assist in his nomination or election."

RED CROSS BUILDING.

Mr. CUMMINS. I submit a resolution and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 318), as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that in constructing the "Memorial building erected to the memory of the women of the Civil War," commonly known as the Red Cross Building, in the city of Washington, there be prepared and set apart, if practicable, a suitable hall in one wing of the building for the free use of the "women of the Civil War" as represented by all the Grand Army organizations, and that a similar suitable hall in another wing of the building be prepared and set apart, if practicable, for the free use of the "women of the Civil War" as represented by all the organizations of the United Daughters of the Confederacy and kindred organizations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, what Senator offered the resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I should like to ask the author of the resolution why it is necessary to have two rooms set aside? Why could not one room be occupied by the women of these two organizations without having a distinct notice given to the world that there is a separation between the two and that two separate rooms are required?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not know. In offering the resolution I am carrying out the request and the wishes of a great number of women who were directly connected with the war, and in whose memory, largely, this building is being erected. Whether or not one hall would be suitable for both, I do not know. I think, however, that the provision of separate halls does not indicate any antagonism between the societies. I am sure there is the utmost harmony and good feeling. I suppose that they believed this to be the dignified and appropriate way in which to accomplish their desire. I have not investigated the matter sufficiently to know whether a single hall would be sufficient or not.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I hesitated for a moment about objecting, with the same thought in my mind that the Senator from Michigan had; but I think it is probable that each of the organizations would like to have Washington City headquarters, and the hall would furnish them headquarters here; I do not suppose it indicates the slightest antagonism between them.

Mr. CUMMINS. None whatever.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to see them meet together whenever practicable. I know their relations are most cordial.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understand there are a good many women who either were connected with the war or are the descendants of women who rendered service during the war who desire to place in this building memorial windows and other tributes of loving affection toward the past, and in order to carry out that design some of them asked me to offer this resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. In addition to the suggestion made by the Senator from Iowa and that made by the Senator from Georgia, it is stated that these organizations frequently have meetings here, and will desire to do so in the future; and it is entirely probable that some of their conventions might be held at the same time, in which event it would be necessary to have two halls.

Mr. CUMMINS. That would be quite possible.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

EMPLOYMENT OF STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. SWANSON. I desire to submit a resolution, the usual resolution authorizing a committee of the Senate to hold hearings. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has had a hearing, and I find that the committee has not any authority to hold hearings at this session. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the resolution:

The resolution (S. Res. 319) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-fourth Congress to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recess of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the resolution will have to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask that it be so referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

CORRUPT PRACTICES.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, before the Christmas holidays the corrupt-practices bill (H. R. 15842) was recommitted to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, with a unanimous-consent agreement that it should be reported back not later than the 4th of January, with an understanding that when it was reported back some arrangement might be made whereby it could be disposed of at some convenient time during this session. I ask unanimous consent that to-day three weeks the bill may be taken up for consideration and disposed of.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. OWEN. Then, I ask, Mr. President, that the bill may be taken up and disposed of to-day four weeks.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I shall not agree now to any date for a vote on any bill. I am not opposed to this particular bill, but I shall not consent to the fixing of a date to vote on any measure until another matter in which I am interested has been disposed of. I do not mean to say that I am in favor of the proposed bill as it stands, because I do not know just what it is. I am in favor of the general principles of it. I have not read it and do not know about its details; I am not objecting to it on account of the nature of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan objects.

EMBARGO ON FOOD PRODUCTS.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that on Thursday, January 18, 1917, immediately after the close of the routine morning business, I shall ask the courtesy of the Senate to discuss the resolution which I submitted on Saturday last, relating to the proposed embargo upon the exportation of food products.

CONTROL OF FEDERAL JUDGES.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I wish to withdraw the notice I gave last week that I would address the Senate at 2 o'clock to-day on the joint resolution introduced by me forbidding Federal judges to declare any act of Congress unconstitutional, and providing penalties therefor.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 408.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, it is not my intention to oppose the consideration of the water-power bill; but I should like to ask some one of the Senators on the other side of the Chamber, who are responsible for the conduct of the business of the Senate, if there is any intention, at any time during this session, of considering bills on the calendar? There are a large number of Senate bills on the calendar—not very important measures, but in which Senators have some interest—and if they are to be acted on at all by Congress during this session the Senate ought to consider them at some very early date. It seems to me that instead of using up the morning hour in considering bills which are the unfinished business, we ought to occupy that time in considering Senate bills on the calendar.

I should like to hear from somebody on the other side of the Chamber on that subject.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, although I am not authorized to speak for anybody on this side of the Chamber, I think the suggestion made by the Senator from Pennsylvania is one that ought to have very general support, if not unanimous support. I think at some early day we ought to take up the calendar for the disposition of uncontested bills; and I suggest that we do so, say, on Wednesday morning.

Mr. OLIVER. If that is understood——

Mr. WALSH. I will see if some arrangement of that kind can not be made.

Mr. OLIVER. I hope the Senator will do so.

Mr. WALSH. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 408.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I appreciate the value of time to the present session of Congress. I know something of the immense volume of business which confronts it, the transaction of which is very necessary to the public interests. I realize that the session is rapidly drawing to a close, and that every moment left to us should be utilized in the consideration of important measures which must either be enacted into law between now and the 4th of March or take their chances in the regular course of the Sixty-fifth Congress. I want to assure the Senate, therefore, that I would not trespass upon its patience or utilize any of the time remaining to us in the discussion of this bill if I were not fully convinced that it is one of the most important legislative measures ever presented for our consideration, and that its enactment would seriously and permanently impair the well-being of the State which I partly represent upon this floor.

It is true that this view of the measure may be distorted and that my opinions regarding the modern doctrine of conservation may be tinctured by local prejudice, due to the feeling that the people of the West and particularly of the arid or semiarid States are not being dealt with justly and fairly by the General Government with regard to the public domain within their borders. Nevertheless I believe, and therefore it is my duty to give to the Senate the reasons why I regard, this bill as inimical to the public interest, and that its passage should be prevented, if possible.

It has been said during the discussion, either of the bill or of the motion to take it up, that this was an administration measure. If by that is meant that the bill is one to which the Secretary of the Interior is friendly, or one which the President would like to see passed, I have no criticism to make. If by the statement it is meant that this is one of the measures which the administration as such has indorsed and presented to the consideration of the Senate, whereby the Senators who are in accord with the administration are expected to support it, then I must dissent from the statement. In his recent message the President made no reference to this as one of the measures which should receive our consideration.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, may I interject a statement at this point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. MYERS. Last summer—I think it was in July, during the last session, if I recollect aright—the President wrote a letter to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN], chairman of the Democratic steering committee and the Democratic floor leader, which the Senator from Indiana kindly showed to me and which I think I had the privilege of reading, in which the President urged the Senator from Indiana to have the Democratic steering committee set down for action by the Senate the identical bill which is now before the Senate, and to keep it before the Senate until disposed of; and urged that the bill now under consideration be taken up and disposed of at that session. That is according to my recollection.

Mr. THOMAS. Is it fair to ask the Senator if the letter was written by the President at the Senator's request or suggestion?

Mr. MYERS. It was not at my request; no, sir.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have some recollection of that letter. It is not as distinct as I wish it were; but I do not think that in that letter or at any other time the President has done more than to suggest the consideration of the bill.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. JONES. I wondered whether it was possible for us to have a copy of that letter.

Mr. THOMAS. I have no doubt that if the request is made of the Senator to whom the letter was written a copy of it can be secured, although that is merely my impression, and not in any way representing his attitude.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. Even if such a letter was written as has been stated, and the Senator from Colorado did not agree with the views expressed in it, I apprehend it would not influence the Senator, would it?

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator has anticipated the very statement I was about to make. Had such a request been made, even if the bill were here undoubtedly and unquestionably as an administration measure in the fullest sense of the word, I could not without self-stultification either support it or permit it to be passed without protesting against it or without giving to the Senate the reasons upon which my protest is based.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, just a word of explanation, if the Senator will permit me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado further yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. MYERS. I do not pretend to say that the President has urged the passage of this bill exactly as it is, nor that he is in favor of all of the provisions of the bill; but in messages to Congress he has several times urged that some bill embodying this principle and along this line be enacted into law.

Mr. THOMAS. I would not have referred to the subject at all, Mr. President, but for the fact that the statement was made at some time during the progress of our consideration of the measure, and I felt that I owed it to the Senate, and particularly to my Democratic colleagues, to define what I understand to be the facts.

Mr. President, it is true, I have no doubt—although I have not discussed the subject with him for a good while—that the President is, generally speaking, in favor of what may be called the modern principle of conservation. That his Secretary of the Interior entertains that view with regard to land administration there can be no doubt. Consequently I assume that the two are in accord upon the general subject. That this bill as it passed the House was drawn according to the lines of view of the Secretary of the Interior is equally evident. Indeed, I perhaps may assume that it was very largely the work of the Interior Department. But, Mr. President, those of us who live in the semiarid States of the Union which are the victims of modern notions of conservation, within whose boundaries are the remnants of that public domain which hitherto, under a broad and statesmanlike policy has been subject to disposition under which titles have been acquired by citizens, thereby upbuilding Commonwealths and developing their property, know what has been the effect and operation of the principle—if I may so dignify it—upon our growth and our condition during the past five or six years as contrasted with what they were before and as contrasted with the more fortunate career of States admitted earlier into the Union, and whose domain was disposed of under laws governing the subject from the inception of our Union almost down to the first decade of the present century.

Mr. President, I think this bill is objectionable in many of its details as well as in its general subject and purpose. Many of the provisions designed for the operation of the act are not only, in my opinion, impossible of practical development and operation, but they are manifestly in collision with the State laws and regulations which it recognizes. But beyond and above these details, which might be rectified, lie two fundamental objections, each of which is to my mind wholly irreconcilable with the rights of the States, upon the one hand, and the defined powers of the Government upon the other. Hence the bill aims at the political integrity of the Commonwealths where it will become operative and must very seriously affect, if indeed it does not practically supplant, in some communities the good old Anglo-Saxon principle of local self-government.

I press this view, first, because the bill is the entering wedge of a policy which proposes to convert the Government of the United States into a huge continental landlord with its own citizens as its tenantry, and as far as such a thing is possible in the same country to establish an absentee landlordism, since the headquarters of the landholder are in Washington, and its domains lie, generally speaking, west of the one hundredth meridian of longitude, from 1,750 to 3,000 miles away from the seat of government.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. In just a moment. Also because the bill comes in direct conflict with, and therefore if held valid must derogate from, one of the fundamental principles of State sovereignty, to wit, the power of eminent domain and control over all the property within the boundaries of these Commonwealths, subject only to such limitations as are made thereto by the express provisions of the Federal Constitution.

I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH. I observe that the Senator is addressing his comment very properly to this particular bill. Evidently the Senator is not satisfied with the lines on which the bill is drawn. I wish to ask the Senator if he agrees with those of us who want legislation, that legislation on the subject of the development of this water power is needed?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, it depends upon whether my views and those of the Senator could possibly coincide, and I do not think they could.

Mr. WALSH. No; suppose your views prevail; do you feel that there is a real necessity for water-power legislation?

Mr. THOMAS. Not at all. I shall endeavor to demonstrate before I finish that there is in the States which we represent, as in the others, a plenary power inherent in all sovereignties known as the power of eminent domain, applicable to every proprietor, whether public or private, through the exercise of which the water power belonging to the States of the West and to their citizens can be fully developed by the acquisition of these sites, which the Government ought to give to the States instead of withholding them perpetually from the possibility of private ownership unless and until their own ideas with regard to operation can be crystallized into law.

But first, Mr. President, with regard to some features of the bill itself, I do not think that my very able colleagues and friends from Montana who advocate this bill will question the proposition that the waters of the national streams in the semi-arid States belong to the people of the States, respectively, subject to appropriation by their citizens for beneficial uses.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I wish to say at this time the bill itself recognizes that and so states.

Mr. THOMAS. So the Senator says in his report, but I think I can demonstrate that the recognition given by this bill to this right is the recognition which a highway robber gives to his victim when he recognizes his ownership of the watch of which he deprives him.

Mr. MYERS. But this bill takes nothing away from the States. It takes no water rights whatever away. So the illustration of the highway robber is not applicable.

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator can convince this body that that is true, then this part of my argument will be worthless. I have stated what I believe to be a fundamental proposition with regard to the ownership of these waters, a proposition that has been recognized and enforced by the courts, both State and National, ever since the subject became an active one, a principle which has been carried so far that the Supreme Court of the United States has declared that where the Government for its administrative purposes desires to acquire a water right or the extension of a water right in the arid West, it must make its appropriation just like a citizen by complying with the requirements of the laws of the particular State where the watercourse is located, and then by appropriating through actual beneficial use the amount of water which it desires.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Montana. I should like to ask him if he believes that the waters of the State belong to the State?

Mr. MYERS. I do. The bill says so.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, we may disagree upon what the bill provides.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator knows the section where it is.

Mr. SMOOT. The senior Senator from Montana says he believes the waters of the State belong to the State. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana having the bill in charge whether he believes that the waters of a State belong to the State?

Mr. MYERS. As chairman of the committee I reported the bill and I am in charge of it.

Mr. SMOOT. Excuse me; I thought the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] had the bill in charge.

Mr. THOMAS. I think in this case, like many others, silence gives consent.

Mr. WALSH. I will be very glad to correct any wrong impression that might be created.

Mr. THOMAS. I will say, then, if the Senator denies the proposition, I feel greatly surprised.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator is quite correct. I have declared upon the floor of the Senate repeatedly that I am in entire accord with the proposition advanced by the Senator that the State owns the waters of the streams. I may say here now what I have heretofore asserted that I argued that very proposition before the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. I now understand the Senator did so before the Supreme Court of the United States, but I thought he argued just the contrary at the Western States Water Power Conference.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator is in error about that. I would be glad to provide him with a copy of the speech.

Mr. SMOOT. I have a copy of the Senator's speech before me now.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I shall assume that such is the law, although I may refer to some authorities bearing upon the subject in connection with others of equal importance.

Another proposition equally evident is that the power sites, so called, that is to say tracts of land that are so located with reference to the streams as to be available for sites for the generation of hydroelectric energy, belong to the Government of the United States and that it has withdrawn all of them which are of any consequence from private entry and location and ownership.

Of course, we all know—it is not necessary to assume—first, that the union of these two things is essential to the development of hydroelectric power; and, second, that unless there can be some combination of the two satisfactory to both owners, or some combination made without regard to whether it is or is not satisfactory, the further development of western power must be arrested. This bill proposes to bridge that chasm, ostensibly through the ownership by the Government of the power sites, but actually by the confiscation of the water belonging to the people.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator, I think, is mistaken in that. The bill does not purport to do that by ownership in the Government of the power but ownership of the land.

Mr. THOMAS. That is a distinction without a difference. If my property is taken from me under the assumption that because the party taking it insists that I still own it, but I nevertheless lose possession and lordship over it and all enjoyment of it, the assurance of the dominating power is not very comforting.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. You own the horse, but the other man has the stable and will not let you have it.

Mr. THOMAS. He will not even let me take it out.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I wish to ask the Senator from Colorado——

Mr. THOMAS. I hope my friends will not interrupt me so frequently, because I can not argue——

Mr. MYERS. Just a word in this connection and then I will desist. The bill expressly states that the regulation of this power and the prices to be charged shall be in the hands of the utility commissions of the different States where there are such commissions.

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, Mr. President, I know what the bill contains. I have read it and reread it; I have dreamed of it. I think I know something about it, and before I am through I shall, if possible, demonstrate that while the things are in the bill to which the Senator calls my attention, nevertheless they are there in such a fashion as to accomplish the very confiscation to which I have called attention. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana a question. I understand the Senator believes that these waters do belong to the States.

Mr. MYERS. I think so.

Mr. SHAFROTH. As the Senator knows, under the laws of the States a man having a water-power plant in contemplation has a right to condemn private property in the hands of private citizens for that water power.

Mr. MYERS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. When the Government steps in——

Mr. THOMAS. I have not yielded for an argument on this subject. I want to be as liberal as possible, but with all due respect to my colleague it seems to me an argument within an argument, so to speak, may not be convincing.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I merely wanted to get in a little conclusion, that is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado declines to yield further, and he will proceed.

Mr. THOMAS. Now, let me come to the title of the bill. It is "An act to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes." If that title is at all indicative of the contents of the bill it tells us that it is to develop water power and that the use of the public lands in relation thereto is a mere incident. It states the situation correctly. It is a bill, presumably at least, for the development of water power. It is a bill for the mere use of such public lands in relation thereto as the development of that water power requires.

The Senator who has charge of the bill wrote the report which has been read for the edification of the Senators, who probably received their knowledge of its contents largely through the new machines that have been installed in the cloakrooms, and which offer a premium to absenteeism. Consequently, I presume I may be pardoned for referring again to some of the things to which the report refers:

> The committee regards this as one of the most important measures—> and one of the most beneficial and conducive to the public welfare which has been or will be considered at this session of Congress.

That is true—

That is at least questionable.

> The object of this measure is the better and speedier development for useful and beneficial purposes of the great undeveloped water power of the country, now lagging on account of inadequate and inefficient laws.

Unquestionably that is the object which the Senator from Montana had in view.

> It is universally admitted that the present laws for the development of water power are lame and ineffective—

Some exceptions must be made to that—and that new legislation must be had before the great and untold benefits to civilization, progress, and growth from the latent water power of the country may be had. This bill seeks to attain that result.

How?

The bill distinctly recognizes the ownership of and the right of control in the States of the use of the waters in the flowing streams of the States.

This recognition as far as I am able to ascertain lies or is found in two requirements or two provisions of the bill, the one being a proviso to the first section, which is—

That no lease shall be granted until the applicant has complied with the requirements of the laws of the State, States, or Territory wherein said project is to be located, providing for the appropriation of water to develop or generate the electrical energy intended to be generated by applicant's proposed project.

The other is section 13:

That nothing in this act shall be construed as affecting or intended to affect or to in any way interfere with the laws of any State relating to the control, appropriation, use, or distribution of water.

I am not able now to recall any other provision of the bill which even seems to be in accord with the statement of the Senator upon the floor or his statement in the report.

In cases where latent power is going to waste in the streams of the States and where the land adjacent thereto and necessary for the location of power sites belongs to the United States Government this measure recognizes that there must be cooperation between the States which control the water and the United States Government, which owns the land.

The cooperation here between the United States Government which owns the lands and the State which owns the water is the cooperation of absolute power as contrasted with almost absolute helplessness. It is a cooperation in which the State, the owner of the possible and principal thing to be developed, is not consulted at all, in which its interests are barely referred to by a requirement that its laws with regard to the acquisition of the water rights must be respected. They might be respected entirely, and yet if the owner of the land, which is an absolute essential to the business sought to be here controlled, is not permitted to impose its own terms, whether desired or not, the cooperation not only becomes ineffective, it is absolutely nonexistent. The report well says that—

Neither alone can successfully develop water power. There must be cooperation to attain best results, and that this bill seeks to obtain by recognizing the right of the State to the use of the water and the right of the Federal Government to the use of the land and recognizing that both are essential to development of power.

This bill in no wise seeks to encroach upon, impair, or destroy any of the rights of the States—

I repeat I have no doubt the Senator sincerely and earnestly believes and that his colleague believes that the majority report is a correct statement of the bill and its purpose—

It is not intended in any wise or in any degree to trench upon the right of the State to the control of the water flowing in the streams within its borders. It is framed upon the distinct theory that the State owns and controls the use of the water flowing within the streams within its boundaries, and that the Federal Government owns and has the right to control and dispose of the public land bordering on and adjacent to such streams. The present laws are notoriously inefficient and defective for the development of water power in streams running through public lands, and water-power development is practically paralyzed and arrested. There must be new legislation before there can be any appreciable advance in water-power development.

Mr. President, the present Federal laws and department rules are not only deficient and ineffective for the development of water power in streams, but if these laws were recognized and applied in their letter and in their spirit now as heretofore, if these withdrawal orders were canceled, as they should be canceled, it would not be necessary for the present Congress or its successors to spend any of its time in additional legislation. The assumption is made that the laws are injuriously inefficient because, forsooth, they have been abused. They are regarded as inefficient because now there can be no method of acquiring title by those desiring to develop water power for the sites which are essential to the purpose.

I am not here, Mr. President, to criticize either this or preceding administrations for arresting certain methods of development and of acquiring public domain through the abuse and perversion of the statutes of the United States and largely through the active or passive cooperation of Government officials. Every condition which justifies extreme conservation is the outgrowth of national law coupled with national maladministration. The two combined to produce conditions which are some excuse for insisting that the pendulum shall swing to the other side of the arc and be arrested there, that every man, woman, and child in the West desiring to secure some benefit from the public domain should be presumptively regarded as a thief and a scoundrel until the contrary is distinctly and absolutely shown. So I do not admit at all, Mr. President, the proposition—I can not—that the present Federal laws are notoriously or at all inefficient for the securing of those rights and for the development of this power.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. In that connection, I might call the Senator's attention to a report of the Secretary of Agriculture on this subject.

Mr. THOMAS. I intended referring to that in connection with another part of this report.

Another ground there assigned, Mr. President, for this measure is that it will check or destroy a monopoly in water power. Well, I am in hearty sympathy with anything that we can accomplish here as legislators that will restrict or prevent monopoly in anything; and in saying that I am not peculiar; I think I express the honest sentiment of every Member of this body. But there are some things, Mr. President, which are natural monopolies, which in my mind never should be farmed out to private hands. Among them is what we call hydroelectric power. You can no more prevent the coalition in a few hands of this great agency so long as private control is permitted at all than you can prevent the operation of the law of gravitation. This condition has existed practically since hydroelectric power became as valuable as we all concede it to be.

Some time ago—I think it was last February—a letter of the Secretary of Agriculture, which I exhibit to the Senate [exhibiting], was presented by the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], who asked the Senate to publish it, so that the world might know that a monopoly then existed in water power. Some of us, myself among the number, opposed the publication of this document. I asserted then, and I now repeat, that the country no more needed the publication of this letter to demonstrate the existence of this monopoly than it needed to be told that when the sun sank behind the horizon night had come. It was a palpable and self-evident fact; a fact which had been advertised, a fact which had been asserted, a fact which had been demonstrated time and time again, a fact which will continue if this bill is enacted, and which will continue whether it is enacted or not, and which will, in my judgment, be as constant as any fact can be, so long as the conditions which exist and which this bill can not correct make it possible. However, the document was published at an expense of $21,000. Some one of us then asserted—I think it was the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]—that the way to get rid of a fact and to bury it forever was to publish it in just such a document as this. I am willing to stake my reputation for veracity upon the assertion that not 5 per cent or 2½ per cent of the Members of this body have ever read it or attempted to read it, and not 1 per cent of the people ever heard of it or care anything about it.

So this bill, instead of developing a tendency in any way to affect a monopolistic condition, which we have learned at this enormous expense exists, if it passes, will simply accentuate that situation. I do not think that the stars in their courses will arrest it until its real cause is removed.

Of course, it may be asked what the conditions will be if we do not enact the bill. I am obliged to say, Mr. President, that it will be the same. In other words, this bill, whether enacted or not, will not affect the question of monopoly. It is not the way to reach it. That can best be done by State ownership and control, in my judgment, of entire subject of the elements and resources whereby electric current is generated and applied to the use of mankind. So if monopoly destruction is the purpose of the bill, I think it is defeated at its outset.

Now, let us look at some objections to the details of the measure before taking up those which are fundamental. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and myself filed a minority report, which was read this morning. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK], and the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] prepared and filed a much longer and more comprehensive minority report; and let me say here, Mr. President, before passing that this long minority report is one of the ablest and best prepared and best considered legal reports that I ever have seen, either here or elsewhere. To my mind it is exhaustive and conclusive of the subject, and I am satisfied that Senators who are members of the bar can not devote an hour and a half to a better purpose than by carefully reading this most interesting discussion of the law of the subject.

I have referred, Mr. President, to the absentee-landlordism element in this bill and its effect upon local self-government. These are perhaps parts of the general subject; but incidental to them are some other matters to which I shall briefly refer.

One is the multiplication of Government employees which must result from this bill. There is a saying in my State that if you go on the street and throw a stone you will strike from one to two Government land employees, either identified with the Land Office or with the Forestry Bureau or with some of the other agencies to which Uncle Sam in these days resorts for the purpose of protecting his rights against the unfortunate people who are obliged to live near his domain. They are good citizens, but they are expensive.

We all know that the cost, for instance, of the administration of the Forestry Bureau is very largely in excess of the receipts—two or three times in excess of the receipts. These receipts are divided between the Government and the States, it is true, but the great bulk of expenditures falls upon and is absorbed by administration. We pay, therefore, in taxes to support the bureau vastly more than we receive from it.

Now, if Uncle Sam is to lease all of his power sites to those who desire to develop water power, and is to insist upon an observance of all of the provisions and conditions of the lease, which he ought to do, he will be obliged, so to speak, to be upon the ground all the time. As a consequence the number of employees which we now have eating out our substance will, in all probability, be multiplied by 2. So the instance which I suggested would result in four instead of two casualties if the stone-throwing experiment be made. [Laughter.] This must be paid for, and should be paid out of the receipts of the business of the undertaking if possible. Of course, as the price of living rises, we shall be confronted with applications such as are now pending to increase the compensation of these gentlemen in order to meet the increased expense of living. And we must grant them or be inconsistent. This means, even without increases, that the enterprises to be inaugurated by this bill will become liabilities instead of assets to the Government.

Now, if this were absolutely necessary, Mr. President, for the protection of the public interests or if by its operation we could destroy the monopolistic features of the electric element in our commercial life, I would not say a word; but if it will do nothing of the sort, certainly those of us—and fortunately I notice that there are a few more of us on this side than heretofore—who believe in retrenchment in public expenditures ought to consider this view of the bill. I do not know what the ultimate expense will be; perhaps my estimate would be a partisan one, but it certainly would be very large.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. HUGHES. The Senator referred to a report a while ago. Is that the voluminous $30,000 report about which there was discussion some months ago?

Mr. THOMAS. I think the Senator has it a little high. Its cost was $21,000.

Mr. HUGHES. Twenty-one thousand dollars.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes. Would the Senator like to read it?

Mr. HUGHES. I am not going to read it right away; but I remember at the time the estimate was made I stated that the report would be so voluminous that nobody would ever read it. I objected to its being printed, and to that expense being incurred. However, I was denounced as a reactionary and a standpatter, and other uncomplimentary things were said of me by certain "high-brow" papers in my State. All I have to say is that I wish those gentlemen who criticized me might be compelled to read that report.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I was criticized also; but, as suggested by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], in view of the price of paper now, there is a fair possibility of getting something back by selling it for waste paper.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to suggest that in addition to this document we might also sell some of the testimony for which we paid $90,000, and which nobody now wants, taken by what was called the Walsh investigating committee. I can not find anybody who wants it.

Mr. THOMAS. Why, Mr. President, I made the statement then that before the books were dry from the press the great majority of our people would forget that there ever had been such an investigation.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] that our last order for the sale of old public documents consisted of 976,000 volumes, which were sold at 80 cents a hundred; and next year, when the time comes around, we shall sell these for about 80 cents a hundred.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not care to intrude myself into the Senator's speech at this point, unless he desires that we should digress from the main question to the discussion of other questions.

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator wants to ask a question I will yield; but I do not care to yield otherwise.

Mr. NORRIS. I wanted it to be known, at least, that there were two sides to the incidental question which has been brought up here. I do not care, and do not think it proper, to discuss it here, but if we want to sell some old paper we had better sell the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. We will get about as much for that as for any other document.

Mr. THOMAS. I quite agree with the Senator and I will vote with him to-morrow to abolish the RECORD. So far as that is concerned I quite agree with him. Who reads the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD outside of the Senate? But that is a digression.

Mr. NORRIS. Who reads it inside of the Senate?

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, we all read our own speeches.

Mr. HUGHES. We all read what we send out as our own speeches.

Mr. THOMAS. We all read what we say about each other?

Now, Mr. President, I want to address myself for a moment to the suggestion of the Senator from Montana, that the rights of the States are recognized and conserved in the bill. I again quote from the bill:

Provided, That no lease shall be granted until the applicant has complied with the requirements of the laws of the State, States, or Territory wherein said project is to be located, providing for the appropriation of water to develop or generate the electrical energy intended to be generated by applicant's proposed project.

The Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] in the report to which I referred has shown that in his State this must be nugatory because some provisions of the law can not be complied with until the structure which is to use the water has been completed. There, of course, is a situation which would seem upon its face to be irreconcilable. This proviso, however, should be considered in connection with section 13:

SEC. 13. That nothing in this act shall be construed as affecting or intended to affect or to in any way interfere with the laws of any State relating to the control, appropriation, use, or distribution of water.

Mr. President, there is a strong family likeness between the irrigation codes of all the semiarid States. The main principles are identical; they differ only as to details, due either to differences of opinion among legislators or to local conditions making them necessary. Consequently, a reference to the laws of one of them is in large degree a reference to the laws of all of them.

In my State the waters of the natural streams are subject to appropriation for domestic, agricultural, and manufacturing purposes.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. And mining purposes.

Mr. THOMAS. Which includes mining; and they take priority in the order in which I have stated as to use. The superior right is the domestic one; the second in importance is the agricultural one; and the last is the manufacturing one. When there is not water enough for the three, the right of appropriation is in the order named. The two first are enjoyed by consuming the corpus of the water. The last generally applies to the power which is generated by the current without diminishing its volume; and of course that use is generally consistent with the others, or largely so.

Mr. VARDAMAN. What is the first use?

Mr. THOMAS. The domestic use; that is, water for the use of the family, for watering stock, and for those other things that are essential to the enjoyment of life.

These appropriations can be made in my State to be used wherever the appropriator needs to apply them. That may be 1 mile, it may be 10 miles, it may be 50 miles or more from the stream; but the power to appropriate and the power to use at the point where the use is needed necessarily involves the power to transport and, if necessary, of condemning a right of way therefor. Suppose that I or any citizen in the exercise of this right desires to utilize the water at some point and for some purpose not consistent with or in a manner different from that provided in this law but within the provisions of the State law, certainly there is a conflict; there necessarily must be a conflict. If the owner of a reservoir used for the generation of power transfers or permits the use of any of the water of his reservoir for the purposes of irrigation and agriculture, that creates a right, and, when once granted, the beneficiary can not be deprived of it. And it may well be that in the conflict between the rights which I have supposed—and I might suppose a good many others—and the lessee from the Government of the United States the laws of the State would either have to be recognized in such a way as to come in conflict with the Federal law or the enforcement of the Federal law would be such as to make it necessary to ignore the State law.

Such a conflict can be determined only through the department, or by litigation, or by both. We all know in our section of the country how extremely expensive are the controversies with governmental representatives and agencies. They frequently—in fact, I think in a majority of cases—involve a trip to the Capital; the delay consequent upon their consideration is always extremely annoying, and in many instances practically destructive of the remedy when it shall have been secured.

But, Mr. President, the constitution of my State, ratified by Congress and approved by the President, in Article XVI, section 7, provides:

> That all persons and corporations shall have the right of way across public, private, and corporate lands for the construction of ditches, canals, and flumes for the purpose of conveying water for domestic purposes, for the irrigation of agricultural lands, and for mining and manufacturing purposes, and for drainage, upon payment of just compensation.

The State could own no lands of its own before it came into existence. Consequently, there were no public lands to which this section could apply except those belonging to the Government of the United States. The provision for this right of way across the public lands for these purposes, therefore, must refer to the public domain. I think I shall demonstrate before I conclude that that is a perfectly legitimate exercise of State power, and that in the semiarid-region countries it is an absolutely necessary exercise of the supreme and plenary power of eminent domain of the State.

Under this provision John Smith, as a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Colorado and obtaining his water right for the generation of electricity under its laws, may invoke the constitution of his State by securing a public right of way as well as the lands necessary for the construction of his buildings. We have statutes, to which I shall refer presently, which, recognizing this right, provides for methods of its exercise. The John Smith Co. having exercised that authority, if the Robert Roe Co., lessee of the Government, makes a similar appropriation, with reservoir and rights inconsistent or in conflict with either the right of way or the reservoir or the volume of water, which may not be sufficient for both, how can there be a compliance with or a recognition of the laws of the State without doing violence to the provisions of this act which makes the factor of recognition important? How is it possible to apply this law practically to the conditions which must conform with it when we find such potential evidences of conflict between the two as to make them irreconcilable?

I have no doubt that the constitutions of the other semiarid States contain similar clauses; but whether they contain them or not the right of condemnation is there. It does not depend upon constitutions. It is plenary, and it is limited only by the exceptions which are imposed by the constitutions of the States or of the United States.

For the present, Mr. President, I shall not refer to all the terms of the bill; but I shall refer to the provision regarding control of those enterprises which are common to two or more States, jurisdiction over which is extended to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

It is not probable, Mr. President—though there may be cases of which I know nothing—that a corporation generating power and furnishing it to more than one State is incorporated in more than one State. That is to say, these corporations, like others, are a single body. Now, a corporation created under the laws of the State of Arizona, generating power in that State and extending its lines into the neighboring State of California, would under this bill come under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission; but the same company, if it limited its operations to the State of Arizona, would come under the jurisdiction of the public utilities commission of that Commonwealth. We can readily understand the principle upon which control is given to the Interstate Commerce Commission with reference to so much of the business as may lie outside of the State where the power plant is situated; but I am unable to perceive how the Interstate Commerce Commission can take charge of a corporation under those circumstances and regulate and fix its charges in Arizona, and at the same time harmonize with the requirements of the laws of that State concerning that and other corporations. Of course it can do so by conforming to the laws of Arizona; but by the very fact of thus conforming it reveals the necessity of doing so in order to regulate it, and that is not regulation. That is merely compliance with the requirements of another set of laws to avoid difficulty. I question the power of Congress, in other words, to extend the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission over a situation of that sort. It may be that this can be explained to my satisfaction. But to my mind—and I have examined the matter with some care—it seems to me to be a very serious objection to the details of the bill.

That reminds me of another which seems more serious. It is provided that at the end of 50 years there may be a recapture of the property—that being the expression used by the Senator from Montana in his report. The Government will not let go of these enterprises. It will make a lease for a maximum of 50 years, and at the end of the lease, under certain circumstances, it may be renewed, or it may be given to some one else on the condition that the new lessee shall compensate the old one for his property, or the Government may take over the enterprise at the end of the lease and operate it on its own account.

Now, let us see what situation that would produce or might produce. The Government of the United States—this great Republic, organized for the general welfare by the people of the United States—at the end of 50 years takes possession of an enterprise situated in the State of Colorado which I have built up under a lease from it at the end of my leasehold interest. The Government of the United States may operate that plant just as my company operated it. We are confined entirely to the Commonwealth in our distribution of electric current, and consequently our public-utilities commission had jurisdiction of the business. As a result, the Government becomes in practice a corporation of the State of Colorado, a corporation amenable to its laws, a corporation subject to punishment and forfeiture by the laws of the State of Colorado if they are violated, a corporation required to comply with the provisions and the rules of our State public utilities commission, a corporation whose right can be foreclosed in the event there should be a disregard of its legal requirements.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. WALSH. Does this bill provide that at the end of the 50 years, or any other leasehold period, the Government must take over this plant and must operate it?

Mr. THOMAS. No; but it provides that it can do so.

Mr. WALSH. Ah!

Mr. THOMAS. It may do so.

Mr. WALSH. Ah! And if it can not do it, it would have to make some other disposition, would it not?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, I do not think so. I think it could operate the plant or hang it up, just as nearly everything else is hung up now, under the modern policy of conservation.

Mr. WALSH. Let me make an inquiry of the Senator. The bill does not contemplate that the Government shall now operate the enterprise. It contemplates that it shall turn it over to a lessee; does it not?

Mr. THOMAS. The bill does not, of course, contemplate that the Government shall operate it in the first instance.

Mr. WALSH. No. It contemplates turning it over to a lessee; does it not?

Mr. THOMAS. It may turn it over to a lessee; yes.

Mr. WALSH. Exactly. Now, why should it not be likewise contemplated that at the end of 50 years it will turn it over to another lessee?

Mr. THOMAS. The bill merely provides that it may do so. Or it may acquire the plant.

Mr. WALSH. Then, why does the Senator discuss the question of the Government operating it and coming in contact with the State regulations?

Mr. THOMAS. I am discussing that because, under the terms of the bill, the Government can do so if it desires. I discuss it because the manner in which the bill is drawn invests the Government not only with the power of lease but with the power of recapture and operation. Consequently, Mr. President, I am justified in calling attention to the absurdities in which this bill might involve the United States with reference to its relations to a purely business matter within the limits of a State.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I want, then, to ask the Senator to point us to the clause which says that the Government may take the plant and operate it.

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator asks me to point out in terms anything in the bill which declares that the Government shall operate it, I will say that I can not lay my finger upon that exact language; but if the Senator maintains, from the fact that no specific power is given to the Government to operate it, that no such power exists, then I must contend that it is not necessary to grant it in specific terms. If the Government takes over a property of this kind, it either must lease it or it must operate it, or the property will go to ruin. If it lets it alone, it will go to ruin. Now, is it possible that the Senator is advocating here a bill which provides for a method of recapture that becomes useful only in the event the Government can find another lessee?—which I do not think it can do. I do not think it will ever find an original one under this bill, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. WALSH. Why, Mr. President, if the Government could not operate, did not want to operate, and could not find another lessee, as a matter of course it would not take it over. If it ever does take it over, it will be because it has found another lessee or because it is going to operate it itself and can operate it.

Mr. THOMAS. The bill should say that in very explicit terms, then.

Mr. WALSH. It does. It gives the Government the right to take it over at the end of 50 years.

Mr. THOMAS. I differ with the Senator in that regard, and I believe that the position which I have endeavored to present is the one which is justified both by the purpose of the bill and by the obvious necessity of operating the plant in the event no new lessee can be discovered. It can take the plant over; it can renew the lease; it can lease to another; it can do nothing.

Mr. President, I have said that this is a departure from the general policy of the Government with regard to its land administration, or, rather, the beginning of a departure which is so radical that it deserves very serious consideration before we embark upon it. I refer to the leasehold provisions of the bill.

Mr. President, when the Senate adjourned yesterday afternoon I had called attention to some of the detailed recitals of the bill under consideration and was about to discuss the subject from a somewhat broader standpoint. I wish now to revert for a moment to what was said yesterday regarding the so-called subject of recapture and that section of the bill in which the Government reserves that right. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] challenged the soundness of my criticism that in the event any lease granted under this bill shall have expired and the Government shall have taken the plant over it might operate the property on its own account. I think a careful reading of the fifth section of the bill more than justifies the conclusion which I announced yesterday. There are two sections relating to the subject, the fifth providing for a taking over of the property by the Government, the sixth for a renewal of the lease or for the granting of another lease to the same property to a new lessee. Section 5 provides—

That upon not less than three years' notice, the United States shall have the right upon the expiration of any lease to take over all the properties constructed, acquired, or owned by any lessee, and valuable or serviceable in the development, generation, or transmission of electric current, or in the storage or distribution of water to the point of delivery to irrigation or domestic water systems, which are dependent in whole or in part for their usefulness on the continuance of the lease herein provided for, or the right to take over, upon mutual agreement with the lessee, a severable and complete unit of any such power system, upon condition that it shall pay in a lawful warrant drawn on the Treasury of the United States, or otherwise, before taking possession the fair value of such property.

Provision is then made for determining the value of the property in the event the Government shall elect to exercise this right of recapture.

It will be observed that in this section there is no reference whatever to a renewal of the old or to the making of a new lease upon the property. This does not contemplate anything of the sort, and it puts the Government in the ridiculous position of reserving a so-called right of recapture and then letting the property lie idle and unused if it does not carry with it as a necessary incident the power to operate the recaptured property upon its own account.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado whether he understands by that provision that the Government could take over water rights that had been acquired?

Mr. THOMAS. I was just coming to that.

Mr. WORKS. Very well. I am sorry I interrupted the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. The interruption does not interfere in the slightest, and I am very glad to yield at any time to the Senator. Here is the language. I will read it again:

Valuable or serviceable in the development—

And so forth—

or in the storage or distribution of water to the point of delivery to irrigation or domestic water systems.

The Government, in the event it exercises this reserve right and takes over a plant or an establishment which, in addition to the generation of current, supplies water for irrigation or domestic purposes, must necessarily continue that function of the property taken over, or else those dependent upon the water for those two prime purposes of life might not only be subject to serious menace to health and to life, but their crops would be menaced by destruction through the inaction of the Government, which by recapture had taken possession and acquired the ownership of the property. I think, therefore, Mr. President, that my assertions of yesterday regarding recapture were within instead of without the provisions of the bill.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. JONES. Would it not also be true if the Government did take over these water rights and ceased to use the water under the State laws it would lose its right?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; the United States, of course, like any other owner of water, under State laws would subject itself to forfeiture by nonuse; but in the meantime what would become of the irrigation or the domestic interests, or both of them, dependent upon their constant supply?

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to know what the Senator thinks about the relations that would exist under those circumstances as between the Government and the State.

Mr. THOMAS. I discussed them yesterday.

Mr. WORKS. I am sorry I missed what the Senator said on yesterday.

Mr. THOMAS. I am indebted to the Senator for my presentation of that phase, because I followed the minority report which the Senator prepared, and which I think covers the whole situation.

But, Mr. President, in this recapture a far more serious situation is involved, for the Government not only takes over to itself the land forming the subject of the lease, but also the water right theretofore belonging to the company and necessary for the generation of power, and which, if I understood yesterday the Senator from Montana, having charge of the bill, is recognized as a State property or something acquired through the agency of the State by the lessee from the Government, and, of course, absolutely necessary for the carrying on of the business.

Mr. MYERS. If the Senator will permit me just there——

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. MYERS. If the Federal Government would take over the work, I do not think the Federal Government would become the owner of the water. It would own the plant and would succeed to any right of the leaseholder as an appropriator of the water, and would thereby become an appropriator of the use of the water.

Mr. THOMAS. That is stating, I think, in different terms my own proposition. It takes whatever ownership the company has acquired either by location of the appropriation of water itself or by securing the appropriation of others. There is a transfer of whatever the owner of the plant has in the water, whatever title he has acquired in the water from the State, to the Government of the United States. We would therefore have the United States in this position, through a measure designed to develop hydroelectric energy and based entirely—because it must be so based—upon its ownership of the land necessary for the general enterprise, it becomes through its power of recapture the owner of the use of the water in addition to its land ownership arising wholly through the operation of the State law.

Mr. President, that is a pretty serious situation with which to confront the agricultural industries of the semiarid West.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Before the Senator passes from the subject he has just been discussing I wish to inquire of him whether the same situation will not be presented under the provisions of the Shields bill, which permits the occupancy of a navigable stream for a period of 50 years and at the end of that period of 50 years permits the Government to capture the work in connection with it.

Mr. THOMAS. I think I so stated in the few remarks I submitted when that bill was under consideration.

Mr. WALSH. So, as far as that is concerned, they stand upon exactly the same footing.

Mr. THOMAS. I think they stand in their effect upon substantially the same footing.

Mr. WALSH. I mean so far as the operation is concerned.

Mr. THOMAS. So far as the operation of the two laws is concerned, they might produce identical results. But, Mr. President, because one vicious bill has been enacted or is about to be enacted by Congress is no reason why we should enact another.

Mr. WALSH. I quite agree with the Senator. I wish to ask the Senator if he voted for the Shields bill?

Mr. THOMAS. I certainly did not, and I was very much tempted to oppose it to the end. I did not do so because it does not directly affect the people whom I in part represent here and also because those who are advocating the bill seemed to feel that the urgent necessity for some sort of relief justified such concessions to the governmental demand as seemed to be necessary to secure any relief whatever. But, like all compromises of a great question or a great condition, they seem to have fallen between two stools. The bill is not satisfactory to men who believe as I do about it. It is not satisfactory to those of the extreme type of conservationists, and who presented the most formidable opposition which the bill encountered. Inasmuch as it gives no satisfaction to either I do not know whether it will ever become a law or not. If I consulted my own feelings, I would hope that it never would be written upon the statute books.

Mr. MYERS. If the Senator will permit an observation right there, I wish to call his attention to the fact, which, of course, he knows as well or better than I do, that the United States Government may appropriate water in the streams of a State now, and there is no difference between that right and a right acquired by acquiring the right of a prior appropriator. They stand on the same footing.

Mr. THOMAS. I said yesterday if the Government of the United States at any time needed the use of the waters of the natural streams in the arid States, it could acquire them only by complying with the State law, but I do not think the Government, certainly not without some statute upon the subject, would have the right in the Senator's State or my State to make an appropriation of water for the generation of power, certainly not for the purpose of selling that power to consumers, coming in competition with its own citizens.

Mr. WALSH. Let me ask the Senator from Colorado if the Government is not doing just that now in the case of Arizona? Does not the Government operate a great power in the State of Arizona?

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Senator contend that the United States is operating a power plant under appropriations conforming to the laws of the State of Arizona and selling the power to consumers?

Mr. WALSH. That is my understanding about it.

Mr. THOMAS. If that is the case——

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The Senator will understand that we make no claim that the Government will permanently use that power.

Mr. WALSH. That is not the question.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The obligation rests on the people to pay back into the Treasury the ten or twelve million dollars that have been advanced.

Mr. WALSH. Exactly. The Government is carrying on a great irrigation project in the State of Arizona and incidental to that project there is power developed. They have diverted the water for irrigation, and they use that same water for the development of power, and they are selling that power to the city of Phoenix.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Supreme Court of the United States in the Kansas-Colorado case, reported in Two hundred and sixth United States, decided that the Federal Government is without any constitutional power to go into the business of reclamation in any State of the Union. That decision has received no sort of consideration so far as I am able to judge in the Agricultural and Interior Departments which administer the reclamation system, and the fact that the Government in addition to proceeding with these reclamation projects unites to it the right to build a power plant and to generate current and sell it indicates to my mind the wisdom of the decision of the Supreme Court to which I have just referred on the one hand, while it emphasizes my contention upon the other, that this matter of recapture means, and necessarily must mean, that in the event it is done the Government of the United States will go into the business under State laws of generating current on its own account and selling it to the consumers of the country.

Now, that may be a desirable thing to do. I am quite willing if it becomes the universal practice, and if for the purpose of preventing monopoly it becomes necessary for the Government to embark in the business to accede to it, but to accede to it in a proper way, and that is by determining expressly through legislative action that such shall be its policy.

But in the case mentioned, Mr. President, in a reclamation project, the waters are gathered together under appropriations and conserved in a huge reservoir, primarily for the purpose of reclaiming the lands of the Government, lands which but for such a system would always remain waste and contribute nothing to the benefit and welfare of human kind.

It may possibly be that assuming—and, of course, we must assume it, notwithstanding the opinion of the Supreme Court, these great projects having gone ahead and which are very beneficial—assuming that the Government has the power of reclamation of its own land in the States through the accumulation of large bodies of water, where, through a permanent reservoir system, it may be utilized for the cultivation of waste places of the earth, there is also a power brought into existence, that power may be utilized by the Government for the benefit of the people upon that reclamation project, without in any manner affecting the argument I am attempting to make. Of course that assumes also, which the law provides, that ultimately the people who take up this reclaimed land shall take over both the reservoir and the system of canals and everything appurtenant to it.

But I do not believe, Mr. President, that the existence of such conditions in any way militates against the position which I think the bill will put the Government in in the event it becomes a law. The Government did not file upon water, make appropriations of water, through a compliance with the local law, for the purpose of building a power plant, of generating power, and of supplying customers who were dependent upon the supply for the carrying on of their business and for whatever purposes it was necessary for them to use it. I think if the Government had attempted anything of that kind it would have been confronted at the threshold with the question of power, whether any particular agency or function of public administration required or permitted anything of the sort. If not, then certainly no such authority would exist.

So I leave this branch of the discussion with this statement, when the Government exercises its power of recapture it takes back not only what it had before but an ownership in water granted by the State to its lessee, which it did not have before, and which by the alchemy of national legislation it attaches to itself. That is one way to confiscate property. It is one way to deprive a State of its right and ownership of an element which is absolutely essential to its economic existence.

Suppose, Mr. President, that the Government, after making these recaptures, should sit supinely by and do nothing, who can compel it to set the wheels in motion? Can the State do it? Possibly, but how? By the use of physical force? Not at all. By legislation? That depends upon the attitude which the Federal courts would take upon the subject. But theoretically it is and ought to be impossible for an outsider, even though a mutual or a dominant sovereignty, to come within the domain of that sovereignty restricted only by self-imposed limitations and acquire an element or the control of an element, wholly or in part, the existence and use of which is absolutely essential not only to its welfare and well-being but in a large degree to its very existence.

A law which would permit it, although the power might be exercised humanely, generously, and beneficially, is a dangerous law not only in the abstract but as a precedent for legislation of similar and possibly of far more serious character.

I said, Mr. President, yesterday when the Senate adjourned that this bill attempted, among other things, to initiate a departure from the general land policy of the Government and was one of a series of measures designed ultimately to withhold from purchase and settlement practically all the remaining domain of the Continental United States outside of Alaska and permit the use of them only by the people of the country.

I feel, therefore, that even if the bill in its details was perfectly satisfactory, a departure so vast in its reach and so tremendous in its operation should not be entered upon without very serious consideration of its objections.

The policy of the Government, with one exception, ever since its organization down to the commencement of the twentieth century has been to dispose of its domain to actual settlers and purchasers. That has been not only its policy, but in the acts of concession made by the original States to the Government it was expressly provided that the land should be so disposed of, that Commonwealths might be erected through the attraction which cheap land would offer not only to the people of this but of other countries.

That policy was carried out. It began with what are now the States of Ohio, Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, and spread westward from the first States which were admitted until it traversed the Mississippi Valley, extended to the foothills of the Rocky Mountains, and finally reached the shores of the Pacific Ocean. Had the policy which this bill seeks to introduce been that of our fathers the hundred million people who to-day joyfully give their allegiance to a common Government and a common flag would perhaps not exceed one-third of that number, and these would constitute a nation of tenants instead of a nation of landholders, a citizenry dependent upon a universal landlord called the Government instead of a citizenry rooted to the soil, representatives of Anglo-Saxon ideals and exponents of Anglo-Saxon liberty. Away back in 1825 Mr. Webster, then a Member of the United States Senate, said upon this subject:

> The great object of the Government in respect to those lands is not so much the money derived from their sale as the getting of them settled.

When he said that he expressed what was then a generally and universally conceded proposition, one the denial of which would in all probability have created the profoundest surprise.

At one time the Government did enter upon a leasing policy with regard to some of its mineral lands, notably those in western Illinois, where the city of Galena now stands. It was found so unsatisfactory, so expensive, and so ill in accord with our policies and our theories that upon the recommendation of President Polk, I think, the policy was abandoned; and it remains for us of this generation to seek to revive it in widespread form and to apply it now to all mineral lands except those containing metals and to the agricultural lands of the country. The bill proposes to lease those small pieces of territory which by reason of their natural location and physical characteristics are more suitable for power sites than anything else.

Another bill which has been introduced and which is upon our calendar, the passage of which will doubtless be pressed at this session, seeks to provide for the leasing of all lands containing oil, gas, phosphates, and other salts and solutions; and if I am not mistaken it also provides for the leasing of coal lands. The lands of the West containing these deposits are very large in extent, and as a preliminary to the operation of this proposed measure the most of them, constituting millions of acres, have been withdrawn from location and private sale.

The only reason why the gold mines and lead mines and copper mines and silver mines are not included within this general scheme is that the sentiment of that section of the country where those mines are located has been strong enough thus far to limit this new purpose of administrations and of departments to other so-called mineral lands not known as metalliferous. The time is coming, Mr. President, in my judgment, it must come, if we enter upon a leasing policy, when it will not only embrace the gold mines in the State of Montana, the silver and lead and other metalliferous deposits in the State of Montana, but those in all of the other States. Then it will be but a step to the reservation of all of the remaining agricultural lands of the country. I am told that a bill, called the Lever bill, having the latter for its purpose, has been introduced in the House of Representatives and has been at some time considered, although not reported, by the House Committee on the Public Lands. I am not surprised at it. It is but the logical sequence of a new dispensation which finds its first actual expression upon this floor in the bill which we are now considering.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. What do I understand to be the provisions of the Lever bill to which the Senator refers?

Mr. THOMAS. It is a bill which is designed to reserve all the lands of continental United States from occupation and patent. My authority for that is one of my colleagues in the other House. I have not myself seen the bill.

Mr. WALSH. May I ask the Senator to what end is that proposed?

Mr. THOMAS. It is to the end that the Government may retain the title and allow its citizens to secure the benefits through contract and lease. I do not know what other purpose could be subserved by it.

Mr. WALSH. Does the Senator feel that there is sentiment enough in the other House to give much encouragement to that proposition?

Mr. THOMAS. Not now, but it is growing; and it will receive a powerful stimulus from legislation of this sort.

The homesteader to-day can not get a deed in fee simple to a piece of Government property. When the Senator and I first went West, the homesteader and the preemptor got a deed, giving him an absolute title in fee simple to his 100 acres of land, with no reservation whatever. Now, gold, silver, coal, salts, gas, oil, every conceivable thing except the bare surface, is exempted and reserved from the title, together with the right of development of the same if any should be exposed thereon or thereunder. Scarcely a week passes that I do not receive a letter of protest from some patentee who, upon reading his title, finds that he has acquired the right to live upon the surface, but that the Government practically retains everything else that he supposed he was getting under the laws of his country when he endured the privation and incurred the expense of occupation.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I do not like to interrupt the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield further to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. But I think the statement which the Senator has now made ought to have some further explanation. The law is just exactly the same now as it always was. If a man enters a homestead he gets absolute title, without any restrictions whatever, and he owns everything there is in that homestead; but under the old law he could not take any land in which it was believed there were minerals of any kind. Now, he can go and take that land which is mineral in character; he acquires a surface right in that land, and the minerals are reserved. We have all asked for that law out West.

Mr. THOMAS. I hope I have overstated the situation, but I have stated it as I understand it.

Mr. WALSH. The situation of the law, as I think the Senator will find, is as I have stated it.

Mr. THOMAS. I am obliged to the Senator for correcting me whenever he thinks I make a mistake or a misstatement. My impression is, however, that the present method of issuing patents is universal. If it is not so, then, of course, I stand corrected.

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator will permit me, the situation is just this: A man enters a homestead. He may now make proof in three years. The Government will not let him enter it as an ordinary homesteader if the land is known to be mineral in character; but he enters a tract of land that is not known to be mineral in character, but, between the time he makes his entry and the time that he comes to make proof, it is discovered that there is coal in the land. Under the old law he could not get title to that land at all, but now the Government gives him a patent entitling him to the surface, reserving the minerals to the Government.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator from Montana understand that these exceptions or exemptions in the patent apply only to those lands where there has been a discovery of actual metal, and so forth?

Mr. WALSH. No, Mr. President; but certain lands are marked off as coal lands, and those you may enter, knowing beforehand that they are thus classified.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly.

Mr. WALSH. And you get the same right there now. Under the old law you could not enter that land at all. That was always the law. There never was a time when you could take a homestead of land that was marked out as containing mineral of any kind.

Mr. BORAH. Permit me, then, to put it in a different way, for I do not think the Senator understood me precisely. In all instances where these exemptions are made, does the Senator contend that it has been classified as mineral land or that between the time of entry and the patent they have discovered mineral thereon?

Mr. WALSH. Exactly.

Mr. BORAH. That is the theory, but that is not the practical working of it.

Mr. WALSH. How does it work?

Mr. BORAH. There are numerous instances I know of which have come under my observation, as the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] says, by letter, and so forth, in which, while it is claimed that there is mineral in the land, there has been no discovery whatever, and no mineral exists there, so far as any evidence now to be had can demonstrate it.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator, of course, will appreciate that in marking off these lands as coal lands, or lands valuable for oil or valuable for phosphates, they undoubtedly often embrace areas that are too large; we have all complained about that; and I stand with the Senator from Idaho on that; but that is not the point. They are classified as mineral lands.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly. You could classify the best alfalfa lands in the West as mineral lands.

Mr. WALSH. But, of course, that is a matter of administration. I admit that.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, under the former policy, lands were classified generally as either mineral or agricultural. Those which were classified as mineral were presumably so, and they could be entered and prospected as such. The others, which were classified as agricultural lands, could be homesteaded, and the patent would carry everything that an ordinary private conveyance in fee simple would carry. So long as the classification stood—but, of course, it was not an actual one, not strictly correct, because there was frequently nonmineral land in mineral classifications, and vice versa—but so long as that stood, the distinction, though arbitrary, was pretty well lived up to.

The grant by the Government to the Union Pacific Railroad Co. of every alternate section was a grant of agricultural land, and the mineral lands were excluded, as was the case with all these grants. In some sections of the country which were traversed by this particular right of way, and in the northern and the northeastern part of my State the Union Pacific Railroad Co. began about 25 years ago to insert in its conveyances to individuals a reservation of any coal that might be afterwards discovered within its lands. It discovered some coal, in some instances indications of coal, in one of the most widely extended agricultural regions of my State. In that section, which is devoted almost, if not entirely, to agriculture, either because there has been a reclassification of the land as mineral, or because the Government is seeking to follow the example—the frugal example—of the Union Pacific Railroad Co., or for some other reason, these exemptions apply, and to the fellow who has taken advantage of the largess of his Government and has moved his family upon a quarter section and spent his money and his time upon it, it is a very poor comfort to know that land which is really agricultural and is or should be so classified somewhere, that a great portion of its value is withheld from him by the Government, which he is taxed to support.

Of course, as I said before, I recognize that there have been great abuses of the land laws of the United States, but I also must always reiterate the proposition that these abuses were not the outgrowth of State laws nor of State administration, but of Federal laws and of Federal administration. It is pretty hard to be punished for something for which one is not only not guilty, but which he was entirely unable to prevent.

Mr. President, I think that every man in or out of Congress is opposed to a general tenantry system in this country. We do not believe in it. There is about it that lack of genuine independence which the ownership of the soil or the freehold gives. There can be no such thing as a virile, patriotic nation composed of tenants or composed in the most part of tenants. One of the purposes of our Federal farm-loan bill is to do away with the constantly growing evil of increasing tenant farming, to the end that such assistance may be furnished through the statutes of the United States and their operation as to minimize, if not to do away with, that evil.

If I understand the reason which underlies that general feeling of antipathy to the tenantry system, apart from the experiences of other nations with whose history we are familiar, it is that the dependence, that ownership of the man which comes from ownership of the soil, is inconsistent with the institutions of a free people. I do not believe that when this Government was organized it was ever imagined that it would become the owner of a widespread continental domain, or that, if it should acquire such domain, it would pretend to hold any part of it in perpetuity. Certainly if that had been imagined, the Louisiana purchase would never have been accomplished, and the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo would have contained conditions and requirements imposing upon the Government the duty which for the rest of the century it carefully observed in the disposition of its land.

What we want in this country is population. What we desire is a fine citizenship. What we desire is the spread of our institutions among a liberty-loving, landholding people. What we need above all things, Mr. President, is to attach as many people to the soil permanently as possible. The man who owns a farm is very seldom a lawless citizen; the man who has something invested in real estate somewhere is almost always a dependable citizen; and the men not so situated generally comprise within their numbers those elements which are more or less dangerous to the future and the welfare of the Republic. Of course, I am speaking in general terms. Hence, unless the ideal conditions which we strive for are compatible with the leasing system, we should not under any circumstances adopt it as a national policy.

One effect—and I think my friend from Montana will agree with me—of the wide extension of the Forest Service has been to do away very largely with the old prospector. It may be said that these lands are still open to the locator and prospector; and in a way, Mr. President, that is true. The right to prospect for and locate mining claims in forest reserves exists, or to acquire a homestead is largely an abstract right; the prospecting must be carried on under so much supervision by those in charge of the reservations that it is not as active as it once was, and I think it is becoming less and less so all the time. I thought I had a copy of what is known as the Use Book in my desk. I wanted to show it to the Senate that they might see from its bulk and from the multitude of its regulations just what seems to be necessary for the proper administration of their affairs.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to his colleague?

Mr. THOMAS. In just a moment. There are rules, and then there are more rules; there are regulations, and then there are counter regulations, the whole constituting a pamphlet half as thick as the one I hold in my hand and numbering, I think, some 150 pages. You encounter them from the moment you step upon the reservation; you are confronted with them at every turn of the road; and you can hear their echoes as you leave the borders on the other side. Now, I yield to my colleague.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, does not the principal obstacle to the prospector arise from the fact that, after he has made his application for patent, an expert, or a supposed expert, is sent from the department to ascertain whether it is reasonable to suppose that his mine will become a pay mine?

Mr. THOMAS. That is expressing perhaps concretely what I was trying to say. The power of determining whether he has discovered something worth patenting or not is largely taken from him. Now, generally speaking, the prospector knows his business; he makes a great many mistakes; but he knows more about a mine and about those geological and physical indications which may justify the expenditure of money or the making of a location than the best mining engineer that I ever saw, to say nothing of the ordinary Government employee, who, whatever his theoretical knowledge may be, is not in the same class with the prospector.

Let me give you an illustration. Cripple Creek is the greatest gold camp to-day, in all probability, in the United States, and has been for years. In 1890 it was a cow pasture. It was regarded as entirely outside of the mineral belt. The central 160 acres where the town of Cripple Creek lies, were patented as an agricultural claim. Some unfortunate farmers in Kansas and western Nebraska, impoverished by drought, drifted westward, went to what is now Cripple Creek, and began prospecting for minerals. They were ridiculed by the old miners who referred to them in terms far more contemptuous than elegant. They were commiserated by men of scientific attainments. They discovered gold by digging beneath the surface, since the veins did not outcrop; and it was only after they had proven by the actual development of the ground that they had located a great gold-bearing region that the people "sat up and took notice," so to speak, and that the tyro had discovered gold where gold was not supposed to be; where geologists said it was not; where the opinion of the mining world was against it; and where it never would have been discovered, Mr. President, if at that time it had been included within a forest reserve. In other words, the spirit of enterprise and energy which peopled the West, and which is behind our mineral development everywhere, has been and is being largely paralyzed by this mistaken policy.

The oil out in the desert in California and on the plains of Wyoming, these great bodies of wealth were discovered by the energy and the expenditure and the hazard of men willing to take a chance, who thought they knew what the laws of their country are, and who believed they could find something to enrich themselves and enrich the Nation at the same time. If it had not been for that spirit, those vast reservoirs of oil, now so valuable and so necessary, in my humble judgment, never would have been exposed, and the desert would have remained the solitude that it was before they opened it up and revealed the existence of the marvelous treasure house. But the Government then came in; and since then, just as soon as a man erects a derrick on the public lands and reaches the point with his drill where the odor of oil assails his nostrils, it withdraws the land from further occupation, because, forsooth, there may be some violation of the law through the acquisition of title, or because the thing discovered should be conserved for future generations. Of course there are chances, large chances, for fraud in these conditions; but, Mr. President, that has been so ever since man came upon earth, and will continue, even under the leasehold system, until human nature shall undergo a most radical change.

I met a young man yesterday morning at the Willard Hotel, a constituent of mine. I was very much surprised to see him, and asked him what he was doing down here. "Why," he said, "last year my friends and I entered upon some land in northern Wyoming, having gone to the land office and found that it was open. We organized a company, sunk a well, and found some oil. Our locations were all right, but a short time ago the entire tract was withdrawn, and I have come to see if it is possible to get some relief for my company." I asked him if he was making much progress, and he said, "Unfortunately, very little; but," he said, "if I do not get relief soon I am broke; I have got to take up something else." I suggested to him that he look for oil somewhere else. His reply was significant: "I may, but it will not be in the United States on the public lands." Now, I do not blame him a particle, for there is no inducement for a man to seek to better his condition by complying with the requirements of the law regarding locations, only to have the governmental authority step in at the critical moment and say "Because your efforts have been rewarded with success, therefore we will withdraw this land from occupation and purchase. Sometime, somewhere, somehow we may be able to inaugurate a leasing system, and then, if you desire to become Uncle Sam's tenant, we will see whether we can agree upon terms regarding your discovery." Such seems to be the attitude in administration circles.

Mr. President, I do not think that we should enter upon that system. I believe that the Congress should set the seal of its disapproval upon the first step in that direction; and I fervently believe, although I know that my distinguished friends from Montana are of the contrary opinion, that if this bill becomes a law it will prove a grave disappointment to its sponsors. I do not believe that it will attract capital, unless, perhaps, there be a few mighty streams not yet appropriated capable of generating enormous quantities of power, and therefore sufficiently attractive to command the capital necessary for development.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I trust I am not annoying the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator is not annoying me at all.

Mr. WALSH. There are so many Senators here exhibiting their deep interest in this important question that I feel moved to address a question to the Senator now for their enlightenment. The Senator does not want to lease the power sites, these immensely valuable tracts of land; and, of course, if he does not want to lease them he wants to convey them away in perpetuity—alienate them in fee. Have I interpreted the views of the Senator correctly?

Mr. THOMAS. Well, partly; not entirely.

Mr. WALSH. I understand from the Senator's minority report that he wants us simply to convey this land away to the States, pass a simple law reading something like this: "All power sites within the public-land States are hereby granted to the States, respectively." That is the attitude of the Senator, is it?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Why not?

Mr. THOMAS. Why, Mr. President, I do not know that the value of a piece of the public domain has anything to do with the policy of the Government toward it. I know a mine to-day that pays $250,000 a month in dividends, which the Government sold to the locator for $5 an acre. Does the value of the property have anything to do with the policy which should actuate this Government with regard to its public domain?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, as I have tried to listen to this debate, not only to-day but on other occasions in years gone by, I have observed, it seemed to me, two schools of thought, one that seems to want these lands to be held by the Federal Government and to have the Government determine the conditions on which power-plant companies may be organized; while the other school of thought desires all of these lands to be turned over to the States.

Mr. THOMAS. Either that or disposed of so that the title may be acquired by citizens of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. And be taxable.

Mr. POMERENE. I am glad to have the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado. Now, do the students of this question, whether they belong to the first school of thought or the second, agree as to the terms and conditions which should be attached to the water companies when they are in fact organized; and, if they differ, in what respect do they differ?

Mr. THOMAS. Well, I can not say, Mr. President, that we can agree. I do not know that we have tried to agree. The water companies and power companies in my State are subject to the public-utilities commission, just as the same class of corporations are presumably under the jurisdiction of the public-utilities commission of Ohio. I do not think that is a matter of agreement; that is a matter which each State must determine for itself; but, so far as I am aware, the efficiency of the State utility commissions in their administration of these matters is quite as satisfactory—well, I will perhaps say, more satisfactory than I think a general national public-utilities commission over the same subject would be.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PHELAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. A gentleman came to my office the other day, who wants to build in the State of Montana a great paper mill. He wants to develop power to supply that paper mill. He does not intend to sell one particle of that power, but he is going to use it all to operate his mill. What jurisdiction has a public-utilities commission over him?

Mr. THOMAS. Which public-utilities commission?

Mr. WALSH. Any public-utilities commission.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not think they ought to have any jurisdiction over him if he is simply manufacturing power to be used in his own private business.

Mr. WALSH. In other words, there will be an enormous amount of this power developed and utilized by those who develop it, and it never will fall under the public utilities commission.

Mr. THOMAS. Why should it? This identical gentleman can go and purchase some plant, if he can meet the amount required as a consideration, that is already in operation, and by using the current for his own private purpose he can doubtless escape jurisdiction of the commission, and ought to, as fully as though he were using steam instead of electric power.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to have the Senator, then, tell his colleagues here what kind of a law he would like to have made that would enable that man to occupy public land to build his dam in order to operate his paper mill.

Mr. THOMAS. I shall try to do that before I take my seat.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. I should not like to have it understood, as suggested by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], that there are just two schools of thought on this subject, taking the extreme views mentioned by the Senator. My own position lies between those two extremes. I think if the Government is going to part with this land in any way, it should make an absolute sale of the land for whatever it may be worth for the purposes to which it may be applied; and in endeavoring to carry out that idea I have offered an amendment providing for just that thing.

I do not think we have quite reached the time yet when Congress is ready to turn over these properties to the States. I think it is going to come to that after a while; but I certainly should not be disposed to have this particular kind of property turned over unless the whole thing goes to the States, which I think will come about sooner or later.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I only desired to ask the Senator from Colorado if it would not remove a great deal of objection, and be better in a general way, if all the leases were made so that after a period of, say, 50 years, the water power, for instance, would revert back to the State which is now the original owner of it.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, Mr. President, to me that would be preferable to the provisions of this bill; but my antipathy to the conversion of my country into a huge landlord is so great that I do not care even to consider the milder phase of such a system.

Mr. President, I did not intend at this time to speak upon the subject; but since it has been introduced by the queries which have just been made, I want to say in passing, that for years I have believed that the one solution of this entire question is the transfer to the respective States of all of the domain within their boundaries. I believe that that is the only way. It may not be the perfect way; it may not address itself to the judgment of others as being the only efficacious way. When I compare the administration of our land laws and our domain by the Government of the United States with that of many of the States, with the administration of their school lands, and that of the State of Texas with the administration of its great domain, I realize that it is the most fortunate State in the Union. Every Texan, before he retires, should kneel at his bedside and thank God that the Government of the United States never owned any of its land. We would long ago have avoided the expense, the controversy, the litigation, the time which Congress has been obliged to devote to the general question—all these would have been spared and done away with—had that policy been adopted, as it should have been, many years ago.

Mr. President, I have spent more time in stating my objections to the landlord-and-tenant system of Government land administration than I intended to. I have assumed, perhaps wrongly, that the proposition is too self-evident to require much more than its statement to be rejected. I want to add, however, in passing, that it is true that these water-power sites are of great value. I do not question it. But what makes them of great value? It is the water, Mr. President, which can be utilized for the generation of electricity, which belongs to the people of the States. Take away from them the use of the water for this particular purpose, and 90 per cent of them are of no value whatever.

Is it possible that because they are valuable through the easy application of this great agency to a great public purpose, therefore the Government should play the dog in the manger, and refuse to allow us to use these sites, and refuse to use them itself, except upon terms and conditions which virtually amount to a confiscation of a great State asset? I think not; and until the Senate votes to the contrary I shall believe that such is the opinion of the majority here.

Mr. President, another objection which I have outlined to this bill is that in its operation it must encounter and seriously injure a function of the States, thus affecting the political integrity of the Commonwealths where it will be made operative. It is the exercise of a sovereignty—a foreign sovereignty, in one sense—over a subject which peculiarly belongs to the State, which can not be delegated, and which the Federal Government does not possess as to the particular subject. Every community which exercises public functions of government, whether it be a city of 1,000 people or a nation of 100,000,000, has the right, which it must exercise if it is to properly discharge its duties at all times, of taking over, or authorizing others to take over, such of the property within its jurisdiction, and sometimes outside of its jurisdiction, as may be essential to the public welfare. It is a right which can not be delegated. It is a right which is absolutely inherent in every nationality. It is a right which can not be controlled except by the limitations which the community itself imposes. I allude, of course, to the power of eminent domain, which the people of the States in their sovereign capacity as a Commonwealth, or certain subdivisions of the State in their capacity as municipal organizations, or public-utility corporations organized by law and to which are delegated certain semipublic functions, may exercise.

The bill goes upon the theory that unless the General Government shall give to the States, by express law, the right in some way to occupy these power sites and these Federal reserves and the other public domain of the United States, it will be impossible for them to develop their resources or to acquire such things as may be necessary for their well-being or essential, even, to their existence. In other words, it goes upon the theory that as to all the public domain within the limits of a State the Government of the United States is supreme; that this domain is over and above and beyond the jurisdiction and the laws of the State, and many good lawyers seem to have accepted that view. Recent decisions of the Supreme Court contain some expressions which are said to justify that view. I have sometimes heard it said before the committee in discussion, and I think once or twice it has been intimated here, that unless and until the Government shall legislate with regard to this subject we of the Western States are powerless, and the generation of hydroelectric current will remain stationary in the West. I am satisfied that when the Senator from Montana asked me how I would reach this subject without some Federal legislation he assumed that we could do nothing unless we did have affirmative Federal legislation. To that I can not assent.

Mr. President, I have been greatly assisted with regard to this particular branch of the discussion by one of the most eminent young lawyers at the bar of Colorado, who had occasion to present it to the United States district court some time ago in a case entitled United States of America against Colorado Power Co. I refer to Mr. William V. Hodges, of Denver, who exhausted the subject up to the time when his brief was prepared. I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate in referring to and at times in reading the argument of Mr. Hodges, since it is much more connected and systematic than any of my own without giving an equal degree of diligence to its preparation.

I referred yesterday to section 7 of the constitution of my State, which gives the right of way across all land, public, private, and corporate, for the construction of ditches, canals, and flumes for the purpose of conveying water for domestic purposes, irrigation, mining and manufacturing, and for drainage. That constitutional provision has been the subject of appropriate legislation providing methods for its exercise, and particularly by the legislature of 1915, which enacted a statute which I will not read, but merely refer to, the title of which is:

> An act relating to the appropriation of land for corporate and public purposes, to the procedure for the appropriation of land and rights in land belonging to the United States, the State of Colorado, or any other State or sovereignty, and to actions by property owners against such corporations in possession.

The act is an interesting one to the lawyer. It consists of five sections. It was very carefully prepared; and although it is perhaps an experiment in legislation, it assumes, as I think justly, the right to legislate upon the question, and of course the power of enacting the provisions which it contains. But that law and the provision of the constitution of the State to which I refer become absolutely nugatory; they are not worth the paper they are written upon if the assumption upon which this bill is founded be a correct one, since the power stops whenever public land is encountered whether it is withdrawn or reserved or not, and if it does so stop then the power of eminent domain in Colorado, instead of being coterminous with the limits of the State as is the case in the State of Iowa, extends only to a very small fraction of its domain.

My colleague [Mr. SHAFROTH] some time ago made a statement which the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] inserted in his report on this bill, which will give an idea of the importance of this question, from the territorial standpoint, to the people of the West. The Senator said:

> I want to call the attention of the committee to a list contained in an article by Mr. W. V. M. Powelson of the number of acres of land in the various Western States now in the ownership of the Government. In Arizona, 92 per cent of the lands within the area of that State are in Government ownership; California, 52.58 per cent; Colorado, 56.67 per cent; Idaho, 83.80 per cent; Montana, 65.80 per cent; Nevada, 87.82 per cent; New Mexico, 62.83 per cent; Oregon, 51 per cent; Utah, 80.18 per cent; Washington, 40 per cent; Wyoming, 68 per cent.

It may be seen from that statement very readily, Mr. President, how unfortunate it would be if the State or its public-utility corporations could not traverse or obtain rights of way and reservoir rights in this vast domain and could not build public roads through them whenever and wherever necessary, because although owned by the Government as a proprietor and not in its sovereign capacity it happens to be in the hands of such owner. A situation of that kind or the integrity of the proposition which this bill necessarily embodies or is founded upon would be most unfortunate, to say the least of it, if it existed as a fact.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Then Arizona would have eminent domain over two twenty-fifths of its territory.

Mr. THOMAS. At the time the State of Colorado was admitted the only public lands within its domain belonged to the Government of the United States. Consequently this word "public" necessarily referred to the domain of the Government. It could not have attached to anything else. This constitution was ratified, and the President, by proclamation, declared the State duly admitted into the Union. The supreme court of the State in a number of decisions has passed upon this section, and given it the operation for which I contend. I shall not read from these decisions, but refer to Lyons v. City of Longmont (129 Pac., 198), to the case of Lamborn v. Bell (18 Colo., 346), to the case of the Denver Power & Irrigation Co. v. the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad Co. et al. (30 Colo., 204), to the case of Sternberger v. Seaton Mountain, etc., Co. (102 Pac., 168), and to a decision of the district court of the United States for the district of Colorado in Cascade Town Co. v. Empire Water & Power Co. (181 Fed., 1011).

Mr. President, I stated yesterday the necessity for this provision, which I think, however, would exist inherently in the State if indeed it were not expressed in the constitution at all.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator read that constitutional provision again?

Mr. THOMAS. I shall be very glad to do so. It is section 7 of Article XVI.

> All persons and corporations shall have the right of way across public, private, and corporate lands for the construction of ditches, canals, and flumes for the purpose of conveying water for domestic purposes, for the irrigation of agricultural lands, and for mining and manufacturing purposes, and for drainage upon payment of just compensation.

As I say, that is merely the expression of a power which is plenary, which is inseparable from sovereignty, which a State can not delegate, which would be nugatory if the United States required its surrender as a condition of the admission of a new State, as the Supreme Court of the United States has said.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Am I very far wrong, then, in stating that under that constitutional provision of the State of Colorado it is possible for a citizen of the State, in the exercise of that power granted to him by the constitution, to completely destroy a water power, but never be permitted to use it?

Mr. THOMAS. No; I do not think that could possibly result, because this is a power which can be exercised only for a public beneficial purpose and ceases with nonuse.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Well, Mr. President, as I understand it, a citizen or a corporation of the State may divert water across public lands from a stream for irrigation purposes.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; and for manufacturing purposes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And for manufacturing purposes. He might, then, under such a provision, using the water solely for beneficial purposes, as provided in the State constitution, take all the water out of the stream above a waterfall which he never could use.

Mr. THOMAS. He could take out of the stream every drop of water to which some one else had not originally laid claim. If he took it for manufacturing purposes, however, and other citizens needed it for domestic or agricultural purposes, those rights would be superior, and they could recapture it from him if his diversion was to use it for manufacturing.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Perhaps I stated the case in an exaggerated way. Nevertheless, it would be possible, then, for a group of citizens, acting each for himself——

Mr. THOMAS. No. It would be in their corporate capacity.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In their corporate capacity, to use a sufficient amount of the water for beneficial purposes—irrigation, agriculture, manufacturing, domestic purposes, and drainage—to destroy a water power the littoral of which is owned by the Federal Government?

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, yes; the littoral of which is owned by the Federal Government. We have no riparian rights in the West. It is not compatible with civilization and settlement in an arid region. The Government of the United States, as declared by the Supreme Court in the Kansas-Colorado case, owns no title in or to the water in any of the streams out there because of its riparian ownership. It must appropriate and divert to a beneficial purpose. The change of the law which is applicable in States like that which the Senator here so well represents is due to the imperious demands of our dry climate, and to the vast and measureless importance of water in the development of the soil and the sustenance of life.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I desire to say that I am in sympathy with the general nature of the contention made by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It occurred to me that there was an absurdity existing in the present situation with respect to the constitution of the State of Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, if the old law of riparian rights applied, then, of course, this would be absurd, for which I am contending, except to the extent to which the rights could be exercised without doing violence to such riparian rights.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. I just wanted to say that it must always be understood, in dealing with a question of that kind, that there is a limitation upon the amount of water that can be used by any appropriator. He can not acquire title or the right to the use of the water beyond the amount actually put to a beneficial use.

Mr. THOMAS. Nor can he speculate in it.

Mr. WORKS. Nor can he speculate upon it.

Mr. THOMAS. That is true.

Mr. WORKS. That, I think, is thoroughly well settled in our State, and I think it is in Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I know of no exception anywhere.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question for my own information?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. THOMAS. With pleasure.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I regret that I have not heard all of the speech of the Senator, which I know is a very able one. Under this doctrine that obtains in the arid land States of prior appropriation of water from the stream, is the beneficial use for which it can be appropriated any sort of a private business use?

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It does not have to be a use which is at all charged with a public interest, does it?

Mr. THOMAS. Except as the industry which that private use represents is a public one. But in a State like Colorado, if the Senator needs water for domestic purposes, and can not get it otherwise, he can condemn and secure it. He must have it for the support of himself and his family and his live stock. Consequently, this right is given for a way over the premises of others to anyone who needs the water for a beneficial use; and an absolutely necessary use, even of a strictly private nature, is so far public as to invoke the provisions of the Constitution and the laws.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Now let me ask the Senator this question: There are certain industries that require a great deal of water. The silk industry is one, for instance. They use enormous quantities of water in the process of dyeing or coloring the goods. Under this law, would it be possible for the owner of land on a stream to use all the water in that stream for his own industry, and cut off the lower proprietors, simply because he used it first?

Mr. THOMAS. Not without making compensation.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Oh, they always have to make compensation?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes. The superior right is a senior one or a right to take the water and devote it to the superior use, but due compensation must be made to the man who has previously acquired it for the inferior use.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And to all others lower down on the stream, I assume?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes. Then, of course, the Senator will recognize another distinction in these uses: The use of water for domestic purposes and for agricultural purposes consumes what we call in the West the corpus, or body, of the water.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS. The use of it for generating power is merely the use of that strength which is developed by the current of running water, and does not consume the body of the water at all.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No. It is the mere force of gravitation, practically.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understand the Senator's view.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. Just to get my own mind straight in the matter, allow me to ask whether the friends of the bill claim that the State of Colorado could not condemn for a public purpose the public lands of that State?

Mr. THOMAS. Candidly, I do not know.

Mr. CUMMINS. I wondered whether it was claimed that the lands of the United States are immune or exempt from the power of a State to condemn property for a public use?

Mr. THOMAS. I must assume that those who support this bill because they think it is necessary to the development of water power in the West must at least question the power of the State to utilize its right of eminent domain in the acquisition of the sites.

Mr. MYERS rose.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator can speak for himself, of course.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, speaking for myself, I will say that I know of no authority in the courts of a State to subject to the right of eminent domain the public lands of the United States. In all the discussion of this matter which I have ever heard my attention has never been called to any case where such a right has been upheld by the courts, and I do not know that it has ever been directly passed upon. I do not believe the right exists.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I intend to discuss that, and I am now about to enter upon the subject.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There was the case of Fort Dearborn, in Chicago, where an abandoned military reservation was condemned.

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, Mr. President, I have a dozen cases. A very important decision upon this subject, and I now come to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States——

Mr. MYERS. I should like to ask a question at this point which has been suggested to my mind. If the States have a right now to subject to the right of eminent domain the public land of the United States and the States own the waters of the streams that flow within their boundaries, as is conceded by all hands in this matter, why have the States not exercised that right of eminent domain long ago and developed the water power of the West? Why is it that for the last 10 or 12 years water-power development on the public domain has been wholly arrested, if a perfect right to develop it and a way of developing it without Federal legislation already exists?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, that is a very pertinent question. I confess I do not know why. I can make a conjecture.

Mr. MYERS. We are confronted with that situation.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not know why, except that the average citizen does not like to come against the power of the United States Government, partly because the extent and character of this plenary power of government in the States is not understood, because all the so-called land laws necessarily assume its nonexistence and because of acquiescence in that assumption up to this time.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator there is a case now before the Supreme Court of the United States, the Government of the United States against the Beaver River Power Co., in which the question involved is the right of the corporation to use the public lands within forest reserves for conveying water for power purposes under the right-of-way act of 1866. That case has been decided in the United States district court, and it was brought direct from the district court to the Supreme Court, and the case is now before the Supreme Court.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to ask why that case is before the Supreme Court of the United States if there are dozens of cases, as the Senator from Colorado says there are, already decided in favor of this right? I ask the Senator from Colorado, who has the floor, if any of the cases to which he refers are decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; the case to which my colleague referred is a decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. MYERS. If it has been already settled by the Supreme Court of the United States, I do not see why this Utah case is pending there.

Mr. THOMAS. The courts settle nothing in these days except the instant case. Every case is now brought in review upon its merits regardless of precedents. It is one of the unfortunate things in the administration of justice here that the passage of every new law, the raising of every new interest, instead of being referred to and determined by precedents are simply the subjects of fresh litigation. If the Senator asks me why that case is before the Supreme Court of the United States, I can only answer because it was appealed there. Just how this particular question is involved in that case I am not at present able to intelligently state; but I gathered the impression in listening to the argument of it that this particular question was not one upon which the case may turn, that it is one which may but not must be passed upon. But we as lawyers are aware of the fact that the courts seldom decide a case upon a proposition not absolutely involved in and necessary to the decision itself. So I shall not be surprised when that opinion is handed down if this crucial proposition should be avoided or disregarded.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to ask the Senator a question, so that we may get his position clearly before he starts in to cite the authorities. Does the Senator contend that under the constitutional provision of the State of Colorado which he has read a citizen or a corporation of that State acting under the law of that State for the purposes mentioned in the provision of the Constitution he has read would have the right to condemn public land of the United States?

Mr. THOMAS. The question is a little broader in one sense and not as broad in another as perhaps it should be. I contend that under the provision of the Constitution, and also if that provision were not there, any corporation holding a franchise of a public utilities character to which that principle would apply has the right to condemn any land belonging to the Government of the United States within my State which is not used for a courthouse, post office, military reservation, or some other governmental agency, and that I want to demonstrate.

Mr. NORRIS. I will listen to the Senator with a great deal of interest. I should like to suggest, however, that if that is established would it not follow that the legislation now pending before the Senate would not do any material damage to any of the Western States?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, that depends upon how the courts would look at it. I recall listening, a good many years ago when I was waiting in the Supreme Court across the hall for a case to be reached in which I was interested, to an argument on an appeal of a criminal case from Oklahoma. The attorney representing the plaintiff in error was making, I think, his first appearance there. He began his argument, after stating his case, by reading an extract from Blackstone. The Chief Justice said: "Mr. Johnson, will you not give the court credit for knowing a little law?" "No, your honor," he said, "that was just the mistake I made in the trial court. I do not want to repeat it here." [Laughter.] Mr. President, I do not want to make that mistake in the trial court, because some one wittily and yet truthfully, I think, said a little while ago that in these modern times anything is constitutional which Congress sees fit to enact; that is to say, the measure of our power is in these days determined by the limitation which we put upon it; and some of the decisions which have been made, I think I can say with all respect, seem to indicate the partial justice of that statement. So I shall not take any chances with the courts, either State or Federal, upon this subject whatever. Of course, if the Senate votes the other way, I will have to content myself with having done my duty.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator does not contend that if the State of Colorado has the right to delegate that authority of condemnation to a corporation under the Constitution of the United States and the constitution of the State of Colorado, Congress could take it away by an act of Congress.

Mr. THOMAS. Not legally. Such things have been done, however, in the past.

Mr. NORRIS. Does not the Senator assume that the courts, even though Congress does something illegally, will not permit it to exist if properly brought to their attention?

Mr. THOMAS. I think the courts will, in the exercise of their duties, do what they think is right. Then I must remind the Senator that I am fallible; I may be mistaken in my conception of what the powers of the States are; and I am now about to discuss my view of the effect upon that power of the statute, if it should become a law and be upheld.

Mr. NORRIS. May I ask the Senator one more question to get his view?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator's contention is right, then it would not be necessary even to give full effect to it for Congress to pass an act turning all these power sites over to the States, but all that would be necessary would be not to legislate at all.

Mr. THOMAS. Turning them over would be easier; it would be better. I do not think the legislation is necessary. I was about to refer——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. THOMAS. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Montana, but I wish to remind him that I want to get through as soon as I can, and I know the Senator will believe me when I tell him that I am not unduly delaying this matter.

Mr. WALSH. I know the Senator will be glad to know that there does not seem to be any foundation for his apprehension about that general reservation bill. I addressed this letter to Mr. FERRIS, chairman of the House committee:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS:

Senator THOMAS has just stated that a bill has been introduced in the House, known as the Lever bill, which provides that all the lands of the United States shall be reserved from entry to be appropriated under some leasing system.

Please write me a note about this.

T. J. WALSH.

I have this answer from Mr. FERRIS:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES UNITED STATES,
COMMITTEE ON THE PUBLIC LANDS,
Washington, D. C., January 13, 1917.

MY DEAR SENATOR WALSH: We are not aware of the introduction of any such bill, but to make sure Mr. CAMPBELL slipped up to the Agricultural Committee and asked Mr. LEVER'S clerk if the latter had any such bill pending. The clerk advises us that he thinks there is no such bill pending, and is of the opinion that Mr. LEVER did not introduce any such bill, and for the moment I can not imagine what Senator

THOMAS has in mind. I know of no such bill pending before the Public Lands Committee. I think there must be some mistake about it. Congressman LEVER could not be reached personally. If there is any more data you can give us, we will make an additional effort in the matter. Such a bill as that would not have a chance of passage over here anyway. On the contrary, we just enacted a 640-acre homestead bill to dispose of the public lands faster. The House would not countenance any such legislation as that mentioned by Senator THOMAS. I can not think Mr. LEVER would either.

Sincerely, yours, SCOTT FERRIS.

Mr. THOMAS. The bill to which the letter refers was passed, and it contains the reservations which I mentioned a few moments ago; that is, it required that those reservations should be inserted in the patent. I said when I referred to the Lever bill that my information came from one of my colleagues of the House. I received that information some time ago, possibly before the present session of Congress convened, but I am satisfied that the gentleman who gave it, and who was very apprehensive of its effect in the event it should be favorably considered, did not intentionally misstate the contents of it. In fact, I am sure of it, because he is the senior member of the House Committee on Public Lands, ranking next to the honorable chairman, whose letter has just been read. So I am satisfied that such a bill or something of the sort has been at some time before that committee for consideration. I will make further inquiry, and of course if my information is incorrect, or if I misapprehended it, I shall be very glad to acknowledge the fact here. It seemed to me, however, to be so naturally a sequence to this general course of modern land legislation that it did not surprise me very much to learn that something of the kind existed.

Mr. President, I shall refer as rapidly as possible to this general subject. Of course it is necessary in considering it to determine the extent of jurisdiction or sovereignty as an attribute of the General Government, because of its ownership of public domain in the Commonwealths of the Union.

The authorities upon that subject are numerous, so much so that it is somewhat difficult to determine what selection to make from them for the purpose of concretely stating the general proposition. The subject of ownership of lands and jurisdiction over them in the States by the General Government must necessarily be founded upon one of two provisions of the Constitution. Since it will not be questioned that the powers that are not delegated actually or by necessary implication are reserved to the States, we must either find it under Article I, section 8, paragraph 17, or Article IV, section 3, paragraph 2.

The first reads as follows:

> The Congress shall have power > to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such District (not exceeding 10 miles square) as may, by cession of particular States, and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the legislature of the State in which the same shall be for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards, and other needful buildings.

That exclusive legislation is specific. It enumerates the subjects over which it is to be exercised and can not, of course, be extended by any sort of implication; it construes itself. Hence I think it must be admitted in the absence of authority to the contrary, and I know of none, that this Federal power within the States of exclusive legislation exists only in the District and over those places the title to which is secured by the Government for purposes of necessary administration, and over which the legislatures of the respective States by express enactment have surrendered jurisdiction. And unless that surrender is absolute the sovereignty of the States may still be exercised to the extent to which it does not conflict with the cession. The other proviso reads:

> The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims of the United States or of any particular State.

Mr. President, it will be noticed that this is a power of disposition and a power of making needful rules and regulations only. But so that no question about its extent may arise it is also provided that "nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims of the United States or of any particular State." What claims? Is this confined to claims against the property or claims of jurisdiction or both? Is not this limitation designed to prevent the Federal exercise of this power of disposition and of making rules and regulations so that they shall conflict with any claim of the State, provided, of course, that claim is reconcilable or consistent with the power of disposition? The jurisdiction of sovereignty, the sovereign right of control over the public domain of the United States within the States, and because within the States, must be founded upon this proviso or it does not exist at all.

In the Kansas-Colorado case the Supreme Court said that the proviso last read had never been clearly defined, but it declined to recognize any jurisdiction or ownership in the Government of the United States because of its ownership of land to the waters thereof so as to permit it to intervene in that case. Consequently, its petition for intervention was denied.

Now, the Federal Government, as I said, is the owner of over 56 per cent of the lands in the State of Colorado, and of course it has the power to dispose of them, to make rules and regulations concerning them. It reserved that power in the enabling act under which the State was admitted to the Union, and of course the State was obliged to forego its right of taxation, which otherwise, I think, would have existed.

In other words, but for the reservation by the General Government of these lands from taxation and the recognition of that reservation, the power to tax might exist because of the fact that the land, not being a governmental agency or a governmental necessity, the United States simply owned it as any other proprietor of land was vested with title. To give the exact language of Mr. Justice Brewer in Kansas against Colorado, he said:

> The full scope of this paragraph has never been definitely settled.

But the history of the paragraph may throw some light upon the subject.

Mr. Rutledge, from the committee, on August 20, 1787, recommended to the convention the following:

> And to provide, as may become necessary from time to time, for the well managing and securing the common property and general interests and welfare of the United States in such manner as shall not interfere with the governments of individual States in matters which respect only their internal police, or for which their individual authorities may be competent.

It is clearly seen that the idea which Mr. Rutledge sought to express there was to give a power of disposition consistent with the police power of the State over the same subject.

Shortly afterwards Mr. Carroll moved to add the following proviso:

> That nothing in this Constitution shall be construed to alter the claims of the United States to the Western Territory, but all such claims shall be examined into and decided upon by the Supreme Court of the United States.

These subjects were debated, and as a result Mr. Morris moved the substitution of the clause which was finally embodied in the Constitution, although the Committee on Style made some minor changes in its verbal expression.

It is evident that but for some such express power in the Constitution the territory which the Colonies had conveyed to the General Government to be sold and disposed of, first, for purposes of population and, second, to provide means for paying the national debt, that the States whose rights were then far more jealously guarded than they are in these days might frequently come into collision and engender controversies with the General Government regarding the disposition of its property, the terms of conveyance, and other differences arising in the course of time. Hence to clothe the Government with a power essential to carrying out the purposes and objects of its ownership must have been too obvious to require much controversy.

In California the Code of Civil Procedure, acting upon the lines of our own Constitution, provides that the lands "owned or held by the United States in trust or otherwise may be subject to proceedings in eminent domain."

In the case of the Desert Water, Oil & Irrigation Co. against the State, in One hundred and thirty-eighth Pacific, page 981, the supreme court of that State, incidentally considering this statute, said:

> If, at the time of the proposed cession of its lands by Virginia, Congress had declared its intent to be that which it has actually executed in the State of California, little doubt can be entertained as to the answer which Virginia would have made.

In the course of the argument of the Kansas-Colorado case the Chief Justice—he was not Chief Justice then—asked the Kansas counsel this question:

> You constantly talk about the public lands. When you speak of the public arid lands, are you deducing from the fact that they are public lands a governmental right or power in Congress? Do you suppose if there is a hundred acres of public land in a State the existence of that public land in the State invests Congress as a Government with the power to destroy the law of the State, because it owns land within the State, which an individual would not have?

That question, Mr. President, answers itself, and of course counsel could have answered it but one way. Yet it contained the crux of the contention, that the ownership of land by the United States practically gave it a litigating status in that case.

In Knight v. The United States Land Association (142 United States, 161) the Supreme Court declared that upon the acquisition of the territory from Mexico, and of course that constitutes part of my State and all of the State of the Senator from Arizona, the United States acquired the title to tidelands equally with the title to uplands, but with respect to the former they held it only in trust for those States that might be erected out of such territory.

That brings me, Mr. President, to a consideration of the leading and original case upon this very subject, the case of Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan (15 United States, 391). This case has never been overruled unless it may be said to have been overruled because it may at times have been disregarded, but it is a case perhaps as frequently quoted in subsequent decisions of the Supreme and of State Courts as any of the earlier decisions.

It arose between the claimants of certain tidelands by conveyance from the State of Alabama and those claiming possession of the same lands from the Government of the United States. These lands were transferred or ceded to the Government of the United States by the State of Georgia, and were afterwards embraced within the boundaries of the State of Alabama, the contention of Alabama being that these lands, although given to the Government of the United States and never actually conveyed by it to the State of Alabama, nevertheless passed to it by virtue of its admission and through the sovereignty which inhered to it as a Commonwealth coequal with the State of Georgia and her other sister Commonwealths; and that was the view which the court sustained.

I therefore beg the indulgence of the Senate if I read sufficient of that decision into the RECORD to make it intelligible and the principle easily understood by all who care to discuss the subject.

And we now enter into its examination—

The question which I have stated—

And we now enter into its examination with a just sense of its great importance to all of the States of the Union, and particularly to the new ones. Although this is the first time we have been called upon to draw the line that separates the sovereignty and jurisdiction of the Government of the Union and the State governments over the subject in controversy, many of the principles which enter into and form the elements of the question have been settled by previous well-considered decisions of this court, to which we will have occasion to refer in the course of this investigation. * * *

We think a proper examination of this subject will show that the United States never held any municipal sovereignty, jurisdiction, or right of soil in and to the territory of which Alabama or any of the new States were formed, except for temporary purposes.

There are no distinctions made between the tidelands in controversy and the other public lands.

The right which belongs to the society, or to the sovereign, of disposing in case of necessity, and for the public safety, of all the wealth contained in the State, is called the eminent domain. It is evident that this right is, in certain cases, necessary to him who governs and is consequently a part of the empire, or sovereign power.

Quoting Vattel, on the Law of Nations, section 244:

This definition shows that the eminent domain, although a sovereign power, does not include all sovereign power, and this explains the sense in which it is used in this opinion. * * *

When Alabama was admitted into the Union, on an equal footing with the original States, she succeeded to all the rights of sovereignty, jurisdiction, and eminent domain which Georgia possessed at the date of the cession, except so far as this right was diminished by the public lands remaining in the possession and under the control of the United States, for the temporary purposes provided for in the deed of cession and the legislative acts connected with it. Nothing remained to the United States, according to the terms of the agreement, but the public lands. And if an express stipulation had been inserted in the agreement granting the municipal right of sovereignty and eminent domain to the United States such stipulations would have been void and inoperative, because the United States have no constitutional capacity to exercise municipal jurisdiction, sovereignty, or eminent domain within the limits of a State or elsewhere, except in the cases in which it is expressly granted.

By the sixteenth clause of the eighth section—

And that is the provision which I have read about exclusive legislation, which I shall not stop to again quote. Then the court says:

And these are the only cases—

The only cases, mind you, under which the sixteenth clause of the eighth section conferred exclusive legislative jurisdiction—in which all the powers of government are united in a single government, except in cases already mentioned of the temporary territorial governments, and there a local government exists. The right of Alabama and every other new State to exercise all the powers of government which belong to and may be exercised by the original States of the Union must be admitted and remain unquestioned, except so far as they are temporarily deprived of control over the public lands.

We will now inquire into the nature and extent of the right of the United States to these lands, and whether that right can in any manner affect or control the decision of the case before us. This right originated in voluntary surrenders made by several of the old States, of their waste and unappropriated lands to the United States, under a resolution of the old Congress of the 6th of September, 1780, recommending such surrender and cession, to aid in paying the public debt incurred by the War of the Revolution. The object of all the parties to these contracts of cession was to convert the land into money for the payment of the debt, and to erect new States over the territory thus ceded; and as soon as these purposes could be accomplished the power of the United States over these lands as property was to cease.

Whenever the United States shall have fully executed these trusts the municipal sovereignty of the new States will be complete throughout their respective borders, and they and the original States will be upon an equal footing in all respects whatever. We therefore think the United States holds the public lands within the new States by force of the deeds of cession, and the statutes connected with them, and not by any municipal sovereignty which it may be supposed they possessed or have reserved by compact with the new States for that particular purpose.

Language could not be plainer. Indeed, I think it is unnecessary to read further from this particular decision. As I say, it is a landmark upon the subject, one which can not be successfully refuted and one which the Supreme Court has frequently approved in subsequent cases.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I suggest to the Senator to put into the RECORD the succeeding lines.

Mr. THOMAS. The succeeding lines are:

The provision of the Constitution above referred to shows that no such power can be exercised by the United States within a State. Such a power is not only repugnant to the Constitution but it is inconsistent with the spirit and intention of the deeds of cession.

I thank the Senator from Arizona.

The only difference between the deeds of cession to Alabama and the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo and the Louisiana cession is a difference in the source of title; the situation is identical; and if the one could not confer sovereignty the other was equally powerless to confer it upon the United States with regard to the lands of the West.

The opinion in Withers against Buckley, which was delivered shortly afterwards, was in a case which arose through an attempt by the State of Mississippi to improve the watercourses within the State, and it was declared that that was a power which the State could exercise. At that time a great part of the State of Mississippi was public land, and riparian rights attached to it, whether owned by the Government or by citizens. The Supreme Court there said:

Obviously, and it may be said primarily, among the incidents of that equality is the right to make improvements in the rivers, watercourses, and highways situated within the State.

It can not be imputed to Congress that they ever designed to forbid or to withhold from the State of Mississippi the power of improving the interior of that State. * * * although a plan of improvement to be adopted might embrace or affect the course or the flow of rivers situated within the interior of the State. Could such an intention be ascribed to Congress, the right to enforce it may be confidently denied. Clearly Congress could exact of the new State the surrender of no attribute inherent in her character as a sovereign independent State, or indispensable to her equality with her sister States, necessarily implied and guaranteed by the very nature of the Federal compact.

Mr. President, I might refer to a large number of other cases which have been collated in this admirable brief, but I will not detain the Senate to do so. I wish, however, to assure the Senator having charge of the bill that he is at liberty to take this brief, if he desires to do so, either to examine the cases which are there collated or for such other purpose as he may wish.

Now, let me call attention to a later case, which arose in the State of Kansas. When Kansas was admitted into the Union, the Government reserved the reservation known as Fort Leavenworth. Upon that reservation it had erected buildings for military purposes, and, I think, also for a Federal prison; but its own act of reservation did not give the Government exclusive legislative authority over it. So the Legislature of the State of Kansas subsequently passed an act ceding the reservation to the United States. It had the following saving clause, however—

Saving further to said State the right to tax railroad, bridge, and other corporations, their franchises and property, on said reservation.

Now, mind you, the title to that property never passed out of the Government of the United States. The object of the reservation was a public and necessary one, and one which should have brought it under that provision of the Constitution giving the Government exclusive legislative jurisdiction; but its buildings did not occupy the entire tract. A railroad company held a right of way through the tract. Then the authorities of the county in which the reservation is located and of the State assumed to tax the railroad company upon its right of way. The contention, however, was made that the railroad company was exempt from taxation because the reservation was under the exclusive legislative control and jurisdiction of the Government of the United States. The Supreme Court refuted that contention, and at page 526 of the decision Mr. Justice Field, speaking for the court, said:

The land constituting the reservation was part of the territory acquired in 1803 by a cession from France, and until the formation of the State of Kansas and her admission into the Union the United States possessed the rights of a proprietor and had political dominion and sovereignty over it.

Just as it has to-day in Alaska and as it possesses here in the District of Columbia.

For many years before that admission, it had been reserved from sale by the proper authorities of the United States for military purposes, and kept by them as a military post. The jurisdiction of the United States over it during this time was necessarily paramount.

But in 1861 Kansas was admitted into the Union upon an equal footing with the original States—that is, with the same rights of political dominion and sovereignty, subject like them only to the Constitution of the United States. Congress might undoubtedly, upon such admission, have stipulated for retention of the political authority, dominion, and legislative power of the United States over the reservation, so long as it should be used for military purposes by the Government—that is, it could have excepted the place from the jurisdiction of the State of Kansas, as one needed for the uses of the General Government. But from some cause, inadvertence perhaps, or overconfidence that a recession of such jurisdiction could be had whenever desired, no such stipulation or exception was made. The United States therefore retained, after the admission of the State, only the rights of an ordinary proprietor; except as an instrument for the execution of the powers of the General Government, that part of the tract which was actually used for a fort or military post was beyond such control of the State by taxation or otherwise, as would defeat its use for those purposes. So far as the land constituting the reservation was not used for military purposes, the possession of the United States was only that of an individual proprietor. The State could have exercised, with reference to it, the same authority and jurisdiction which she could have exercised over similar property held by private parties. This defect in the jurisdiction of the United States was called to the attention of the Government in 1872.

The court then quotes a number of authorities.

"These authorities are sufficient to support the proposition which follows naturally from the language of the Constitution, that no other legislative power than that of Congress can be exercised over land within a State purchased by the United States with her consent for one of the purposes designated; and that such consent under the Constitution operates to exclude all other legislative authority.

"But with reference to lands owned by the United States, acquired by purchase without the consent of the State, or by cession from other governments, the case is different. * * *

Where, therefore, lands are acquired in any other way by the United States within the limits of a State than by purchase with her consent, they will hold the lands subject to this qualification: That if upon them forts, arsenals, or other public buildings are erected, for the uses of the General Government, such buildings, with their appurtenances as instrumentalities for the execution of its powers, will be free from any such jurisdiction and interference of the State as would destroy or impair their effective use for the purposes designed. Such is the law with reference to all instrumentalities created by the General Government. Their exemption from State control is essential to the independence and sovereign authority of the United States within the sphere of their delegated powers. But, when not used as such instrumentalities, the legislative power of the State over the places acquired will be as full and complete as over any other places within her limits.

As already stated, the land constituting the Fort Leavenworth Military Reservation was not purchased, but was owned by the United States by cession from France many years before Kansas became a State.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. From what case is the Senator quoting?

Mr. THOMAS. This is the case of the Fort Leavenworth Railroad Co. v. Lowe (114 U. S., 525).

It not being a case where exclusive legislative authority is vested by the Constitution of the United States, that cession could be accompanied with such conditions as the State might see fit to annex not inconsistent with the free and effective use of the fort as a military post.

The comparatively recent case of Ward v. Race Horse (163 U. S., 504) in line with this decision is also illuminating. Prior to the admission of the State of Wyoming the Government had entered into a treaty with a certain tribe of Indians then occupying a part of the territory afterwards included within that State which gave the Indians the right to hunt upon the public domain. After the State was admitted, it enacted a law for the preservation of its game. This tribe of Indians disregarded the law, and continued to exercise what it claimed to be its hunting rights and privileges on the public domain under the treaty to which I have referred. That brought them into collision with the State authorities, and their defense was that the game law had no force and effect upon the public lands of the United States within Wyoming covered by the treaty; that the admission of the State into the Union in no wise impaired their rights, except as it might apply to lands then in private ownership. This case is a most interesting one, as will be seen from this outline. It went to the Supreme Court of the United States, where the contention of the State authorities was unanimously upheld. The court said, among other things:

* * * If the treaty applies to the unoccupied land of the United States in the State of Wyoming, that State would be bereft of such power—

That is the power of a sovereign State—

since every isolated piece of land belonging to the United States, as a private owner, so long as it continued to be unoccupied land, would be exempt [from its laws] * * *. Nor need we stop to consider the argument advanced at bar that, as the United States * * * has the right to deal with that subject, therefore it has the power to exempt from the operation of the State game laws each particular piece of land owned by it in private ownership within the State.

Here is a treaty—a part of the supreme law of the land—with an Indian tribe, conferring valuable rights over lands afterwards coming within the jurisdiction of a State, sponged out by the automatic operation of the sovereignty attaching to a State upon its admission into the sisterhood.

In a case entitled Canfield against United States, in One hundred and sixty-seventh United States, page 524, the court characterizes the Government's ownership of land within the State as a proprietary ownership; and in Kansas against Colorado, Two hundred and sixth United States, page 46, the Supreme Court, in upholding the power of the State to provide for the acquisition, tenure, conveyance, and abandonment of the right to the use of the waters of the natural streams, said:

As to those lands within the limits of the States, at least of the Western States, the National Government is the most considerable owner, and has power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting its property. We do not mean that this legislation can override the State laws with reference to the general subject of reclamation. While arid lands are to be found mainly, if not only, in the western and newer States, yet the powers of the National Government within the limits of those States are the same (no greater and no less) than those within the limits of the original thirteen, and it would be strange if, in the absence of the grant of definite power, the National Government could enter the territory of the States along the Atlantic and legislate in respect to improving by irrigation or otherwise the lands within their borders. Nor do we understand that hitherto Congress has acted in disregard to this limitation * * *.

But it is useless to pursue the inquiry further in this direction. It is enough for the purposes of this case that each State has full jurisdiction over the lands within its borders, including the beds of streams and other waters * * *. It may determine for itself whether the common-law rule in respect to riparian rights or that doctrine which obtains in the arid regions of the West of the appropriation of waters for the purposes of irrigation shall control.

Congress can enforce neither rule upon any State, and yet, if the Government, because of its proprietorship of lands within Colorado, has the supreme and undisputed power of control and disposition of it entirely freed from the State's power of eminent domain, it can enforce the doctrine of riparian rights as to all such land; or, if you please, it can adopt the other. In either event it acts upon its own power and superior to the State. Yet the Supreme Court of the United States very properly recognizes that such an exercise of power would necessarily be a diminution of the sovereign power of the State where the land is situated, and would, therefore, reduce that power below the same power in other States where there is no public domain. Their sovereignty would at once become unequal and their equilibrium impaired.

Now, bearing upon this proposition are citations of a great many other cases, but I think I have said enough, Mr. President, to demonstrate the proposition, especially as there is no authority to the contrary, that the United States in its ownership of the public domain, none of which is used for Government essentials and agencies, is the proprietor of that land, and as such proprietor its property is within the jurisdiction of the State and subject to the sovereignty and the laws of the State.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me ask the Senator if, in his judgment, then, it would follow that, with the exceptions noted, the State might even tax land owned by the Government of the United States?

Mr. THOMAS. That is one of the exceptions. I think that but for the exception the State could tax such land, just as it did in the Leavenworth case, although there are decisions to the contrary.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, in the Leavenworth case it did not undertake to tax the land of the Government but the property of a railroad company.

Mr. THOMAS. I am aware of the fact that in the Leavenworth case the tax was levied upon the property and franchises of a railroad company. That is very true; but, Mr. President, the theory which forbids one sovereignty to tax the property of another relates and is confined to that property which is essential to the accomplishment of governmental purposes, and not to lands simply owned as proprietor and which are not at the time of the exercise of the taxing power needed or used for governmental purposes. Of course that is my opinion. I simply draw that conclusion from my familiarity with the principles upon which the case of McCulloch against Maryland and others recognizing and enforcing the distinction are founded.

Now I come to the question whether the State has this power of eminent domain to the extent that it can exercise it against property belonging to the Government of the United States, and just here let me digress for a moment for the purpose of ascertaining what that power is. In the Cyclopedia of Law and Procedure "eminent domain" is said to be:

A right inherent in all sovereignties, and therefore would exist without any constitutional recognition, and its exercise by the Government does not involve the commission of a tort.

That is to say, it is a right so essential and so generally recognized that the agency clothed with it is free from wrong in its exercise.

The right of eminent domain antedates constitutions, which are only declaratory of previously existing universal law, and is not conferred but limited by them. The right can only be denied or restricted by fundamental law, and is "a right inherent in society." The power to take private property for the common welfare is generally held to remain dormant in the State until the terms and conditions upon which it is to be exercised have been prescribed by appropriate legislation.

I read from page 564 of the same volume, the volume being No. 15:

The United States Government has the right of eminent domain in territory acquired by the United States either by conquest or purchase. The right of eminent domain may be exercised by the United States within the several States, so far as is necessary to the enjoyment of the powers conferred upon the United States by the Constitution.

And it is sufficient to say that the United States can exercise this power for no other purposes. In that respect it is substantially different from, certainly more restricted than, the power of the States.

I read an extract from page 602:

All kinds of property of whatever description are subject to the exercise of the power of eminent domain.

We discover, therefore, Mr. President, that this is a plenary power; one which is not conferred upon a State government by its organic law. Constitutions may limit it as to States, while they confer it upon a Government like the United States, all whose powers are delegated. In my State there is no restriction so far as public land is concerned. The express recognition of the right through the recitals of the State constitution merely emphasizes its existence.

Something was said by one of the Senators during the discussion about the Federal act of 1866. That is a very brief law, which recites, in terms, that all patents issued by the Government shall be subject to rights of way for the transmission of water upon the public domain; that is to say, if my friend, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], has a flume or a ditch across a piece of public land which I subsequently file upon and homestead or stake a mining claim upon, the patent to me would except his right of way from the operation of the grant.

Mr. President, the Supreme Court in many cases—I have not time to refer to any of them specifically—in upholding that law, declared that it created no right whatever; it conferred no right whatever; it merely acknowledged the existence of rights acquired by citizens of the local community or State. They could acquire them only by going upon the public domain and utilizing, by actual possession, so much of the land as was necessary to the enjoyment of the right. It is therefore, I think, a pertinent fact in this discussion that so important a statute as this, which has been upon the statute books now for nearly 51 years, instead of creating, recognized a right previously existing.

I will refer to one more case relating to this matter of proprietorship, because it is a recent one. It is the case of McGilvray against Ross, reported in Two hundred and fifteenth United States, page 70, which involved the ownership of a navigable lake in the State of Washington, the contention of the State being that the title passed to it, eo ipso, upon its admission into the Union; the claim, of course, being challenged. No deed from the United States to the State was ever executed.

Mr. Justice Van Devanter, speaking for the Supreme Court of the United States, said upon this subject:

It was settled long ago by this court, upon a consideration of the relative rights and powers of the Federal and State governments under the Constitution, that lands underlying navigable waters within the several States belong to the respective States in virtue of their sovereignty, and may be used and disposed of as they may direct, subject always to the rights of the public in such waters and to the paramount power of Congress to control their navigation so far as may be necessary for the regulation of commerce among the States and with foreign nations, and that each new State, upon its admission to the Union, becomes endowed with the same rights and powers in this regard as the older ones.

I have in mind in this connection a number of cases cited by the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] in his minority report—two of them, I think, from the Supreme Court of the United States—which sustain the proposition that the State has absolute control over the waters of a river entirely within its boundaries. There are many streams of that sort in my State—tributaries, it is true, of others—but nearly all rivers are tributaries.

Now, why should the proprietary right of the Federal Government yield to the sovereignty of the State of Washington in that particular case, and not yield to the equally essential duty of Colorado to provide for the general welfare, and the power to take property for public use whenever it is necessary for the public interest?

I have here a number of additional cases which answer that question in the affirmative, among which is Woodruff against North Broomfield in Eighteenth Federal, 772. That case attracted great attention at the time of its pendency, and involved the right of the owners of placer claims to wash the gravel and débris of their land into the Sacramento River, which carried it down and deposited it upon the alluvial lands below. In that case this great question was involved and decided favorably to my contention by Judge Sawyer, one of the earliest and most eminent of the Federal circuit judges on the Pacific coast.

This doctrine has been applied, Mr. President, not in the rights of way for water so much as in the acquisition of lands for other purposes. Of course, the principle is identical. The leading case, because it is the first case upon the subject, is United States against Railroad Bridge Co., in Sixth McLean, 517, decided in 1855, in the circuit court of the United States; and, if I recall, for the northern district of Illinois. There the court had under consideration the right of a railroad company to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at Rock Island for the Rock Island Railroad. Rock Island had been a military reservation, as it is now. It was abandoned then, but the use has been restored. It was not subject to sale. This is the first time the question was directly presented to the courts, so far as I know. I have endeavored to ascertain if the decision of Justice McLean was ever overruled, and I am prepared to say that it never has been. He said:

Whether a State has power, by an act of incorporation or otherwise, to authorize a rail or turnpike road through the lands of the United States has not, it is believed, been raised or judicially decided. The first impression would be, probably, that the State can not exercise such a power. But first impressions are rarely to be followed on constitutional questions. * * * Within the limits of a State Congress can, in regard to the disposition of the public lands and their protection, make all needful rules and regulations, but beyond this it can exercise no other acts of sovereignty, which it may not exercise in common over the lands of individuals. A mode is provided for the cession of jurisdiction when the Federal Government purchase a site for a military post, a customhouse, and other public buildings, and if this mode be not pursued, the jurisdiction of the State over the grounds purchased remains the same as before purchase.

Now, that is an important fact, although the court then said:

This, I admit, is not a decided point, but I think the conclusion is maintainable by the deductions from constitutional law, * * * and in the discharge of the ordinary functions of sovereignty a State has a right to provide for intercourse between the citizens, commercial and otherwise, in every part of the State by the establishment of easements, whether they may be common roads, turnpike, plank, or railroads. The kind of easement must depend upon the discretion of the legislature, and this power extends as well over the lands owned by the United States as to those owned by individuals. This power, it is believed, has been exercised by all of the States in which the public lands have been situated.

Not, perhaps, in such a way as to provoke controversy demanding judicial decision, but evidently to such an extent that the judge here seems to have taken judicial notice of it.

I continue the reading:

It is a power which belongs to the State, and the exercise of which is essential to the prosperity and advancement of the country. State and county roads have been established and constructed over the public lands in a State under the laws of the State without any doubt of its power and with the acquiescence of the Federal Government. In this respect the lands of the public have been treated and appropriated by the State as the lands of individuals. * * *

It is difficult to perceive upon what principle the mere ownership of the land by the General Government within a State should prohibit the exercise of the sovereign power of the State in so important a matter as the easements named. In no point of view are these improvements prejudicial to the general interest. On the contrary, they greatly promote it. They encourage population and increase the value of the land. In no respect is the exercise of this power by the State inconsistent with the fair construction of the constitutional power of Congress over the public lands. It does not interfere with the disposition of the public lands, and instead of lessening enhances their value.

Where lands are reserved or held by the General Government for specified and national purposes it may be admitted that a State can not construct an easement which shall, in any degree, affect such purposes injuriously. No one can question the right of the Federal Government to select the sites for its forts, arsenals, and other public buildings. The right claimed for the State has no reference to lands specially appropriated, but to those held as general proprietor by the General Government whether surveyed or not. The right of eminent domain appertains to the State sovereignty, and its exercise is free from the restraints of the Federal Constitution. The property of individuals is subject to this right, and no reason is perceived why the aggregate property in the State of the individuals of the Union should not also be subject to it. * * * Whether we look to principle, or the structure of the Federal and State governments, or the uniform practice of the new States, there would seem to be no doubt that the State has the power to construct a public road through the public lands. A grant to this effect is sometimes made by Congress, as in the act of 1852; but this does not show the necessity of such a grant. Generally, Congress appropriates to the road a large amount of lands. The positions are supposed to be irrefragible—first, that the right of eminent domain is in the State; and, secondly, that the exercise of this right by a State is nowhere inhibited, expressly or impliedly, in the Federal Constitution, or in the powers over the public lands by that instrument in Congress.

That is so plain that he who runs may read; and, as I have said, it has never been questioned judicially, so far as I know.

Now, let me suggest a condition that might arise if that were not true. Suppose that the Government should withdraw permanently all these power sites and announce its purpose to be to keep them perpetually withdrawn from any form of use. By so doing it could deprive the State and its people of the benefit and enjoyment of their property in the force generated by the flow of the waters of the natural streams. If the United States can withdraw them it can make the withdrawal absolute.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. THOMAS. I will yield in just a moment. Thus it could not only deprive the people of the State from the enjoyment of that property right, which would for all practical purposes be destroyed, but it could very seriously interfere with the development of the State by paralyzing the development of this power. Will it be said, because the Government as a proprietor of land can so determine, that the State, for the well-being of its people, for the protection and development of the State, for establishing intercourse between its various parts, for the attraction of population, for the increasing of its taxable wealth, for all those purposes and others for which the public utility is in these days such an essential of civilization and of growth, can not utilize its plenary power of eminent domain over the public lands? If it can not its usefulness as a Commonwealth is gone.

I now yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator from Colorado has cited, I think, the decision of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois, if I remember correctly, which seemed to lay down very strongly the principle that the State had the right of eminent domain, and that that right extended to the public lands. So far as I can gather from the Senator's remarks in that connection and from the decision, the exercise of this right has been by acquiescence on the part of the General Government, either through an act of Congress or in some other way. I should like to ask the Senator if he knows of any case where there has been a proceeding on the part of a State in the exercise of the right of eminent domain as it affects Government land, a proceeding to condemn, for example, and take the land or property of the Federal Government for the purposes of the State or a municipality of the State?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, of course, the Senator is aware of the fundamental distinction between a substantial right and a remedial right, and that I shall discuss before I leave the floor. Answering his question directly, I know of no instance in which such a proceeding has preceded the possession of the State or its agency. I know of a number of instances in which proceedings have followed the taking of possession. I do not, however, believe that the right is at all dependent upon or should be regulated by any question of the remedy through which it may be made applicable. That is another branch of the discussion, and I will reach it after a while.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield; yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator would not claim that a State could condemn part of a navy yard or other Government property?

Mr. THOMAS. I have made that distinction clear. Not by any means.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to his colleague?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator whether the absence of decisions concerning eminent domain exercised by the State as against the property of the National Government does not arise from the fact that no laws are in existence giving to an individual or a company the right to sue its sovereign, the United States?

Mr. THOMAS. Partly, perhaps, but not entirely.

Mr. SHAFROTH. What would be the process in obtaining jurisdiction of the United States?

Mr. THOMAS. I prefer to answer that question when I get to that branch of the subject.

Mr. SHAFROTH. All right, if the Senator is going to cover it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I will answer in part the query of my colleague by saying that the national legislation with regard to rights of way for railroads, canals, and so forth, was, up to the beginning of the century, so liberal and so much more easy of compliance than to invoke the power of eminent domain that they have been acquired in that way. For example, we have a general law giving right of way to railroad companies over all the public domain, passed, I think, in 1871—somewhere along there. Rights of way over the public domain for the transmission of water for all lawful purposes were recognized by the act of 1866 and were easy of acquisition over the public domain through the operation of the consent given by the Government, doubtless because of its recognition, in large degree, of the power of the State to emphasize the right through condemnation.

In Union Pacific Railroad Co. v. Burlington & Missouri Railroad Co. (3 Fed., 106), which involved an attempt by the Burlington to condemn a right of way across the Union Pacific right of way, it was contended that the latter company was a governmental agency, created and endowed with a right of way to subserve a great national purpose, which in a large sense was true; and it therefore invoked a public ownership of the right of way of the Union Pacific in the Government as coming under the exclusive legislative jurisdiction of the Congress under the article of the Constitution which I read yesterday. The case was tried before Circuit Judge McCrary, at one time Secretary of War and for many years upon the circuit bench in the eighth circuit. The judge said:

> Should a case of conflict between the State and Federal Government arise, the paramount authority of the United States under the Constitution would, of course, prevail. Thus, if the United States has, by proper proceedings, condemned and taken land for a fort, arsenal, * * * or lighthouse, * * * it would not be in the power of the State, in the exercise of its right of eminent domain, to take the same property. But the present case does not come within this principle. The United States has never condemned the right of way of the Union Pacific Railway, and taken it for its own use for public purposes, within the meaning of the rule just stated. * * * I am clearly of the opinion that the right of way of the Union Pacific Railway is not property of the Federal Government set apart for its own public use, so as to exempt it from the operation of the law of the State of Nebraska, above quoted, respecting the crossing and connecting of railroads, and the condemnation of the property for those purposes.

Here is the important part of the decision:

> If, however, it were conceded to be land of the United States, unless held for governmental purposes, it would, even in that case, be subject to the State's power of eminent domain. Land owned by the United States, as a mere proprietor, and not used for any of the purposes of the National Government, may be taken by the State for public use.

The Illinois Central Railroad Co. against C., B. & M. R. Co.——

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, before the Senator passes to that, may I call his attention to another matter in this connection?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado further yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. STERLING. I am referring to the case cited in the views of the minority on this bill—the case of Woodruff against North Broomfield Gravel Mining Co., in Eighteenth Federal.

Mr. THOMAS. I referred to the case myself a moment ago.

Mr. STERLING. Yes; and to this particular language from the decision, as cited in the views of the minority:

> Thenceforth the only interest of the United States in the public lands was that of a proprietor, like that of any other proprietor, except that the State, under the express terms upon which it was admitted, could pass no laws to interfere with their primary disposal, and they were not subject to taxation. In all other respects the United States stood upon the same footing as private owners of land.

I wanted to ask the Senator if that primary disposal was not the disposal referred to in the constitutional provision which gives the Congress the power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States?

Mr. THOMAS. I have endeavored to so argue all the afternoon.

Mr. STERLING. I have not had the pleasure of hearing the Senator's argument in great part.

Mr. THOMAS. The distinction which I make, and which the authorities make, is that this clause gives the power of primary disposition to the Government, but does not invest it with sovereignty over the land in the States. There is no question but that under this provision Congress may make all rules and regulations necessary for the disposition, not for the retention, of the land; and if the Senator will refer back to the case of Pollard's Lessee against Hagan, which I read into the RECORD a while ago, he will find a full and unanswerable statement of the effect of this constitutional provision, its meaning, and its limitations.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield; yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Has the Senator in his remarks previously instanced the case of a forest reservation or of a national park?

Mr. THOMAS. I have not. I have instanced no cases except those where the land is used as provided in another section of the Constitution.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I was simply going to ask the Senator, then, if he would not regard the establishment by the Nation of a national park as a governmental function; and if so, whether the State could exercise its right of eminent domain against the national park or the forest reservation?

Mr. THOMAS. Of course, a national park is a sort of governmental institution, much more so for the purposes of this discussion than a forestry reservation, both, however, being reservations for public purposes. But I entertain little doubt that if it were necessary in the construction of a railroad to build it through some section of a national park the power of the State to authorize it is clearly existent. I have no doubt about its power to do so through a forestry reservation.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Would the Senator think that the State could delegate its power of eminent domain to a corporation, for the purpose of supplying water to a town, for instance, to condemn a lake in a national park?

Mr. THOMAS. I think so. It might be that a city near the borders of a national park springing up through the unexpected discovery of large bodies of minerals, or from some other cause, might find itself absolutely dependent for a water supply upon a lake within the boundaries of a national park.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I concede the desirability of it in that case.

Mr. THOMAS. Under such circumstances, which are among those giving rise to the exercise of this plenary power, I should hesitate to admit that it could not be exercised for the benefit of the community.

Now, I will refer rapidly to a number of other cases on this subject.

There is the case of Illinois Central Co. v. C. B. & M. R. Co. (26 Fed. Rep.), decided by Judge Gresham, whom Senators will remember as Secretary of State under Mr. Cleveland. He said:

> Lands owned by the United States within a State and not held for a public purpose are subject to the State right of eminent domain and taxation, the same as lands owned and held by individuals. It is only such land as the United States owns and holds within the States and upon which it maintains public buildings, arsenals, forts, etc., that are exempt from State authority and taxation.

I have called attention to the exemption from taxation of public lands by the States in the enabling acts and constitutions of the States more recently admitted to the Union.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. MYERS. I want to ask a question for enlightenment. I have not been able to remain in the Chamber all the time the Senator was reading from the brief.

Mr. THOMAS. I congratulate the Senator.

Mr. MYERS. No; I am the subject of commiseration, not congratulation. I have remained all the time I could. I was very much interested, but I have been called out a number of times.

In these cases where the Senator claims that the right of eminent domain has been exercised in regard to lands of the United States, has the United States Government been made a defendant? Has the United States Government been sued? If so, how did they get around the general principle that you can not sue the United States Government without its consent?

Mr. THOMAS. I must also ask the indulgence of the Senator, as I have asked that of my colleague. I will reach that subject before I yield the floor.

Mr. MYERS. I would be glad to hear the Senator on that point.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, before the Senator from Colorado proceeds, if he will pardon me, I sent to the desk this morning a clipping showing the activity of the people of Italy in the development of the water powers of that country. I now send to the desk and ask to have read an editorial from the morning paper showing similar activity by the Republic of France.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Editorial from the Washington Post of Monday, Jan. 15, 1917.]

FRENCH WATER POWER.

In sharp contrast to the nonaction of the United States Government, France is now spending millions of dollars to develop the water power of the Alps, the Pyrenees, and the central mountainous regions.

It was the war that acted as an incentive to France in developing water power for the operation of mills manufacturing shells, chemicals, and other necessities for the army.

In the valley of Durance new plants, aggregating 74,000 horsepower, for the electrochemical industry are under way, while above Modane one of the biggest chemical works in France has acquired rights to about 120,000 horsepower of waterfall that will be utilized speedily. Electric energy for Paris brought from the Alps is the most ambitious project for the future. A dam 75 yards high in the Rhone at Genissiat, backing the water up 14 miles to the Swiss frontier, will furnish a fall sufficient to operate a power station of 325,000 horsepower and 240,000 kilowatts. The line of transmission will be 312 miles long. It is estimated that this enterprise alone will economize 1,800,000 tons of the 20,000,000 tons of coal France imported annually before the war.

President Wilson once remarked that the "we-will-and-we-won't policy" had been delaying progress in the United States. That this delay is apt to become a serious handicap is shown by the manner in which European nations are encouraging the development of their water power. The fear that some one will make some money out of development in the United States should no longer retard progress. The coal bill and the farmers' fertilizer bill can not be cut down except by the extensive development of the vast water power that is now going to waste in this country.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, if the Senator from Colorado will pardon me further, I want to call attention to the statement in this editorial to the effect that the French are constructing a dam 75 yards high, which will back water for 14 miles, thus producing an enormous power plant to supply the city of Paris. On the boundary line between the States of Wyoming and Montana is the Big Horn Canyon. A dam practically that high—75 yards, 225 feet high—will back water for 50 miles between the practically perpendicular walls of a canyon; so that there is not an acre of land, practically, that will be flooded by the erection of that dam.

I ask the Senate to contemplate for a moment what enormous power a development of that character signifies. A dam 225 feet high, no higher than the one that is being built in the Alps, yet backs the water four times as far, making a reservoir, a lake of enormous extent, and yet it can be constructed without any particular damage to adjacent lands.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, there can be no question about the practical value of the subject matter of this bill nor about the usefulness of such a project as that to which the Senator from Montana has just referred. If efficiency and necessary construction were here involved as elements which could not be otherwise secured, I should not feel at liberty to oppose this bill; but inasmuch as I am satisfied that the same results can be obtained otherwise and in a manner which involves no sacrifice of the rights and powers of the States or affect the general policy of the Government—a salutary policy of disposition by proceedings entirely at variance with the details of this bill—I am not impressed that this exhibition of fact is at all pertinent to the discussion. If I thought so, I would at once, then, inquire whether, stupendous as such improvements are and useful as they must become, we should acquire them at the sacrifice of an ancient policy on the one hand and the integrity of the States upon the other.

There can be no question about the efficiency of all forms of German enterprise, which are exhibited not alone in its military strength and preparation but in its entire economic structure; and yet I am satisfied that the Senator would hardly be willing to adopt and put into operation a similar system of efficiency at the price of that autocracy for which Germany is also notorious.

Now, Mr. President, I want to digress from my discussion for a moment to refer to an episode between the Senator from Montana and myself concerning the so-called Lever bill which I mentioned, I think, on last Friday. The Senate will recall that the Senator from Montana took issue with me as to the existence of such a bill and afterwards read into the RECORD a letter from the chairman of the House Committee on Public Lands asserting that no such measure had been introduced or was pending in the House. I have here a letter from Mr. EDWARD T. TAYLOR, of the House, who is the ranking member of the committee, and which was written after his attention was called to the letter of the chairman of the committee and to my statement concerning the Lever bill. It is addressed to me, and reads as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., January 15, 1917.

Hon. CHARLES S. THOMAS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Concerning the colloquy between yourself and Senator WALSH regarding the public-land leasing measures, there was a misunderstanding as to the time rather than the substance of the question.

In the second session of the Sixty-second Congress Congressman LEVER, of South Carolina, introduced H. R. 19857, providing for the withdrawal from entry of all the unreserved, unappropriated public lands of the United States and authorizing the President to establish grazing districts over the public domain and regulate the use of it for grazing purposes: to issue permits of 10 years each at a charge of not less than one-half cent and not more than 4 cents per acre for the use of the public domain. That bill was known as the "Lever bill," and was very vigorously denounced throughout the public-land States as, in effect, wiping out all public-land laws and effectually terminating homesteads. That bill is still being denounced in the West as the "Lever" bill. However, Mr. LEVER did not reintroduce it in the Sixty-third Congress, but it was reintroduced in the Sixty-third Congress by Congressman KENT, of California, as H. R. 10539, and the Public Lands Committee on March 3, 1914, entered upon and conducted an exhaustive hearing on that bill, together with bill H. R. 9582, by Mr. Ferguson, of New Mexico, which was the 640-acre homestead bill.

The American National Live Stock Association vigorously supported the Kent bill, as it had done the Lever bill, and all the large stock interests of the country and big sheep men vigorously supported both of these general public-land withdrawal and leasing bills. Those hearings extended over several days and covered 504 pages. The Kent bill appears in full at page 23 of the hearings, a copy of which I am sending you herewith. So that in the Sixty-third Congress the Lever bill was known as the Kent bill.

In the Sixty-fourth Congress neither Mr. LEVER nor Mr. KENT reintroduced this bill, but the same object is sought to be obtained in slightly different language by the bill H. R. 336, introduced at the last session by Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, a copy of which I inclose herewith. You will note it provides that "the public grazing lands in the arid States and Territories shall be leased by the Commissioner of the General Land Office under the provisions of this act." It is, in my judgment, purely a large stockmen's public-land withdrawal and grazing leasehold proposition, which would effectively put the western 17 States into a Federal cow pasture and is fully as inimicable to the development of the West as the Lever-Kent bill. This propaganda was started by Mr. Pinchot some 10 or 12 years ago, through Senator Burkett's bill and others, and is now being referred to as the Lever-Kent-Stephens bill. My understanding is that all of the ultraconservationists are supporting the American National Live Stock Association in its advocacy of this measure and in its vigorous opposition to the 640-acre homestead law.

The Lever-Kent bill was emphatically repudiated by the Public Lands Committee of the House in both the Sixty-second and Sixty-third Congresses, and the committee has not and will not during this Sixty-fourth Congress give any consideration to the Stephens bill, because it is unalterably opposed to the wholesale withdrawal from entry of the public domain for leasing or any other purpose.

Yours, very cordially,

EDWARD T. TAYLOR.

My error was one of time, Mr. President. I confounded the statement of the writer of the letter just read with bills introduced and pending in the present instead of the last and a previous Congress.

The hearings to which the letter refers are represented by this large volume which I hold, entitled "Hearings before the Committee on Public Lands on House bill 9582 and House bill 10539."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I recall the Lever bill very well indeed. It had its origin a number of years before the Sixty-third Congress. In fact in the month of February, 1907, before I became a Member of the Senate or got into public life at all, I took a trip from Montana to Washington and appeared before the Committee on Agriculture of the United States Senate and opposed just exactly such a measure as that, and I have never wavered in my opposition to it. I maintain exactly the same opposition to it to-day that I did then. That bill embodied no such idea as the Senator expressed, namely, a desire and disposition to withdraw all public lands from entry with a view to disposing of them under a leasing system. The Lever bill provided for the classification of the public lands and the leasing of them for grazing purposes, but it expressly provided that they should all be subject to homestead entry under the then existing law, so that a man could take a homestead and when he got it he would have a complete title to it.

Our objection to it was that if you did that you would prevent anybody from going upon these lands because the cattlemen have a lease of the land, and therefore the homesteader would be hampered and hindered from exercising his homestead right. The Senator and I are in perfect accord about that, but I should hardly think the Senator would feel it was a bill which supported the idea which he is presenting here, that we would be likely to adopt permanently a system which would make everybody a tenant of the Government.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the bill which was introduced in the House in the Sixty-third Congress is composed of eight sections. The first opens with this recital:

> That the unreserved, unappropriated public lands of the United States shall be subject to the provisions of this act, and the President of the United States is hereby authorized to establish from time to time, by proclamation, grazing districts upon the unreserved, unappropriated public lands of the United States, conforming to State and county lines so far as practicable, whereupon the Secretary of Agriculture, under rules and regulations prescribed by him, shall execute, or cause to be executed, the provisions of this act, appoint all officers necessary for the administration and protection of such grazing districts, regulate their use for grazing purposes, protect them from depredations, from injury to the natural forage crop, and from erosion.

It is true that subsequent sections recognize homestead rights, but it is equally true that under their provisions it would be extremely easy for the Secretary of Agriculture to substitute his department for that of the Land Department, and then determine what should and what should not constitute grazing tracts for lease, since the bill subjects all unreserved and unappropriated public lands to its provisions. The departments having administration over these laws frequently surround or accompany them by rules, some of which, not intentionally, are either so restrictive or so much an enlargement of the law which is to be administered as to practically injure, if not defeat, the purpose and intention of the measure.

So far as I am concerned, I am very glad to learn from the Senator that he is not committed to but, on the contrary, will vigorously oppose any and all such legislation. I wish he could go further and agree with me that it is to the interest of the people whom we represent to oppose all these various schemes of legislation, since they have running through them all a family likeness, a tendency to withhold fee-simple title at least to the remaining public domain and reserve it, or something supposed to be in it, in the Government, giving to the citizens not the right to acquire the title but the right to the use of the lands under terms and regulations to be prescribed by the various bureaus and departments.

Mr. President, the first action of the general assembly of my State, now in session, which convened on the first Wednesday in January, was to pass a joint resolution of protest against the proposal of the Forestry Bureau to increase the rates for grazing upon the lands contained within these reservations.

Mr. SMOOT. Doubling them.

Mr. THOMAS. It is proposed to double them, Mr. President, and thus increase by 100 per cent the cost of maintaining the flocks and herds of the West upon the pastures found in these reservations.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMPSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to his colleague?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator, if he will permit me, that it is not the first increase that has been made. They have been making increases ever since the forest policy was adopted.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I am obliged to the Senator for his information. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Can the Senator indicate the rates charged by the Government on these grazing leases?

Mr. THOMAS. I must refer the Senator to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and to my colleague for a reply to that question. I can not give the rates.

Mr. CLARK. They vary on different reservations.

Mr. WADSWORTH. According to the influence?

Mr. CLARK. I do not know how that is.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the average, I believe, is 35 cents per head of cattle for the few months that they graze upon the forest reserves; the rate on sheep is 7 and 8 cents, and there are some reservations where the rate is even higher than that. Now, they propose to double those rates.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. WEEKS. What I wish to ask is whether or not these rates are higher or lower than those which are charged by the owners of grazing lands.

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Utah to answer that question.

Mr. BORAH. The difference between the private owner and the Government is that the private owner pays a tax. If the Government were paying taxes in our State we would not object to this system at all.

Mr. WEEKS. I am willing to take that into consideration, but I should like to have an answer to the question.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that there are some public lands leased through the Reclamation Service for the grazing of cattle and sheep where the price paid is higher, the rates being fixed by the bid of those who desire the grazing of the lands. There are other cases, and I admit it frankly, where the leasing rates are higher than the rates that have been charged in the past by the Forest Service upon national forest reserves.

Mr. WEEKS. Would the Senator think the difference between the rate charged by the Government and the rate charged by the individual, less whatever suitable taxes would be paid if the land were in the hands of individuals, would be a fair rate for the Government to charge? I am asking the question for information, not because of any prejudice about the bill or what the bill contemplates doing.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the policy in establishing forest reserves and charging for grazing privileges thereon was to charge only enough for grazing privileges to help pay the administrative charges of the forest reserve, the greater part of which would be paid from the sale of timber upon the reserve. The idea was not to impose an unjust burden upon the people of the Western States using the reserves. The use of the public lands in the other States was granted without cost to the people. The object of the reservation was to protect the watersheds and the timber of the reserves and not make a profit out of the grazing privileges granted to the stockmen who live in that part of our country.

Mr. WEEKS. I hope the Senator from Colorado will pardon me for breaking in in this way, but I wish to ask him, if the Government is going to follow this system of leasing lands or of renting grazing privileges, does he think it is unreasonable that the Government should charge a fair commercial rate for the privilege?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I think it is unreasonable, because it is withholding the land from entry; and in the other public-land States the citizens had a perfect right to enter those lands, in which case the State could tax the land, and the taxation go toward maintaining the institutions of the State.

Mr. WEEKS. What I referred to was as long as the renting is done. I think the lands ought to be entered and in the hands of private individuals as far as possible; but, as long as the Government rents the land, is there any reason why it should not receive a fair commercial return for doing so?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator——

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield further; and if so, to whom?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I wish to suggest to the Senator that we have nothing in the way of renting land in the hands of private people similar to that by which the various reservations are rented. Whenever the State has a large quantity of land, and rents it, the average price that it rents it for is 5 cents an acre a year; it is by the acre instead of the head; and in some cases, where there is running water through the section, it is rented at 8 cents an acre; but there is nothing done by the State in the way of leasing by the head. Where there are leases that way, it is of a cultivated field, such as an alfalfa field, and, of course, that is a higher character of feed, and, consequently, they would naturally require a larger price from the owner of the cattle.

Mr. WEEKS. Let me ask the Senator from Colorado, who knows a great deal about this question, if he thinks the rates charged by the Government for grazing privileges, based on a commercial standard, are high?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know. If you are going to count the land as worth so much and charge interest upon it, and if you take the value of the land and the number of people who are employed, and try to make it a paying institution, of course, it will not pay and never will pay, because the overhead charges are so enormous. There is no doubt about that. On that account it is very hard to determine what would be a fair return on the value of the land.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. We would lose sight of the real controversy so far as the West is concerned if we should stop to discuss whether the grazing privilege is worth 30 cents a head or 35 cents a head. The point is that it prevents the development of the State upon that basis which is necessary to make a new Commonwealth and build a State. We have 83 per cent of our State reserved and entirely free from tax-paying burdens.

Mr. WEEKS. May I ask the Senator from Idaho why it makes any difference about the development of this property and getting it into the hands of private individuals whether the rate charged is 35 cents or 70 cents?

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Massachusetts misunderstood my suggestion entirely if he supposes his question is pertinent to what I said. It does not make any difference; that is precisely what I say, but the proposition with us is to prevent the leasing system as an entirety. We do not want it at all at any price. If it was 2 cents a head, we would be opposed to it.

Mr. WEEKS. I understood the objection that was being made was that there was an increase in the charges to be made by the Government.

Mr. THOMAS. I was not objecting; at least my purpose was not to object so much as to illustrate. Personally I can see no reason why, if the Government is to retain these enormous reserves in their present condition, it should not obtain some revenue by contracts with the owners of sheep and cattle whereby their grazing facilities can be utilized. My reference to the subject was a digression at the best. I called the attention of the Senate to it because of the controversy between the Senator from Montana and myself and the reference to the object and purposes of the Lever bill. But I may say for the edification of the Senator from Massachusetts and others who are interested in this matter that the establishment of reserves carrying with it the power to charge these rates carries with it also the power to make them prohibitive; and all these different changes, whether they be large or small, whether they be just or unjust, serve to increase that irritation which necessarily arises when two sovereignties come in conflict over the same subject matter and at the same time.

There is doubtless a good reason, at least in the opinion of the forest authorities, for this enhancement of the charges. But, it has its bearing upon the very important subject of the cost of living, which is becoming the most potent and insistent of all questions just at this time. It would seem therefore to be unfortunate that the Government should now, when prices for all the necessities of life are so high, propose to double its rates for pasturage in the forest reserves.

Of course, as stated by the Senator from Idaho, the fundamental attitude of men like himself and myself excludes these details of administration. We object to the reservation of large areas of land, which seems to us unnecessary, and particularly because such reservations necessarily contract the area of possible population very considerably, and, of course, the area of land which may become subject to the taxing power of the Commonwealth. I imagine that if in the State of Massachusetts the Government of the United States owned and had withdrawn from settlement even 10 per cent—to say nothing of the 80 per cent in the State of Idaho—even 10 per cent of its domain, from which the tides of population were practically excluded, which could not be absorbed, so to speak, in the common mass of property of the community, the Senator from Massachusetts would be less concerned about charges for the use of that land than he would be about the fact of withdrawal and its effect upon the prosperity and future of the State.

But, Mr. President, I have unintentionally gone far away from the argument I was attempting to present when the Senate adjourned on last Saturday evening. I was then reading authorities upon the proposition that the ownership of land by the Government of the United States within the limits of a State, not needed and used for governmental purposes, was not an ownership which in any wise affected the sovereign dominion of the State over that land; that it was just as much subject to the police laws, to the criminal laws, to the laws for the protection of property by the State, that it was just as much subject to the power of condemnation as were the lands of any private citizen; and I had reached, when the Senate adjourned, and was about to refer to the case of the Pacific Railway Co. against Leavenworth, in Twenty-ninth Federal Reporter, page 728, and to its decision by Mr. Justice Brewer, who was then upon the circuit bench. It was a case somewhat similar to the Union Pacific-Burlington case. Mr. Justice Brewer first cited with approval the Railroad Bridge case, of Judge McLean. Then he said:

> Even if it were conceded that Congress had the power to enter the territory of a State and, for any purpose, establish a line through its center over which the State had no right of crossing—a sort of Chinese wall dividing the State into two portions, inaccessible to each other, a concession I should never be willing to make—it is clear to my mind that no assertion of such a power was ever contemplated by Congress in the Pacific Railroad legislation.

The application of this doctrine to the principle of the pending bill lies in the fact that in that litigation the Union Pacific Railway Co. was resisting the right of condemnation over and across its right of way upon the ground that it was a great governmental agency, that the Government of the United States had created the corporation and had endowed it with an immense land grant and right of way 400 feet in width in order that it might be an agency, an indispensable attribute in the exercise of national administration. The proposition was rejected. It was said by Justice Brewer that, even if it were true, a proposition which he would not concede, it is clear that no such assertion of any such power was ever contemplated in the creation of the Union Pacific Railroad.

Mr. President, the other day my colleague [Mr. SHAFROTH] mentioned the case of the United States against the City of Chicago, which is found reported in Seventh Howard, page 185, and in which the city attempted to condemn streets for public use through Fort Dearborn Reservation. Of course, the Members of the Senate remember distinctly that the city of Chicago comprises an old reservation, called Fort Dearborn, in its business center; but at that early time the fort was the chief part of the community, and the city needing certain rights of way across the reservation proceeded to open them. The case came to the Supreme Court of the United States, where Mr. Justice Woodbury, in delivering the unanimous opinion of the court, as I recall, said:

It is not questioned that land within a State, purchased by the United States as a mere proprietor and not reserved or appropriated to any special purpose, may be liable to condemnation for streets or highways like the land of other proprietors under the rights of eminent domain.

I have called attention, so far, Mr. President, to Federal authorities, to cases in the inferior and the supreme courts of the Nation. I have given careful consideration to the subject, and have verified the brief from which I have read, and have also endeavored to discover authorities which disputed the general proposition. I have not been able to do so, unless it can be said that some recent cases—the case of the United States against Light, for example—may not be consistent with this general line of authorities. I do not think that is so, but that is the only possible conflict which I have been able to discover to this well-recognized and fundamental proposition; but the question has been before the State courts—eminent State courts—as well. It was before the Supreme Court of Minnesota at an early period in the life of that great Commonwealth in the case of Camp against Smith, Second Minnesota, page 131. The court said:

The United States has but a proprietary interest in the public lands within the several States; the sovereignty is in the State. The rights attaching to the interest do not differ from those of any other landholder in the State, except as provided by the Constitution of the United States and the terms of the contract between the general and State governments at the time the State is admitted into the Union. The Constitution merely asserts the right to dispose of, as proprietor, and to make needful rules and regulations necessary to the exercise of that right.

In State against Bachelder, Fifth Minnesota, page 178; in Simonson against Thompson, Twenty-fifth Minnesota, page 450, the proposition was reaffirmed, and the last case was decided upon the doctrine of the United States against The Railroad Bridge Co., in Sixth McLean, from which I read a long extract on Saturday.

In Burt against Mechanics' Insurance Co., One hundred and sixth Massachusetts, the supreme court of that State said:

The United States, acting through Congress, has the right to eminent domain in all purposes incidental to the exercise of the powers conferred by the Constitution, and such as exist by necessary implication, and none others: and so, on the other hand, the State, as to other purposes, has the same right even to the extent of taking public lands of the United States as was decided in United States v. Railroad Bridge Co.

California has spoken upon the same proposition. In the case of Moore v. Smaw (17 Cal., 199) the court, speaking by Chief Justice Field, afterwards Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, one of the most eminent men who ever occupied that exalted position, said:

The United States occupy, with reference to their real property within the limits of a state, only the position of a private proprietor, with the exception of exemption from State taxation, and their patent of such property is subject to the same general rules of construction which apply to conveyances of individuals.

The same court, in the case of People v. Shearer (30 Cal., 645), said:

The relation of the United States to the public lands since the admission of California into the Union is simply proprietary—that of an owner of the lands, like any citizen who owns lands, and not that of municipal sovereignty.

That doctrine, Mr. President, is also recognized by the text writers upon the subject. I will quote from merely one of them——

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. In just a moment I will yield to the Senator. Lewis, on Eminent Domain, third edition, volume 2—this is a late edition of a standard work upon the subject—says:

The public lands of the United States, situated within a State and held for sale or settlement, are subject to the eminent domain of the State.

Now I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to know the date of the California case, if the Senator has it.

Mr. THOMAS. I am unable, from this brief, Mr. President, to give the Senator that information.

Mr. CURTIS. If Justice Field rendered that opinion, it must have been a long while ago.

I desire to ask the Senator if that decision has been followed in the more recent decisions?

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator had been present on Saturday afternoon he would have heard me cite a large number of cases from the courts of the United States. I will say to the Senator that I have been unable to find a single instance in which the doctrine has been denied either in the State or the Federal courts.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, will it interrupt the Senator for me to ask him a question there?

Mr. THOMAS. Not at all.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does the court distinguish between the right of a State to tax the property, from which they say the property is exempt, and the right of a State to impose eminent domain upon it, to which they say it is subject? They are both attributes of sovereignty, are they not?

Mr. THOMAS. They are both attributes of sovereignty; but in the enabling acts, under whose provisions these States were admitted, Congress required as a condition of admission that the State should yield its power of taxation on the public domain, and in the constitutions of the several States or in their schedules there is this express reservation.

I will say to the Senator the very fact that the Federal Government required this exemption to be made, and that the State makes it, would seem to be an argument in favor of my contention, because, if it were not so, the States could probably tax all lands held by the Government of the United States as proprietors not actually used for governmental purposes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Is it not a fact, let me ask the Senator from Colorado, that the Supreme Court of the United States has held that the lands of the United States are not taxable by the States, utterly regardless of the compact entered into on the admission of the State into the Union?

Mr. THOMAS. I think, Mr. President, that the Supreme Court of the United States has so determined.

Mr. WALSH. It has so determined repeatedly.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, while the announcement of the Supreme Court is the law, I affirm that the decision is contrary to the fundamental principles of taxation and of exemptions therefrom, as outlined in McCullough against Maryland and subsequent cases. It is not, to my mind, in conformity with the principle of absolute sovereignty which every State possesses, except as restricted by the specific limitations which are placed upon it by its own constitution or the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, if the Senator from Colorado will pardon me, I will say, for the information of the Senate, that when the bill for the admission of California into the Union was under consideration in this body, it contained such a provision as the Senator speaks of, under which the State of California undertook that it would never tax lands of the United States within the State of California; and Mr. Webster called the attention of the Senate to the fact that a provision of that kind was utterly unnecessary in the bill, because the Supreme Court of the United States had already decided that the lands of the United States could not be taxed by the States.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, since that colloquy, however, a number of courts have held to the contrary, and I have just read some of the opinions to that effect. Moreover, I again remind the Senator of the express surrender of the power which Congress requires every State to make upon its admission to the Union.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the leading case holding that the lands of the Government are taxable regardless of the exemption is the Tennessee case, in which the Government through the process of foreclosure or some other medium—I have forgotten just what—received back a piece of land and it became the property of the Government.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It was through a tax sale.

Mr. BORAH. Through a tax sale; that is right. The Supreme Court of the United States held that the land was not taxable regardless of the question of whether or not it had been exempted; but I am like the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] in that I have never seen the reason or philosophy of that holding.

Mr. WALSH. Is that the case of Van Brocklin against Tennessee?

Mr. BORAH. That is the Tennessee case.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. WORKS. I am not familiar with the cases to which our attention has been called, but it will be remembered that the original States voluntarily ceded all of their lands to the United States Government for the purpose of paying the debts of the Government, upon the condition that those lands were not to be taxed, and it has been uniformly held that the new States that are admitted into the Union are admitted on the same terms. It may be that the decision was placed upon that ground, rather than upon any express reservation.

Mr. BORAH. No; the Supreme Court in the Tennessee case goes to the full length in reference to that property and holds that being the property of the United States, it is not taxable.

Mr. WORKS. As I have said, I have no recollection of ever examining that case, but I suggest that might be the reason for it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, such is my recollection of the decision, but I am unable at this time to detail the reasoning of the court. I believe, however, that these decisions are entirely in harmony with the proposition for which I am contending—that the right of condemnation exists and must exist if the autonomy of the State as a coequal with the sisterhood of Commonwealths is to be maintained, since otherwise the United States, as the greatest of all landed proprietors in a great many of the States, would have the power absolutely to withhold from any sort of settlement or development, if it so chose, every acre of such land, and not only arrest the growth and development of the State, but practically put it out of existence through the consequent lack of facilities and agencies for conducting the government and exercising its functions, for taking care of its citizens, furnishing means of communication, and enforcing the laws of the Commonwealth.

One of these decisions speaks of the necessity of intercommunication between the different parts of the State. Now, will it be said, if the Government should forbid the building of a highway of any sort between the 44 per cent of the State owned by citizens in private ownership and the 56 per cent in public ownership, that the State would not have eo ipso the plenary authority, which is inseparable from sovereignty, to condemn rights of way through these lands for its roads so essential not only to the welfare but to the very existence of community life? It would seem that the mere statement of the proposition carries with it its own answer.

I stated, Mr. President, on Saturday that the rights of way which the early pioneers of California, of Idaho, of Oregon, of Colorado, and of the other Western States had taken and developed for the purposes of their business and community life were an application of this principle by the people, not perhaps in their collective capacity as a State or a Territory, an exercise of that right which necessity or convenience or development demands. The act of 1866—I think our first mining law—provided, in substance, that all conveyances by the Government should be made with reservations of these rights of way. It is applicable as well to patents for mines as to patents for homesteads, and in one of the first cases in which that section was involved, the case of Brodie v. Water Co.—there were earlier cases than that—but in the case of Brodie v. Water Co. (101 U. S., 274), which was a case brought on error to the Supreme Court of the United States from the Supreme Court of California, the court said, speaking of these rights of way:

> They are rights which the Government had by its conduct recognized and encouraged and was bound to protect before the passage of the act of 1866. We are of opinion that this section of the act which we have quoted was rather a voluntary recognition of a preexisting right of possession constituting a valid claim to its continued use than the establishment of a new one.

The act, in other words, did not create these rights. They were there. They were recognized as such, and consequently the exemptions were provided for.

While I am on this subject, Mr. President, I recall that in 1908 or 1909 a client of mine who had acquired a right of way across the public domain under the act of 1866 for a flume and canal for the development of hydroelectric power—a vested right recognized by the then existing laws both of the State and of the Nation—was notified by the Forestry Bureau to apply for and take out a permit for the use of that portion of his right of way which was within the boundaries of a subsequently created forest reserve. Upon consultation with the firm, of which I was then a member, this gentleman decided to ignore the notice. He then received a second one, calling his attention to the first, and insisting upon his compliance within a given period. Upon advice, he allowed that period to lapse. He was then notified that unless he applied for and received the permit, proceedings in ouster would be instituted against him. It was then that his counsel became active, and informed the bureau of the conditions which I have just recited, and of the further fact that no permit would be taken out under any circumstances for what we believed to be an absolute, vested property right. There is no need of following up the details. Suffice it to say that the Government authorities did not see fit to press the matter any further, and it was abandoned; but I was told in that connection of instances where the same demand had been made and complied with by the owners of similar rights of way as an alternative to the disagreeable prospect of controversy with the Federal Government.

Now, let me again refer to the case of Withers v. Buckley—a case with which my friend from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is doubtless familiar, since it arose in his State under an attempt on the part of the State government to develop certain watercourses within the State, and which was challenged upon the ground that the public domain through which these watercourses ran, being the property of the United States, was without the power of the State of Mississippi to interfere with or to take any action about. The court said:

> It can not be imputed to Congress that they ever designed to forbid, or to withhold from the State of Mississippi, the power of improving the interior of that State, * * * although a plan of improvement to be adopted might embrace or affect the course or the flow of rivers situated within the interior of the State. Could such an intention be ascribed to Congress, the right to enforce it may be confidently denied. Clearly, Congress could exact of the new State the surrender of no attribute inherent in her character as a sovereign independent State, or indispensable to her equality with her sister States, necessarily implied and guaranteed by the very nature of the Federal compact. Obviously, and it may be said primarily, among the incidents of that equality is the right to make improvements in the rivers, water courses, and highways situated within the State.

The case of West River Bridge Co. v. Dix (6 How., p. 529), decided about the same time, announced that—

> It can not be justly disputed that in every political sovereign community there inheres necessarily the right and the duty of guarding its own existence, and of protecting and promoting the interests and welfare of the community at large. This power and this duty are to be exerted not only in the highest acts of sovereignty, and in the external relations of governments; they reach and comprehend likewise the interior polity and relations of social life, which should be regulated with reference to the advantage of the whole society. This power, denominated the eminent domain of the State, is, as its name imports, paramount to all private rights vested under the government, and these last are, by necessary implication, held in subordination to this power and must yield in every instance to its proper exercise.
> The Constitution of the United States, although adopted by the sovereign States of this Union, and proclaimed in its own language to be the supreme law for their government, can, by no rational interpretation, be brought to conflict with this attribute in the States; there is no express delegation of it by the Constitution; and it would imply an incredible fatuity in the States to ascribe to them the intention to relinquish the power of self-government and self-preservation.

I think that is the strongest expression upon the subject to be found from the Supreme Court of the United States; and yet it is by no means too strong, because the plenary power of disposition of all property within the limits of a Commonwealth—excepting, of course, those limitations which are imposed by the Constitution, which are very few and very specific, and those imposed by its own constitution—is so much an essential to its existence that it would be worse than fatuous to propose for a moment to surrender it. Indeed, as stated in one of the decisions which I read on Saturday, if the Federal Government made it a condition to the admission of a State that it should surrender even a part of its sovereign power of eminent domain, the requirement would be absolutely void.

Mr. President, it is said—and I have encountered this statement on more than one occasion as an argument against this proposition—that the requirement by the Government, upon the admission of the State of Colorado, that it should recognize and not interfere with the Government's sole power of disposition and control of the public domain within its borders carried with it a surrender of all plenary power over such property; and attention is always called to the recitals of the enabling act and of the Constitution upon this subject. I have already endeavored to show that the provision of the Constitution of the United States giving to Congress the power of disposal of its property is not a basis for the claim of sovereignty over it. In other words, it confers merely a power of disposition, not a power of absolute political domination. It is not a power of political domination in any sense, and, as a consequence, it is merely an exemption of control by the State so far as relates to the power of disposition and proprietary control over that part of its domain the title to which still remains in the Government.

That contention, supported as it is by the authorities which I have read, is perfectly consistent with the assertion of the sovereign power of eminent domain over these lands. As a citizen of Colorado I have the sole power of disposition of my property. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has in Nebraska the sole power of disposition over his property. The Government of the United States in both these States has similar power of disposition over its property.

The fact that the constitution expressly gives that authority does not enlarge and transform it from a power of disposal to a power of sovereignty, and when we remember that that clause of the constitution which confers this power of disposition declares that it shall not in anywise interfere "with any claim of the State or of the United States" we must conclude that it was designed, by virtue of the imposition of that condition, to emphasize my contention and to limit its operation to the power of disposition. If it were otherwise, then the provision of our constitution recognizing a right of way over public lands for the disposition of waters and their use would be nugatory. It would be in conflict with the Constitution of the United States. But the Congress accepted that constitution. The President of the United States ratified it in his proclamation declaring our State admitted into the Union. It has been recognized by the practice of the people with regard to rights of way over the public domain. The supreme court of the State has emphasized it as an inherent essential sovereign power. The Federal courts have never anywhere questioned or challenged its accuracy.

So I say that the enabling act and the constitution of Colorado are reconcilable each with the other, and both with this provision of the constitution, if we carry in our minds the distinction between the proprietary, primary right of disposition and the right of eminent domain over the same lands. The assurance of the proprietary right of disposition was demanded by the United States in the enabling act. The right of eminent domain over the public lands was expressly asserted by the State of Colorado in its constitution, and there is no inconsistency between them. The executive department of the Federal Government acquiesced in the distinction when it proclaimed the admission of the State into the Union.

The most recent State case upon this subject to which my attention has been directed, where it was fully considered, is a case from Wyoming entitled Farm Investment Co. v. Carpenter (61 Pac., 258). The court there states the form in which the question was raised:

> It is strenuously insisted that the declaration contained in the Constitution that the waters of the natural streams, etc., are the property of the State is meaningless and of no force and effect. It is argued that the State no more than an individual can acquire property by a mere assertion of ownership, and that the United States, as the primary owner of the soil, is also primarily possessed of the title to the waters of the streams flowing across the public lands. This contention demands more than a passing notice.

I shall not take time, Mr. President, to read the long extract from that opinion in the brief which I hold in my hands, but I shall ask leave to insert it in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks, being pages 127 and 128 of this document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

> So far as any proprietary rights of the United States are concerned, the question would seem to be settled in favor of the effectiveness of the declaration by the act of admission, which embraces the following provision: "and that the constitution which the people of Wyoming have formed for themselves be, and the same is hereby, accepted, ratified, and confirmed * * *." At the modern common law public waters are generally confined to those which are navigable, and public rights therein to navigation and fishery and privileges incident thereto. In the arid region of this country another public use has been recognized by custom and laws and sanctioned by the courts—a public use sufficient to support the exercise of the power of eminent domain. (Irrigation District v. Bradley, 164 U. S., 112.) This use and the doctrine supporting it are founded upon the necessities growing out of natural conditions and are absolutely essential to the development of the material resources of the country. * * * The common-law doctrine of riparian rights relating to the use of the water of natural streams and other natural bodies of water not prevailing, but the opposite thereof, and one inconsistent therewith, having been affirmed and asserted by custom, laws and decisions of courts, and the rule adopted permitting the acquisition of rights by appropriation, the waters affected thereby become, perforce, publici juris. It is therefore doubtful whether an express constitutional or statutory declaration is required in the first place to render them public.
> In a country where the doctrine of prior appropriation has at all times been recognized and maintained an expression by constitution or statute that the waters subject to appropriation are public, or the property of the public, would seem rather to declare and confirm a principle already existing than to announce a new one. But, however this may be, we entertain no doubt of the power of the people in their organic law, when existing vested rights are not unconstitutionally interfered with, to declare the waters of all natural streams and other natural bodies of water to be the property of the public or of the State. Nor do we doubt that the legislature may make a like declaration, when in that particular unrestrained by the constitution. * * * If, as has been said, the title of the General Government to the public lands is that of proprietor rather than sovereign (Kin. Irr., sec. 145), it would seem that its rights as such are not greater to the waters of the streams flowing across the lands than those of an individual owner.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the question was asked on Saturday—and it was a very pertinent one—if it be true that the State may exercise its power of eminent domain over the lands of the United States within its borders the title to which is in the Government of the United States, how can it put that right into effective operation? I think the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] asked me if I could refer him to a single case in which this right was asserted in the courts against the United States; and the question was asked by the Senator having charge of the bill [Mr. MYERS] whether I could cite him to a single case in which the United States appeared as a defendant. I told him that I could not, but that I preferred to discuss the proposition later on.

It is known, of course, by everyone, and certainly by the legal profession, that rights are fundamentally of two kinds. There are substantial rights and there are remedial rights. It may be true that the remedial right is in some instances essential to the enjoyment of the substantial right; but they are as fundamentally distinct and separate as the night from the day. If I am in possession of a substantial right, the fact can in no manner be influenced by the question whether or not there goes with it a remedial right. If it is my right, then, even though I may not be able to enforce it in certain directions, even though the laws of my country do not prescribe a specific method of procedure for its recognition, it is a fundamental right, substantial in its character, and from which I can not be deprived under the Constitution of my country.

If I own a bond issued by the Government of the United States I have a right to demand upon maturity the amount of its principal, and between the time I acquire it and its maturity every interest payment as it matures, but I have no remedial right that I know of through which I can enforce this demand if the Government should for any reason fail to meet its obligation. Will anyone say that because that is a fact my property right in that Government bond is not absolute, that it is not mine, that I have not a right to insist that it shall not be taxed, that I may not dispose of it and depend upon the Government, independently of any question of remedy, for its recognition and allowance?

I think this one illustration is enough to satisfy the Senate that the existence of the right must be considered as distinct from the question of remedy. If it is a right, however, it certainly should be one which can be exercised without doubt. I question whether the general proposition that the Federal Government can not be sued without its consent, or that a State can not be sued without its consent, in the event the Government of the United States should want to condemn State lands for its specific purposes, would be entirely applicable. It is true that proceedings in condemnation are controversies, Mr. President, which admit of appeal and upon which error can be assigned, but, as a matter of fact, proceedings for the enforcement of condemnation do not constitute "actions at law."

In the Cyclopedia of Law and Procedure, volume 15, page 805, it is said that—

> Condemnation proceedings are no more than a compulsory sale of all the owner's interest in the property sought to be appropriated. Under most of the statutes such proceedings are essentially proceedings in rem, although the methods by which the power of eminent domain is to be exercised vary according to circumstances and according to the provisions of the different State legislatures. The proceeding is not one according to the course of the common law, but is a special proceeding, and it is not one to determine titles, unless this is allowed by the statute, but to fix the compensation and assess the damages. It is distinct in character from proceedings by which money is raised by taxation to make compensation for the land taken.

It is a proceeding, as here stated, in rem, a proceeding in which the object sought is to acquire property by ascertaining and then paying its value, because it can not be taken without compensation.

Of course, notice must be given of some sort to the owner of the premises and those who claim to be owners. A jury trial can not be demanded as a matter of right unless the statute so provides. In my State provision is made in some instances for a jury, in others for a commission of appraisers. The court may appoint a commission consisting of three members, if you please, or five, as the statute may be, and these inquire into and determine and assess the amount, which, when paid into court, gives the right to possession.

In my State upon the filing of a petition, if it is made to appear to the court that the petitioner needs immediate possession, he is given it upon paying a certain amount in court fixed by the judge as being the probable value. If after the end of the proceeding there is an appeal, that does not operate to deprive the petitioner of the possession of the premises pending the appeal, for the whole question is one of compensation, not the ascertainment of title, not ejectment. The title can not be in dispute at all or controverted unless the local statute makes such provision.

The act of the General Assembly of Colorado upon this subject was passed in 1915. I shall not take the time to read it, but I shall ask permission to insert it at the end of my remarks. It has reference to taking over the public domain. It provides for the filing of a petition for the purpose of determining compensation and the fixing of a time for a hearing upon it, publication of a notice in some newspaper of general circulation in the State once a week for six weeks prior to the time set for hearing, and in the event the property belongs to the United States the service of a copy of the notice and petition upon the legal representative of the Government within the State. Then follow the details, which are common, I think, to practically all acts regarding condemnation.

Mr. President, my first answer to the proposition propounded by the Senator from South Dakota is that in Colorado the legislature has, by affirmative action, sought to give the State and through the State the corporation entitled to rights of way a method of acquiring them by proceedings in the courts; and of course upon the theory that, being a proceeding in rem, the ownership of the property, because it happens to be in the Government instead of the individual, can not oust the court from jurisdiction.

In the cases of Denver & Rio Grande Company v. Wilson (28 Colo., 6) and Edwards v. Roberts (144 Pac., 856), that being a Colorado case also, the principle of the United States v. Bridge Company (6 McLean, 517), was recognized, and an application for injunction restraining the possession which had been acquired in those cases from continuance was denied.

I have no doubt, Mr. President, that after complying with the laws of the State regarding appropriations and the location of necessary reservoir sites and rights of way, the representatives of the right may, as has always been done in the West, enter upon the public domain and begin the work of construction. When the Government seeks to interfere the condemnor can defend his possession by pleading that he is there under the State's power of eminent domain and ask for the assessments of damages by way of compensation.

There are a number of authorities upon that proposition. Roberts v. Northern Pacific Railroad Co. (158 U. S., 1) was a bill by the Northern Pacific Railroad to quiet title to certain lands. Roberts became purchaser of a tract of land long after the railroad company had entered into possession of it and constructed its road. The Supreme Court of the United States, in passing upon this proposition, said:

> It is well settled that where a railroad company, having the power of eminent domain, has entered into actual possession of land necessary for its corporate purposes, whether with or without the consent of the owner of such lands, a subsequent vendee of the latter takes the land subject to the burden of the railroad and the right to payment from the railroad company, if it entered by virtue of an agreement to pay, or to damages, if the entry was unauthorized, belongs to the owner at the time the railroad company took possession.
> So, too, it has been frequently held that if a landowner, knowing that a railroad company has entered upon his land and is engaged in constructing its road without having complied with the statute, requiring either payment by agreement or proceedings to condemn, remains inactive and permits them to go on and expend large sums in the work, he will be estopped from maintaining either trespass or ejectment for the entry, and will be regarded as having acquiesced therein and be restricted to a suit for damages.

There is another case in which the Northern Pacific Co. was a party which was decided by the Supreme Court also. It is the case of Northern Pacific Railroad Co. v. Smith (171 U. S., 260), the proceedings being somewhat similar to that of the first case mentioned. There the court held:

> There is abundant authority for the proposition that, while no man can be deprived of his property, even in the exercise of the right of eminent domain, unless he is compensated therefor, yet that the property holder, if cognizant of the facts, may, by permitting a railroad company, without objection, to take possession of land, construct its track, and operate its road, preclude himself from a remedy by an action of ejectment. His remedy must be sought either in a suit of equity or in a proceeding under the statute, if one be provided, regulating the appropriating of private property for railroad purposes.

Perhaps the strongest case upon this immediate subject is that of New York City against Pine, in One hundred and eighty-fifth United States, page 93:

> That was a suit by riparian owners to restrain the city of New York from completing a dam which would divert water from the plaintiff's land. The city had been building the dam for two years prior to the filing of plaintiff's bill and had spent large sums of money.
> At the beginning of his opinion, Mr. Justice Brewer assumes that the city of New York could not have condemned the right to appropriate this water, and that if this suit had been brought prior to the beginning of work on the dam an injunction would have been granted, and after reviewing the cases, where the courts under certain circumstances have refused to interfere with the possession of railroads, he says:
> "It is, however urged that in all the cases referred to the one party could have appropriated the property or right of the other by condemnation proceedings, and that as he could have done so he should not be disturbed for lack of those proceedings, but either given time to carry them through or else in the pending equitable suit have the compensation or damages estimated, and then, upon payment, be protected in his possession. In other words, as he could have obtained the rightful possession by legal proceedings and payment, equity will do what the law could have done, and on payment of the ascertained compensation or damages affirm the possession. Whatever may be true of these cases, we start in this with the assumption that there was no power in the city of New York, by any proceedings in the States of New York or Connecticut, to acquire the right of appropriating this water and thus depriving the plaintiffs of its continued flow."

Nevertheless in that case, Mr. President, the Supreme Court referred the owner of the property to his right of compensation. I do not know of a more extreme case than this where the right not existing originally became one which the court would not disturb since it had been exercised.

In the case of Kamper v. the City of Chicago (215 Fed., 706) the city of Chicago, I think, in 1897 had built a tunnel under the lake for the purpose of supplying itself with a needed quantum of pure water, and went below the surface of the land in question without any proceedings of condemnation. The action was brought within a month after the existence of the tunnel work was discovered by the owner. He was denied the mandatory injunction and relegated to his proceeding under the statutes for the ascertainment and payment of compensation.

There are other cases, quite a number of them, following the same general line of opinion, to which I shall not take up the time of the Senate by quoting.

Mr. President, I have detained the Senate unduly in the presentation of the legal phases of the proposition. I have done so not only because the question is a most interesting one, but also because it is a tremendously important one, and one which, if exercised in the public-domain States, will enable the people of those States to utilize not only the body of the waters of their natural streams for domestic and agricultural purposes, but the power as well for the development of their Commonwealths, for the expansion of their industries, for the effectuation of those objects of government for which States are created and which if they discharge their functions properly and effectually must be exercised.

It is true, Mr. President, that until recent specific acts of legislation upon this subject enacted by Congress, and prior to the time when these large reservations were made, this power of condemnation remained dormant, that it was infrequently exercised, but the reason is evident. In the first place, the statutes of the United States, recognizing the existence of these rights, made the way easy for the acquisition of title. Instead of interposing obstacles and difficulties they cleared the way, so to speak, by enactments, some general and others specific. Where the Government, for example, had given the general right of way to railroad companies across the public domain it would be an unnecessary and expensive act for a company to invoke the State power of condemnation for something that it could get so much easier by following the permissive enactments of the Federal Government, and the same has been true with regard to rights of way for water and to reservoirs.

The mere fact that the resort to the power has not been essential may explain to some extent why its discussion seems to be that of a new and strange proposition, but it certainly can not operate to divest the State of the power, if it possesses it. A sovereign power may remain dormant because its use is unnecessary, but it can not be surrendered, misuse or nonuse can not in anywise affect its existence or its extent, and it can always be invoked whenever the necessity for invoking it shall be presented.

Mr. President, if this bill becomes a law, and Congress by specific enactment declares that the power sites withdrawn may be used for the generation of hydroelectric power only by leasing arrangements with the Government itself, one can easily perceive that inevitably the Federal Government will insist that only by the method it has provided can there be any development whatever. The Government will declare, and its courts will be expected to decide, that the power of eminent domain inherent in the States of Nevada and Colorado has been diminished to the extent to which the title of the public lands remains in the Government, and while it is plenary in the State of Missouri or in the State of New York because of the private proprietorship of land within the boundaries of Nevada and Colorado, our equality has been diminished and can never be effectual with and equal to those of the other States, since the Government does not propose hereafter to part with its title to the property to which this bill relates.

Mr. President, I regard that as a condition far more serious, far more sinister as an invasion of the rights of the Commonwealths, of their sovereign power and authority, and therefore far more important, than the development of these resources, and perhaps more important than any other consideration which can present itself to our experience.

It is true, Mr. President, that since the close of the rebellion the powers of the central Government have been largely augmented, and that those of the States have been correspondingly diminished. It is true, too unhappily true, that many of our States have voluntarily relinquished much of their sovereign power in exchange for appropriations to be expended within their boundaries, thereby relieving their people from the otherwise large taxation which might follow if these rights were retained and exercised as they should be. Indeed, it is common nowadays to assert that the States are prepared, if the appropriation is large enough, to surrender every right which they possess either in detail or in bulk, the consideration being deemed ample compensation and the burdens of taxation being shifted to the shoulders of the Nation.

I stated the other day, not entirely by way of humor, that it has become common to assume that anything is constitutional which Congress sees fit to place upon the statute book. We know that the successive steps taken by the Supreme Court in the construction given to the commerce clauses have now reached a point where we may assert and exercise all the police powers of the States. I am unable to draw a distinction between those acts which have been passed and nearly all of which have been sustained by the Supreme Court and bills which might be enacted whereby the regulation of sanitary conditions and of the lawbreaking elements may be assumed and administered exclusively by the Federal Government.

It may be, Mr. President, that such a policy is better for the people than preserving our powers of self-government. If that is so, then, of course, the sooner the march to absolute centralization shall be accomplished the better. It will do away with discussions like this and enable us in Colorado to look entirely to the city of Washington, both for our legislation and for our revenues for the expense of local administration.

But, for one, Mr. President, while I recognize the necessity of a great extension of governmental authority and activity, legislation like this and acts of a similar character, which must practically eventuate in depriving the States of the fundamental right of existence, or at least of very seriously impairing it, and acts of administration which must necessitate the appointment and employment of scores upon scores of additional employees of the Government, interfering with the laws of the locality, creating irritation, and producing expense far in excess of any revenue that can possibly be derived from the application of this law to our water powers, should only be resisted but by every possible legitimate method.

Mr. President, I know it will be answered, as it has been in the past, that we have wasted our substance, that the great and wonderful resources of this country have been squandered. We have been the spendthrift among nations and have permitted the adventurer, the unprincipled, the unscrupulous, and the criminal to absorb our vast resources and to appropriate their immense values at the expense of the people, and that their remnants will go the way of the rest if the Federal authority fails to preserve it by perpetuating its ownership of it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, before the Senator leaves the matter to which he has just referred, I wish to call his attention to the fact that when he speaks about scores and scores of officers he is going to the minimum of the matter. I wish to call attention to the fact that it is said Mr. Pinchot, in speaking to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] concerning the number of men who would be required in the Forestry Service when he got it in perfect condition, stated that it would require 100,000 employees.

Mr. THOMAS. If this bill passes and is put into operation, I am inclined to think that estimate would not be an exaggeration. Whether it will prove so under existing laws, of course I am unable to say.

I admit, Mr. President, that the land laws of the Government of the United States have frequently been shamefully abused and prostituted to private ends. No man at all conversant with land-laws administration during the last 75 years can deny it. We began by giving grants to private corporations to aid them in the development of the country through the establishment of lines of transportation. We granted empires to the Pacific Railroads and tracts of vast dimensions to institutions and enterprises of less importance, but said to be required for the development of the States. We made a mistake, in my judgment, in doing this. I firmly believe that when the benefits are measured with the evils which resulted from this universal grant of public lands the balance will be upon the side of the evils.

But that was not State, it was national legislation which accomplished this. It was not a State, it was a national policy. Unquestionably the men who organized and consummated such methods of Government aid were for the most part actuated by lofty motives and patriotic purposes. Unquestionably the Congress of the United States which initiated that policy had the best interests of the people at heart. So my strictures should be confined to the system and should not involve the good faith of the early pioneers in land legislation, who had for their purpose the development of Commonwealths and the settlement of the vast area between the Mississippi River and the Pacific Ocean.

Mr. President, that policy did recognize the tremendous importance of so disposing of the land that the citizen could ultimately secure title to it. It did place into private ownership these enormous tracts, at least to the extent of submitting them to taxation. The disposition of their lands by the railroad companies has been constant, and the occupation of the land has therefore been in accord with that element of the national policy.

In that particular, Mr. President, I am reminded that when the Union Pacific Railroad was organized, when the great enterprise was contemplated, it was the oriental traffic, and the oriental traffic only, which constituted the theoretical basis of its revenues. Every financial scheme designed for the promotion and completion of the enterprise looked for its success and its profit to the oriental traffic, passing from the Continent of Asia, across the Continent of America, and reaching the great markets of Europe. If anyone had at that time suggested any other source of revenue, and particularly a local source of revenue for the enterprise, he would not have received decent consideration.

But in 1887 the president of the road, in an article published by Scribner's Magazine in that year entitled "A great event in history," gave a graphic and interesting account of the completion of the road and the joining of the extremities of the Central Pacific and the Union Pacific near where the city of Ogden now stands. He called attention to this original basis of financing the road, and then declared that in 1885 the local development had grown so rapidly, population had come in so enormously, so many States had been formed along the line of the road, that the local traffic—the continental traffic perhaps would be a better expression—constituted 95 per cent and the oriental traffic but 5 per cent of its enormous receipts. In other words, the thing which was looked to as the financial basis of the enterprise became as nothing; the element of development of the country, which was hardly considered as one contributing to the revenues of the railroad, became its mainstay and support. So there was an element of benefit to the Nation, and certainly to that section of the country, in the building of this great highway through public aid, since it attracted this enormous population; and with the development of the country through private ownership and private enterprise, the business contributing to the road enabled it to meet its obligations and to yield a profit to its promoters and owners. That, however, was but the first step.

Mr. President, there is no doubt, and no one can dispute the fact, that between 1865, when the Civil War was brought to a close, and 1900, when the old century expired, the domain of the United States was plundered and stolen in a way shocking even to the extravagant ideas of that period. How was it done? Through the operation of Federal statutes, combined with their methods of administration by Federal employees and the heads of departments. Millions of acres of coal land, millions of acres of splendid timberland—all these were acquired, Mr. President, not from the States, not from State administration, not even through State connivance—but they were acquired through the operation of the laws of the United States, plus their administration by men who, to say the least of it, had little regard for their duties or for the rights and the welfare of the public.

One of the pitiable things about the Forestry Service is that largely through its agency the great timber reserves of the United States have passed into private ownership. It was perfectly easy. A forest reserve under the law could be created by administrative order. If a reserve was created which embraced land held in private ownership, the law gave the owners the right of exchanging it for any other nonmineral land of the United States which were open to occupation or purchase.

Why, Mr. President, the manufacture of forest reserves under the operation of that system became a business, an occupation of some of the great combinations of the country. Let me give an instance which I recall. The Santa Fe Railroad Co. secured the extension of, I think it was, the Navajo Reservation—I am not certain of the name—so as to embrace a vast area of lands reserved as a part of the grant to the old Atlantic & Pacific Railroad Corporation which had passed to it, which were worthless, and then, under the lieu law, simply exchanged those lands for an equal area of the magnificent forests of Oregon and Washington. My recollection is that through its operation they were able to secure to themselves over 500,000 acres of forest lands equal to any land in the world for as many acres of land that would hardly sustain a jack rabbit over night. What that company did citizens of the United States did and other corporations did, until by 1900 the amount of timberland worth having in those States became a negligible quantity.

Mr. President, such a situation could not have arisen if those lands, instead of being owned by the United States, had been conveyed to the States respectively. The Santa Fe Co. could not under such conditions have exchanged its worthless desert lands in Arizona for the magnificent timberlands of the State of Washington, nor could some of the private owners of my State have secured the extension of our forest reserves so as to take in thousands of acres of land upon which a tree never grew and upon which a tree never can grow, for the purpose of securing exchanges for better territory, the prospective value of which it is extremely difficult to estimate.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I will yield to my colleague in just a moment.

The Union Pacific Railroad Co. at one time filled the streets of Denver with men—adventurers, poor men—for the purpose of securing entries of coal lands in their names, only to be transferred to that corporation just as soon as the entries were made, all in compliance with the letter of the law and made possible, through the cooperation—passively, if you please, but the cooperation—of officials charged with the duty of administering these land laws both in the city of Washington and in the land districts of the country. I now yield to my colleague.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, in relation to what the Senator from Colorado has just stated concerning the land grants that were made by the National Government to the various railroad companies, I wish to call his attention to the fact that there were 43 railroad grants made by Congress, and that they aggregated 155,504,994 acres, being an area equal to all of the thirteen original States.

Mr. THOMAS. And the Senator might have added, Mr. President, that the bulk of the land contained in those grants is as good as the best of the lands in the country.

Mr. President, very naturally these shocking exhibitions of personal and corporate cupidity produced a reaction; reactions nearly always go to the other extreme. A school of land administration, if I may so call it, sprang into existence, consisting of men of high character and lofty motives, intent upon serving their country from their standpoint, some of whom unfortunately have become obsessed with the notion that unless the pendulum shall not only swing to but be kept at the other end of the arc these unhappy practices will persist until nothing of the national patrimony shall be left to the people. As a result, the citizens of the United States desiring homes and willing to comply with the law's requirements, some of which are pretty hard upon a poor man, or desiring to prospect upon the public domain for gold, or silver, or lead, or copper, or for phosphates, or for oil and gas, is not only regarded with suspicion, but is treated as such from the inception to the end of his claim. I do not mean to say that that is universally true; I do not mean to say that the policy has been the outgrowth of the action of men who really believe, or would for a moment confess that that is so. I have reference to the operation of the system which has been the outgrowth of these conditions.

My State is being punished, and the good citizens of my State are being punished, as are those of the other arid States of the Union, for sins which were committed by others, which they denounced quite as severely as anyone, which they denounced before anyone else did, to which they called the attention of the Government time after time. These men are unfortunately those who suffer the consequences of that condition. The Government says to citizens of my State: "If you discover oil, or gas, or phosphates anywhere, we will reserve it." I once heard a story, when I was a boy, of a woman who was always looking out for burglars. One night she awakened her husband, saying: "There is a burglar in the house." "All right," the old man said, "let him hunt, and if he finds anything we will get up and take it away from him." [Laughter.] In a way, such is the Government's policy now with reference to its mineral domain. Let the citizen hunt, and, if he finds anything, then it arouses itself and takes it away from him.

Mr. President, what sort of an inducement does such a policy hold out to the man of adventure? This country was settled and populated by those following in the wake of men of adventure. The first man to cross the plains and to brave the dangers of an inhospitable climate, and of the more inhospitable savage, who subjected himself to thirst and to the hazard of disease, who separated himself from all the elements of civilization and penetrated those solitudes, was drawn there by the lure of gold and silver, and because he knew that if he discovered either a generous Government would recognize his possession of it and reward him accordingly. The tide of humanity now occupying that country followed the trail which the pioneer for gold and silver blazed across the desert. They devoted themselves to the cultivation of the earth; they anchored themselves to the soil; and with the prospector they built up those magnificent communities now covering the continent from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean.

I ask you, Mr. President, what would have been the fate of that section if the policy of which this bill is a good illustration had been enforced at that time? Would the prospector have penetrated the wilds of the Rocky Mountains in his search for gold if, as soon as it was known that he had discovered it, he had been sure that the Government would withdraw it from location? Would these splendid reservoirs of oil, which have been opened up in Wyoming and in California, and earlier than that period in my own State and in other States upon the public domain, have been revealed if such a policy had been proclaimed years ago?

I do not know, Mr. President [Mr. HUSTING in the chair], whether you have been in that section of California where these new oil reservoirs have been discovered. It is literally a desert country; a country not designed for human habitation; a country lying under the interdict of drought; a country far removed from every comfort of civilization, a country good only for the stores of wealth that lie beneath its scarred and barren and repulsive surface.

The sufferings which those men endured and the hazards which they encountered in their discovery of oil are, to my mind, but poor compensation for the benefits which they have conferred upon this Nation through the additions which they have been able to make to its stores of material wealth; but a generous Government, harking back to the things that transpired during the last century and to offenses committed by others, has said, "You can not have title to these properties; they are reserved under the principle of conservation; they are withdrawn from private ownership." We will lease some of them, provided laws are passed for that purpose. Though some of those wells are running, and all of them must be cared for, prosperity lags, and honest men are going to wreck and ruin through a policy which is not only mistaken but cruel.

Now, Mr. President, with regard to the immediate subject of this bill, every water power in my State which is still undeveloped, every water power in the great and magnificent State of Montana which is now undeveloped, can and should be developed under the laws of our respective Commonwealths, without doing injustice to anyone, without in any wise militating against that abhorrence of monopoly, which is the common sentiment of the people of the United States. Indeed, Mr. President, these monopolistic conditions are emphasized by our inability to develop these natural resources and the consequent competition that might ensue.

The great State of Montana has a magnificent public-utilities commission; the State of Colorado has one equally as good, and so have the other arid States. They are composed of men able and willing to protect the public interests, and to so regulate compensation as to relieve the people from the burdens of extortion. Under what principle, therefore, can it be said that the people who have created these Commonwealths, whose loyalty to the Government of the United States is as active and as constant and as sincere as that of the people of any other section, whose interests and the interests of whose children are identified and wrapped up in the prosperity and the growth of those great Commonwealths—upon what principle, Mr. President, can it be said that these people can not be trusted to do their own development, that they must be kept in a state of tutelage and guardianship by the National Government situated 3,000 miles away and administering its laws through its local tentacles in the shape of representatives upon the ground?

I think, Mr. President, that this bill is radically and fundamentally wrong. The only doubt I have upon the subject lies in the fact that my distinguished friend from Montana [Mr. WALSH] believes to the contrary. I have such a high opinion of the Senator as a statesman, as a lawyer, as a citizen, and as a friend that I must necessarily believe that there may be some good in this bill or it would be impossible that it should receive his loyal support; but, Mr. President, I am reminded that there was a time when the Senator and myself were more nearly together upon this subject than we seem to be at present. His views have been modified, for the best of reasons unquestionably, but I must be pardoned if I walk in the old paths and stand by the ancient ways. I certainly hope this bill will not become a law.

APPENDIX.

EMINENT DOMAIN—RIGHTS OF WAY OVER LANDS OF UNITED STATES OR STATE.

[Senate bill No. 334, by Senator Williams.]

An act relating to the appropriation of land for corporate and public purposes, to the procedure for appropriation of land and rights in land belonging to the United States, the State of Colorado, or any other State or sovereignty, and to actions by property owners against such corporations in possession.

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Colorado:

SECTION 1. Whenever any corporation authorized to appropriate for a public use, by the exercise of the right of eminent domain, lands, right of way, or other right or easement in lands, requires, needs, or desires to appropriate lands or right of way or other right of easement in lands which belong to the United States, the State of Colorado, or any other State or sovereignty, such corporation, for the purpose of having such lands, right of way, or other right of easement appropriated to such use, and for determining the compensation to be paid to such owner therefor, may present a petition to any court of record in the county or counties in which such lands or any part thereof are located, describing the desired property, giving the name of the owner thereof, and stating by whom and for what purpose it is proposed to be appropriated, and that it is needed and required by the petitioner for the public use to which it is proposed to devote the same, and praying that such court appropriate such property to its use and determine the compensation to be paid to the owner therefor.

SEC. 2. Such court shall fix a time for the first hearing upon said petition, and notice directed to such owner of the filing of the petition and its objects and containing a description of the property and of the time and place of the first hearing shall be published by such corporation in one or more newspapers of general circulation in the State of Colorado once a week for six weeks prior to the time set for the first hearing, and at least two weeks before the time set for the first hearing a copy of said notice shall be served on any party who shall be in actual possession of the land, and in case the State is the owner, on the secretary of state, and in case the United States is the owner, on the United States attorney for the district in which the land or any part thereof is situated. The copy of such notice shall be deemed to have been sufficiently served if delivered during the usual hours of business at the residence of the party in possession or at the office of the secretary of state or the United States attorney, as the case may be.

SEC. 3. Upon proof being filed of the publication of such notice and of such personal service where required, the court, at the time and place therein fixed, or to which the hearing may be adjourned, shall proceed to hear the allegations and proofs of all persons interested touching the matters to it committed, regulating the order of proof as it may deem best. The testimony taken by it shall be under oath. The court shall determine the truth of the matters alleged and set forth in the petition and also the compensation to be paid to such owner for the lands, right of way, or other right or easement in lands to be appropriated; but in the event that the petitioner shall have theretofore taken possession of such lands, right of way, or other right or easement in lands, the value thereof shall be determined without considering the value of any improvements that may have been constructed by such corporation and as of the date when such corporation took possession; and the court shall file among its records its findings in writing and shall give notice to the petitioner that its findings have been filed. The petitioner shall cause a notice to be published in one or more newspapers of general circulation in the State of Colorado once a week for two weeks setting forth that the findings of the court have been filed and stating the amount of the compensation fixed by the court, and if the owner shall have appeared in said proceeding by attorney a copy of said notice shall be served prior to the last publication of said notice upon the attorney so appearing.

SEC. 4. In case no appeal, as hereinafter provided, is taken within 30 days after the last publication of notice that the findings of the court have been filed, the court, upon the payment by the petitioner to the clerk of such court, of the compensation fixed by the court, shall, upon motion of the petitioner, enter an order appropriating the lands, right of way, or other right or easement in lands, as the case may be, to the petitioner, and thereafter the same shall be the property of the petitioner and a certified copy of the order may be filed for record with the county clerk and recorder of the county in which such lands, right of way, or other right of easement in lands are located, and such record shall be notice, and a certified copy of such record shall be evidence of the title and rights of the petitioner as therein set forth. The clerk of said court shall notify the owner of the property of the payment of the compensation fixed by the court and shall pay the same to such owner on demand.

SEC. 5. Upon the payment into court of the compensation assessed the court shall give judgment appropriating the lands, right of way, or other right or easement in lands, as the case may be, to the petitioner, and thereafter the same shall be the property of the petitioner. Either party to the action may sue out a writ of error from the judgment therein in like manner and with like effect as in ordinary condemnation cases, but such writ of error shall not stay the proceedings so as to prevent the petitioner from taking such lands into its possession and using them for the purposes of the petitioner or from proceeding to exercise the right of way or other right or easement appropriated.

Approved April 23, 1915.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to announce that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is absent on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. LEWIS. I announce the absence of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], who has been called out of the Chamber on official business.

Mr. PITTMAN. I desire to announce that the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] has been called to one of the departments on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, it was my opinion that the somewhat elaborate presentation of the principal features of this bill by my colleague [Mr. MYERS] when it was last before the Senate for consideration would render it unnecessary to consume any of the time of the Senate in discussing the bill as a whole, and it had accordingly been my purpose to reserve whatever I had to say for such occasions as might arise in connection with the presentation of amendments to the bill. However, the wide range the discussion to which we have just listened has taken has led me to the conclusion that it would be helpful to those of the Senators who have endeavored to inform themselves as to this bill if a brief statement, at least, were made concerning what the bill is about and what it is intended to accomplish. I accordingly determined this morning and gave notice that at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Colorado I would address the Senate for 30 minutes. I hope to conclude within that time, and I do not think it will take me more than 40 minutes at the outside.

The discussion of this bill by the Senator from Colorado—for whom I have the very warmest affection and the very highest regard—has, if I may be justified in so saying, taken on the aspect of a general criticism of the whole administration of the public-land laws as well as of many of those laws. I am going to endeavor to direct the attention of the Senate in what I shall say to this particular bill, leaving the other things of which we justly complain in the West to be taken up and disposed of and solved in their regular order.

I sent to the desk this morning extracts from recent newspapers showing how deeply concerned some of the leading nations of Europe are to-day over the development and utilization of their water-power resources. These two articles referred to the activities of the Kingdom of Italy and the Republic of France. But, of course, it is well known that the greatest water-power development of Europe within recent years has occurred within the Scandinavian countries and in Germany. I shall show you a little later on how development has been arrested in this country.

It is not necessary, I am sure, for me to say anything more than I have heretofore said to the Senate to excite your interest in this profoundly important legislation. The President of the United States, upon taking office in the year 1913, called the attention of the Congress to this subject in a message which he delivered in accordance with the duty imposed upon him by the Constitution. In his annual message delivered at the convening of Congress on December 2, 1913, after pointing out the necessity of legislation looking to the development of Alaska and the construction of a railroad in that Territory, he said:

> But the construction of railways is only the first step; is only thrusting in the key to the storehouse and throwing back the lock and opening the door. How the tempting resources of the country are to be exploited is another matter, to which I shall take the liberty of from time to time calling your attention, for it is a policy which must be worked out by well-considered stages, not upon theory, but upon lines of practical expediency. It is part of our general problem of conservation. We have a freer hand in working out the problem in Alaska than in the States of the Union; and yet the principle and object are the same wherever we touch it. We must use the resources of the country, not lock them up. There need be no conflict or jealousy as between State and Federal authorities, for there can be no essential difference of purpose between them. The resources in question must be used, but not destroyed or wasted; used, but not monopolized upon any narrow idea of individual rights as against the abiding interests of communities. That a policy can be worked out by conference and concession which will release these resources and yet not jeopardize or dissipate them, I for one have no doubt; and it can be done on lines of regulation which need be no less acceptable to the people and governments of the States concerned than to the people and Government of the Nation at large, whose heritage these resources are. We must bend our counsels to this end. A common purpose ought to make agreement easy.

And so, Mr. President, I am very confident that if we all have an earnest desire, as we all ought to have, to open up these resources, we shall find some way to do it, at least if we shall yield our own individual ideas concerning academic principles and consider the bill as a great business proposition.

Let me explain the conditions to the Senate. It is only within the last 10 or 15 years that the people of the United States have come to understand that these great power sites upon the public domain are of enormous value. Why, prior to that time, Mr. President, nobody paid any attention to them. All of the public-land laws were applicable to them. A man might take a homestead which would embrace ground upon which eventually a great water power would be developed.

These lands might be appropriated and title to them secured through the operation of any of the public-land laws. Many of them were taken under the mineral laws—not dishonestly, at all, but in the immediate neighborhood mineral was found and the bounds and areas of the grant were extended over the lands which had value as a power site. They were open to appropriation under all forms of scrip—forest-reserve scrip, Valentine scrip, Sioux half-breed scrip, agricultural college scrip. Any of the laws authorized and permitted one to go out and appropriate one of these exceedingly valuable properties. But, as I say, some 10 or 15 years ago it was recognized that that was an unwise, an injudicious, and an improvident disposition of lands of that character, and accordingly they were all withdrawn from all forms of entry, looking to the enactment by Congress of some legislation for their disposition appropriate to their character, considering the use to which they could most profitably be put.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator state whether, during the periods that they were open for entry or purchase under the various laws of the United States, any of these water-power sites went into private hands?

Mr. WALSH. Why, Mr. President, there is more developed water power per capita in the State of Montana than in any other State in the Union, and it has all been developed upon such lands which have thus passed into private ownership. The great development at Great Falls, 90,000 horsepower, is upon lands that passed out of the hands of the General Government years ago and went into the hands of private holders. The present owners purchased the land from the owners and developed the water power.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. May I ask the Senator if the same statement could not be applied to the property of the great Anaconda Copper Mining Co.? Did not the Government sell that property for $5 an acre—property worth hundreds and hundreds of millions?

Mr. WALSH. Undoubtedly.

Mr. THOMAS. Would the Senator think that that, also, could have been reclaimed?

Mr. WALSH. I do not think anything of the kind. The two stand upon an entirely different footing, as I shall endeavor to show presently. I shall show to the Senate that the only just view to take of these great water-power sites is that they are in the nature of public utilities, and are to be disposed of as franchises for public utilities are disposed of, and not as private lands.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the junior Senator from Colorado?

Mr. WALSH. I trust the Senator will allow me to go on, because I have promised to quit in 40 minutes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I just want to ask a question right there.

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Is it not a fact that the leader of this great conservation movement has said time and again that it is his purpose to have all of the mineral lands in the United States subject to withdrawal and subject to a leasing system by the National Government?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, it does not make one bit of difference to me what the great leader of the conservation movement in the United States has said. He does not furnish me either brains or ideas. I take all responsibility myself for any ideas that I express here. I will say, however, in answer to the Senator, that I have followed this subject since it began to be agitated in the public press and in public gatherings, and I never heard the idea suggested by anybody that mineral lands valuable for the metallic contents of ores within them should ever be leased. That, I dare say, will answer the Senator's question.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. Is it not a fact that there is now upon the calendar a bill authorizing the leasing of metalliferous mineral lands upon Indian reservations?

Mr. WALSH. There is.

Mr. SMOOT. Does not the Senator believe that that is simply a first step to having it extended to the general public lands?

Mr. WALSH. I do not. I do not believe anything of the kind.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, from what has occurred in the last four or five years, and from what I have heard a great many public men say in their utterances, that is what will take place before very long, if they have their way.

Mr. WALSH. I would not like to be diverted now, Senators, from the discussion of the water-power legislation to the discussion of legislation looking to the disposition of the mineral lands. We have a bill here on that subject coming on next. I am very much responsible for it being here. I shall be pleased to talk about that with you when it is before us for consideration. Let us talk about water power now for a while.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But, Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, he says that he has never heard of anybody even suggesting that the mineral lands should be subject to a leasing system. I will ask the Senator if he is not a member of the Indian Affairs Committee and if that committee has not reported a bill which says:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered, under general regulations to be fixed by him and under such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, not inconsistent with the terms of this act, to lease to citizens of the United States or to any association of such persons or to any corporation organized under the laws of the United States or of any State or Territory thereof, any part of the unallotted lands within any Indian reservation heretofore withdrawn from entry under the mining laws for the purpose of mining for deposits of gold, silver, copper, and other valuable metalliferous minerals, which leases shall be irrevocable, except as herein provided, but which may be declared null and void upon breach of any of their terms.

Does not the Senator realize that there are of those Indian lands reserved now in the State of Arizona 19,551,045 acres, in California 436,000 acres, in Colorado 375,000 acres, in Idaho 55,000 acres, in Nevada 4,313,000 acres, in New Mexico 689,000 acres, in Oregon 1,889,000 acres, in Utah 306,000 acres, in Washington 3,150,000 acres, and in Wyoming 608,000 acres? And does not the Senator realize that the policy of opening Indian reservations heretofore has been for the purpose of entry under the system which he says is the only system which should be pursued by the Government with respect to mineral lands?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I regret that the Senator felt that I yielded to him for the purpose of making a speech.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have asked the Senator a question.

Mr. WALSH. I shall answer the Senator. I shall be very glad, in the course of what I have to say, to answer any questions that may be addressed to me by any Senator, in order to make my position more clear and to give information; but I trust now that I shall not be asked to get away from the water-power problem and talk about Indian lands or the sale of Indian lands.

I was asked by the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] what I would say about the great Anaconda mine. I answered him quite frankly. Senators will understand that the lands upon Indian reservations to which this bill relates are not subject to entry in any way at all, mineral or nonmineral. One can not enter there to acquire any right whatever to the lands which are set apart for the exclusive use of the Indians. If one were to go within an Indian reservation for any such purpose, the Indian police would promptly evict him.

The senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] asked me if I wanted to apply the leasing system to mineral lands containing minerals like gold, silver, copper, lead, and so forth. I answered him that I did not; and I never heard anybody—the head of the conservation movement or anybody else—say that it ought to be done.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator will pardon me just a minute, there is no possibility now of working mineral lands within any reservation under any law; but a bill has been introduced under which the commissioner is authorized to allow one to locate a claim within an Indian reservation and to work it under a lease if he cares to, a concession to the prospector and miner never hitherto enjoyed.

Mr. THOMAS. I beg the Senator's pardon for again interrupting him. The purpose of my question was merely to ascertain whether, in the opinion of the Senator, the original cost of the land transferred from the Government of the United States was an argument against that sort of policy; and if so, whether he would apply it to mining land as well as reserves? If I conveyed the impression that I was asking whether the Senator would apply the leasing system, I was unfortunate in my expression.

Mr. WALSH. That was the way I understood the Senator. I was asked by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] whether any development had gone on upon these lands which had thus passed into private ownership, and I answered him that all the development in our State, 250,000 horsepower—a greater horsepower per capita than in any other State in the Union—has been upon these lands which have thus passed into private ownership.

Mr. THOMAS. Has it not been a benefit to the State?

Mr. WALSH. I am not going to argue that matter now at all. I am not going to dispute that it has been a benefit to the State. I am simply stating the fact. Mr. President, the question before us is as to whether we shall cancel all these withdrawals and allow these great, valuable water-power sites to be appropriated in the future as they have been in the past under the general laws of the United States, or whether we shall have some law specially applicable to lands of that particular character. They are all withdrawn now.

It should be stated, Mr. President, that, although these lands were withdrawn, an act of Congress passed in 1901, when it began to be appreciated that the problem we are facing required some attention, under the provisions of which the Secretary of the Interior was authorized to grant to one a permit by which he could go upon the public lands and there develop a water-power site. That law, however, contained a clause which was to the effect that the Secretary of the Interior might at any time revoke the permit which was granted by him. In the year 1909 a large number of these permits having been theretofore granted, the Secretary undertook to exercise the power which apparently had been granted to him by the act and recalled a large number of such permits, under some of which no little development work had been done, and under not a few of which large expenditures had been made. Since that time, it being appreciated that the Secretary had the power to revoke such permits, and would revoke them whenever he felt that he ought to do so, the issuance of permits under the act of 1901 has, speaking in a large way, ceased. So that we are in this situation: Here are these wonderful power sites, capable of producing under proper development something like twenty-eight to thirty million horsepower, and there is no law whatever under which they can be appropriated or utilized for the benefit of mankind; and so the necessity rests up the Congress of the United States to legislate upon the subject.

Mr. President, I do not stand sponsor for any bill here. I do not stand sponsor even for the bill which came from the House. I do not stand sponsor by any means for many of these amendments which have been reported by the Senate Committee on Public Lands. But I am here pleading with the Senate of the United States to take this matter into prayerful consideration, and to work out some bill that will throw these great properties open to the public for development upon terms that will be fair and just to anyone who is willing to put his money into such an enterprise. A gentleman fully advised about this matter told me the other day that he had just come from the city of New York and was there informed that there are three hundred millions of dollars ready to go into water-power development in this country.

Mr. President, I referred here this morning to the great power site of the Big Horn Canyon. The Big Horn River rises in the State of Wyoming and flows northward into my State. The canyon is about 50 miles long, affording storage so extensive and full sufficient to make the site capable of producing, as my recollection is, something like 194,000 horsepower with a dam no higher than the dam which the Republic of France is now erecting in the Alps to supply power to the city of Paris. The turbulent waters of the Big Horn rush through this great canyon unrestrained. Bear in mind, Mr. President, that we are now operating 400 miles of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul road, one of the transcontinental lines, by electricity. The Great Northern Railroad Co. is preparing to electrify its road; and when it does there is not a transcontinental line that can stay in business without electrifying. The demand for the power is there.

Why, Mr. President, I told you that we have already 250,000 developed horsepower in the State of Montana, a further development of 35,000 horsepower is now going on, and all has already been sold.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, has the Senator any estimate of the yield in rental under this lease system?

Mr. WALSH. The Milwaukee road pays about $20 per horsepower.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I mean, what yield would come to the United States Treasury?

Mr. WALSH. I am going to canvass that subject a little later on.

Mr. President, there is another thing. You will bear in mind now that our development, say, in the State of Montana, as in the adjacent States, has practically gone to the limit. We have utilized nearly all of the lands valuable as great power sites that have passed into private ownership. We can not go forward at all without utilizing these lands being a part of the public domain. The Government owns the land on one or both sides of the stream from the flow of which power may be generated. No one may build a dam there without the consent of the Government of the United States, which owns the adjacent land. Thus, Mr. President, it results that those who have already acquired the sites which have passed into private ownership have a monopoly of the water power. So it is in other sections of the country. The other bill pending here, dealing with another aspect of the same question, known as the Shields bill—many features of which, you will recall, I fought with some pertinacity—is intended to relieve a similar situation. That contemplates the opening up of other power sites upon the navigable streams of the country, though no public lands are involved. It, too, is hung up, and thus a monopoly is enjoyed by those companies which got in at the time grants were more freely given.

Mr. President, legislation is necessary.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, before the Senator leaves that subject may I ask him a question?

Mr. WALSH. I shall be glad to answer the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. In the report made by the Secretary of Agriculture, is it not stated that at the present time there is an overproduction of electric power in the Western States?

Mr. WALSH. Oh, yes.

Mr. SMOOT. And that the real demand is for more markets rather than for more power?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I trust the Senator will not trouble himself very much about that. Maybe he does not want any power development in Utah. Maybe they have all the power development in Utah that that State can utilize. The situation in Montana is quite the contrary. My information is that money is ready to go into power development in the State of Utah and that a market can be found for more energy there. Why should we defer because some subordinate in some bureau here in Washington asserts that there has been overdevelopment? I tell you there is nothing to it. Why, Mr. President, there is the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. I will ask him if the needs of his State are met by the power sites that have been developed in Idaho?

Mr. BORAH. Oh, no; no, indeed.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no other Western State that has developed all the water powers. Nobody has made that statement.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, if legislation is necessary, what are the principles, please, upon which that legislation should rest? That is the question that addresses itself as a practical proposition to the Senate at this time.

There are two schools of thought about that matter. One school of thought is that these power sites ought to be granted away in perpetuity, alienated in fee. The other school of thought says: "No; that is not right. They should be leased for a limited period, and after that limited period they should come back to the Government."

Now, you have heard a lot about the leasing system and about the landlord system and about absentee landlordism, as if it were proposed that every man who has a little home, a little farm, should pay rent to the Government for it. The history of all ages demonstrates, all writers on economy agree, every man's experience teaches him that the man who cultivates the soil ought to own what he tills, and I have never heard the contention advanced anywhere that any agricultural lands owned by the Government should pass from it by any title except a fee-simple title.

It is so as to the home of a man in the city or town. We have a law by which, when people go out on the public domain and gather themselves into communities around a mine, or at a center of trade, they may take 640 acres as a town site, and every man is entitled to the little piece of ground upon which he builds his house, and he gets title to it in fee. No one wants to disturb that. But, Mr. President, people do not build their homes upon water-power sites nor on top of coal mines. So when we discuss water-power sites or the disposition of oil lands or coal lands we ought not to be confusing by talking about a man paying rent to an absentee landlord for his little home or for his farm.

The bill to which attention has been called, referred to as the Lever bill, which it might be supposed from the statement of the Senator who adverted to it in the course of his remarks, was to institute a system under which every one hereafter would hold whatever land he got from the Government by a lease rather than by a title in fee, even that very bill was framed by people who profess the greatest attachment to the interest of the homesteader, who whenever he got any land under it at all got a title in fee. It simply provided that instead of allowing the people of the West, as they have done from time immemorial, to run their cattle without charge over the public domain, certain areas should be classified and leased for grazing purposes, the homesteader having the right at all times to go within the leased area, acquire the land he settled upon, and get title to it. We all objected to it simply because we felt that the homesteader would be deterred from appropriating any part of the area set off to a cattleman under his lease. It had no features of a bill such as was referred to, under which agricultural lands were to be held indefinitely by the Government and disposed of only by lease.

But, Mr. President, getting back to the question as to whether these power sites shall be granted away in fee or leased for limited periods, those who have given the most earnest thought to this subject, with a sincere desire to solve the problem, have reached the conclusion that these lands should be treated exactly as we treat franchises which are granted by a city; that we ought to grant a right to occupy them for a limited period, something in the nature of a franchise, not grant them away in fee. A man applies for liberty to run a street car line in a certain city. Formerly improvident grants were made of the privilege to run a street car line in a city in perpetuity. But we have reached the conclusion that that is not a wise policy, and now we give a man a franchise or a license to run his street car line in a city for a limited period, 20 years, 30 years, 40 years, 50 years, and at the end of that time the streets come back to the city unencumbered by any burden.

So, Mr. President, it is contended that we should do with reference to these power sites. We should give the man who wants to develop and operate a power site the privilege of occupying the ground for a period of years—50 years, this bill stipulates—and at the end of that time his right to occupy the land should cease, leaving to our children and our grandchildren to deal with the sites as seems best to them in view of the conditions which will confront them at that remote period. We ought not to turn these properties potentially so valuable over in our time to private appropriators who with their successors should enjoy the advantages springing from them throughout all time.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I do not desire to break into the very able argument which the Senator is making, but the two schools of thought of which the Senator speaks are not the only schools of thought with regard to this matter. There are some of us who do not desire that these power sites shall be turned over to private individuals indefinitely, but who nevertheless do not desire to have them operated by a foreign government, as it were, that is, foreign to our State. If they could be turned over to the State to be operated and used as we use other franchises within the State, or if they could be turned over to the State to be owned and operated by the State, operated as public property of the State, it would present an entirely different question. I would like to see these natural monopolies owned and operated by and for the public.

Mr. WALSH. Exactly. I propose to reach that phase directly. Of course everybody understands the position taken by the Senator from Colorado. He wants you to turn these things over to the State, to pass a simple law to the effect that all power sites on the public domain are hereby granted to the State in which the same are located.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS. I think that, perhaps, would be the better way of disposing of the matter, but I would be more than satisfied with the grant of the power sites to the States, subject to restrictions with regard to the business, which would require a forfeiture in the event the restrictions were not observed; or what would suit me still better would be a grant to the States upon condition that they be developed by the States and utilized by the States for the benefit of their inhabitants.

Mr. WALSH. I propose to meet that condition. I did not intend to speak about that now, but at the proper time I shall propose an amendment to the bill which reads as follows:

> The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to grant, in the name of the United States, to any State, county, or municipality or other political subdivision of a State any tract or tracts of public land such as is defined in section 1 of this act, not to exceed 160 acres in one body, valuable chiefly because capable of being utilized in the generation or transmission of hydroelectric power, upon condition that such State, county, municipality, or other political subdivision shall, with all reasonable diligence, develop and utilize continuously such tract or tracts for the purpose for which they are so valuable. The tract or tracts so granted shall be inalienable and the right of the grantee shall terminate upon failure to comply with the conditions of the grant.

There is no use talking about turning the power sites over to the States, letting each State dispose of those within its bounds as it sees fit, but I believe there is a sentiment here which will justify us in enacting a law granting to every State that wants to develop a water-power site the right to do so; which will permit every irrigation district that desires to develop a water-power site for the service of the people comprising it to do so; which will give every city that wants to develop water-power sites for the purpose of supplying its inhabitants with electricity an opportunity to do so. We will reach that phase of the question directly, and I shall ask Senators who vaguely propose such a course frankly to state, when I reach that part of my argument, whether they think there is a chance on earth to secure the enactment of a law under which power sites on the public domain shall be turned over to the States. I prefer to direct the thought of the Senate to something practical, to urge consideration for something we can get through during the present generation.

Mr. President, I resume the question, shall we grant in perpetuity, shall we alienate these lands in fee, or shall we permit their occupancy for a limited period, the lands then to come back to the General Government for such disposition as the wisdom of future ages may suggest? I believe that if we should test out the sense of the Senate on that proposition there would be found little division of opinion about the matter.

The distinguished Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] has a substitute which he has offered to this bill by which it is provided that these lands shall be appraised and sold at the actual value of the same to anybody who wants to buy. When that substitute comes up I shall give you my reasons for opposing it. I shall not take the time now to do it.

I assume now, Mr. President, for the purpose of the argument, that we are going to agree that the best way is to lease these lands for a limited period and not alienate them in fee, not to give grants in perpetuity of these great rights. I assume that will be the determination of the Senate, because it did just exactly that thing with reference to the navigable waters bill and all bills that have in recent years been presented to the Senate dealing with the general subject and which have received the serious consideration of any of its committees embodied the same idea. In past times Congress again and again passed acts granting the perpetual right to occupy a navigable stream with a dam for the purpose of developing power. The Keokuk Dam was constructed under such a grant, and for all time it will have the right to occupy the bed of the Mississippi River. Congress has surrendered to the original grantees of the franchise and their assigns, so far as under the Constitution it can do so, the privilege of utilizing the flow of the river at that site. So the first development in my State, the Canyon Ferry development, was made under a grant of a perpetual right. That act was passed by Congress in the year 1890. We have, however, changed our minds about that policy, and when the Shields bill was under consideration not a word was heard in support of the idea that that feature of the bill by which the rights of the permittee ceased at the end of 50 years ought to be taken out and that a provision for a grant in perpetuity should be substituted. Everybody agreed that the license ought to be for not more than 50 years, and that at the expiration of that time the right should come back to the Government and be subject to such disposition as it might then be thought wise to make. So I assume that the Senate, in whatever form the question comes before it, will reach the conclusion that a grant ought not to be in perpetuity, but for a limited period.

If that is the case, Mr. President, let me inquire next. What are the particular matters of difference in the minds of those who have considered the question concerning the lines the legislation ought to take?

I will say, Mr. President, that exactly the same cleavage is found there. Those who are really desirous that the grant should be in perpetuity want to make the terms just as light as possible to the permittee and desire that it should be just as hard as possible for the Government to take over the property at the end of the 50-year period. On the other hand, there are those who want to make the charge and conditions burdensome meanwhile, and make it relatively easy to take over the property at the end of that period.

Let me speak about that for just a few minutes. In the first place, understand the controversy hinges about these two questions: First, Shall there be a charge made during the life of the lease or shall there be no charge? Second, Should the property taken over be paid for at what is then the fair value of the property, including the unearned increment, or should the right be reserved to take it over at what it actually cost the permittee to construct it? You will understand that at the end of the 50 years, if the Government takes over the land on which the permittee has constructed his dam, it will be necessary to take over as well the power house and its site and the transmission lines. Various industries and manufacturing establishments of one kind and another, dependent upon the plant for power, must be kept supplied. If the Government should take over the leased land it leased, he can not operate his plant, and in order to supply those who are dependent upon it with power it will become necessary for the Government to take over the adjacent and dependent property in order that it or some one authorized by it may carry on the business.

Then the question arises, What should the Government pay for the property which it thus takes over? The bill provides that the "fair value" shall be paid. During the life of the lease it provides that there shall be a charge not to exceed 25 cents per horsepower per annum. I can not agree with either of those ideas.

It is said, Mr. President, that the State owns the waters of the streams and that if the Federal Government makes any charge whatever based on the energy generated it is really making a charge for the use of something that does not belong to the Government of the United States at all, and by so doing infringes upon the rights and confiscates the property of the State.

An idea seemed to prevail in the minds of some Senators that I am a champion of the view and believe that the waters in the streams flowing over the public lands belong to the Government of the United States. As I have said heretofore, I had the honor of arguing that question before one of the great tribunals of the country even before I came to the Senate, and I argued then and now believe that the waters of the streams upon the public lands belong to the States if ownership can be predicated therein either by the Government or by the States.

But here is the situation. The Government owns the land upon one side of a stream or upon both at a point therein where a power development is possible. No one can build a dam across that stream without the permission of the Government of the United States to occupy the land on either side. The Government of the United States may say to the public, "We will let anyone build a dam across there resting upon such land upon terms which we prescribe. One may build a dam across there upon condition that he pays 25 cents, 50 cents, 75 cents, a dollar, or whatever price may be fixed for each horsepower he may generate through his occupancy of our land. We are not charging for the use of the water; we are making our own terms for the occupation of Government land."

So, Mr. President, this bill is entirely consistent with the idea that the State owns the water of the stream.

Now, bear in mind that every Western State claiming to own the waters of the streams says to everyone, "Come along, it is all yours; take it wherever you find it; we will not ask you a penny for it; just take it out and turn it to some beneficial use, and you can have it without charge upon our part." But the Government of the United States is disposing of the adjacent land, and it says—at least, I should like to have it say by this bill—"You may occupy that land by paying just such a figure as the Secretary of the Interior may agree upon with you for the privilege, an annual royalty or rental, dependent upon the use you put it to, to be figured upon a basis of the power you develop and sell or utilize."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. I do not think the Senator from Montana and the other western Senators, or any Senator perhaps, who has given consideration to the subject here entertains any different views with reference to the law of this matter, but does not the Senator concede that the practical effect is the same as if the United States owned the water also, because by reason of its ownership of the land and its determination not to permit anyone to occupy that land, except upon such terms as it proposes, the practical result is that it is just the same as if it owned the water?

Mr. WALSH. It works out the same way.

Mr. BORAH. It works out the same way, and therefore upon the question of law there is no difference of opinion; it is purely a question of policy upon which there is a difference of opinion.

Mr. WALSH. Certainly; it is purely a matter of policy. The disquisitions to which we have listened on the ownership of the waters in the State are all quite beside the question. There is no legal principle in the way of the enactment of this bill.

The Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] is the author of a voluminous minority report, concurred in by several Senators, adverted to by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] in the course of his remarks, in which he laboriously and undoubtedly conclusively demonstrates that the States own the water of the streams. The proposition is conceded. Nobody disputes it at all—at least not in this body.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly; I think it all resolves itself into a question of policy.

Mr. WALSH. Certainly; that is all there is to it.

Mr. BORAH. The very illustration the Senator gives accentuates one of the objections some of us have to this proposition; that is, that when you admit the National Government into local concerns the National Government dominates and directs and controls local matters just the same as if it had a legal right to do so. That is one of the great objections to having the National Government operate in the local field at all.

I would not differ from the Senator from Montana very much if the municipality, the county, or the State was operating instead of the National Government, but the minute you admit the National Government into the local field it dominates the entire situation as if it had the constitutional right to do so.

Mr. WALSH. I have no capacity to consider these questions except as they address themselves to me as features of a business proposition. Senators talk about the domination of one or the other government and the admission of national activities into the field of State legislation. Let us take this up as a business proposition. Here is a man in New York who has the money to invest in a power development in the State of Idaho. How is he concerned about whether the National Government dominates or the State government? He comes to the Federal Government to secure a permit, and it says, "We will lease you this land on these terms." He says, "All right; that is perfectly satisfactory to me; I will make that agreement with you." Let me inquire of the Senator why he wants to get in the way of arrangements of that kind, and how the rights or the interests of his State or of any of its people are prejudiced by it?

Mr. BORAH. I will tell the Senator precisely. I am not at all concerned about the gentleman from New York, who wants to get a lease; I am concerned about the effect and operation of this entire system upon the people who live not in New York but live in the State of Idaho, whose affairs will be dominated and controlled at a distance of 3,000 miles from their residence. That is what concerns me.

Mr. WALSH. Now, let us consider that as a practical proposition. Let us understand now how and in what way it affects the people of Idaho and of Montana, because, of course, development in one State will be utilized in both. Let us understand now what there is about this that the Senator fears for the people of Idaho. They get a power development, and they, through their public-utilities commission, regulate the price that the developing company can charge, and all there is to it, Mr. President, is that in determining the charge the commission will have to take into consideration, as a matter of course, whatever royalty the company pays to the Federal Government. What is it, I ask, that ought to induce the people of Idaho to set their faces against power development in that State under such conditions?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator will pardon me just one moment. Under a leasing system the annual rental or royalty must be figured as a fixed charge to be met out of revenues. If the property was bought and a title in fee acquired, a corresponding amount must be awarded as a return on the investment in the land. The Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] has proposed a substitute bill directing the sale of the power sites at the best price obtainable. Under such a system a utility commission must authorize charges which will return interest on the purchase price of the land, as under the leasing system the annual rental charge must be taken care of.

Now I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I merely wish to suggest, in the event the gentleman from New York is ready to develop the water power of Idaho, provided this bill is passed, he is not placed under the jurisdiction of the Public Utility Commission of Idaho if the energy goes into Montana or Utah, but it at once passes under the domination, under this bill, of the Interstate Commerce Commission, 3,000 miles away.

Mr. WALSH. Certainly the Senator from Colorado would not have it any other way.

Mr. THOMAS. Indeed I would have it some other way.

Mr. WALSH. All right, I can not help that. We are developing power to-day at Thompson Falls and carrying it over into the State of Idaho. Of course, that is a detail of this bill. I am sorry to be diverted from the general argument. It is a detail of this bill; but what would the Senator want done in such a case? Suppose the Idaho commission fixes the charge at which the power is to be supplied in the State of Idaho at a very low price, and in the State of Montana it is fixed, upon investigation, at a higher figure, the same power company supplying both States, anyone who has a choice in the matter will go over into the State of Idaho to carry on his enterprise. In exactly the same way, if we make it lower in the State of Montana, we will get the business. So there will be warfare between the commissions in the two States. The only way controversies of that character can be settled or avoided is to have the charges regulated by Federal authority, should one project extend into two or more States. But, as I said, that is a detail of the bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VARDAMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me ask the Senator if the control of the whole matter, as far as the power site and development of water is concerned, was in the hands of the State where the power site and water are situated, would that prevent the Interstate Commerce Commission from dealing with the charges for power when it was transmitted from one State into another?

Mr. WALSH. I should think not.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator would not require this particular form of bill in order to vest the Interstate Commerce Commission with that power.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, no.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It would happen in any event.

Mr. WALSH. As I said, that is not an essential feature of this bill. That, of course, is a provision which would have to go in any bill that might attempt to deal with this subject, either through continued Government ownership or through State ownership.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is a matter which will pass in any event.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I wish to speak about the features which have aroused all this controversy. I think there is no doubt in the mind of anybody now, after the discussion which has been had, that it is entirely within the power of the Federal Government, when it disposes of these adjacent riparian lands, to say that the permittee must pay for the use of those lands a certain amount annually, dependent upon the power it develops and utilizes from the plant, and that in so doing there is no invasion of the rights of the State or violation of the compact that is the foundation of our Federal Union.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator seems to think it is conceded that that is correct. I can not concede that.

Mr. WALSH. Of course I ought to except the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I wish to say to the Senator that the power by which these lands were obtained by the National Government was as a temporary trust to dispose of the land, and if this or any other leasing bill were to express clearly on its face that the National Government intends to hold these lands forever, the Supreme Court of the United States would declare the act unconstitutional.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, I understand the Senator contends that there is no power in the Federal Government to lease any of the public lands, but that it must sell them. That same argument was made before the Senate of the United States 80 years ago by Thomas H. Benton.

Mr. THOMAS. Such is not my contention. My contention is that it is confiscatory of property belonging to the States, and consequently the lease operates to deprive of property both the State and those within the State without due process of law.

Mr. WALSH. I understand the Senator claims that we are seizing the State's property, namely, the water, when we say we will give you this land but you must pay for it on the basis of the power you produce.

Mr. THOMAS. I concede the leasing power of the Government.

Mr. WALSH. I was referring to the Senator's colleague [Mr. SHAFROTH].

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will concede it for a limited period, it might be for a period of 50 years, and the Supreme Court would say that is a very short time compared to the life of a nation; but if you fix a provision in your bill that it shall remain forever the property of the United States——

Mr. WALSH. But it does not so provide.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have no doubt it would be decided as unconstitutional by the Supreme Court.

Mr. WALSH. I am very glad we agree that the United States can lease for a period of 50 years.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I did not say that. I said the court might hold it to be constitutional. The only decision I found in relation to the matter is one which approved a lease for five years, which unquestionably would be very temporary.

Mr. WALSH. The period of the leases did not seem to enter into the consideration of the question by the Supreme Court of the United States at all. The power to lease was declared in general terms.

I was about to say that Senator Benton had made exactly the argument in the Senate of the United States to which we have at times listened here, and afterwards went over into the Supreme Court and repeated it there, but that court decided against him. The report of the case gives an abstract of his argument; and you can find it elaborated in the discussions you have listened to here on the floor of the Senate from the eminent Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH]. I pass that point and proceed to the question of the limitation of the charge. I believe it is agreed that the Government may make a charge for the use of the land graduated upon the amount of power that is developed and used in connection with the site.

Now, the question arises as to how much of a charge should be made and how the charge should be regulated. The Senator from Utah, who, by the way, I think, is the author of most of the amendments reported to the bill by the Senate committee, insists that the provision for a maximum charge should remain as it is in the bill, at 25 cents, because that amount, he thinks, will cover the cost of administering the law, and he does not want any more charged for the use of these lands than will cover the actual cost of administration. In other words, he does not want any return whatever to the Government for the lands the use of which is granted.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, the Senator in stating that knows that I do not believe there ought to be any charge by the Government at all.

Mr. WALSH. I do. I understood the Senator to take that position—that there should be no return whatever to the National Government.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know whether the Senator has noticed my proposed amendment to the bill which I expect to offer at the proper time, authorizing the States in which these water powers are located to make application for the land; that the Government will still hold absolute title to the land; that the application made by the State shall be granted by the Government to the State; and then the public utilities commission of a State shall regulate not only the price which shall be charged for the power but make all necessary regulations to protect the people of the State, the consumers of the power.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. WALSH. I will do so in just a moment. I have not seen the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah, but I understand it perfectly well, for I have seen such a bill heretofore of which the Senator is the author. I understand that the Senator from Utah does not agree with this bill, but that he has one of his own.

This bill was prepared, as I have already indicated, by the heads of a number of the great committees of this and the other House in conjunction with the Secretary of the Interior, who is charged with the care of and disposition of the public lands. It was introduced in and went through the other House, and came to the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate. In its general aspects it has received the approval of that committee. It is here before us. Of course, the Senator from Utah does not like the bill; he has his own ideas about what a bill dealing with this subject should be; but it will be for the Senate to say whether or not the bill having the history of which I speak shall get its approval or whether the ideas expressed in the bill of the Senator from Utah shall receive its approbation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I rose rather to ask a question of the Senator from Utah. As I understood him, he made the statement that, in his judgment, there should be no charge by the Federal Government for this water power. Is the Senator from Utah also of the opinion that the States should make no such charge?

Mr. SMOOT. No. I will say to the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator, that whatever charge the public-utilities commission of each State agree upon, I think ought to be the charge for this water power. If they think that it is for the best interests of the people to allow the people of the State to use the water which belongs to the State, I favor allowing the public-utilities commission to say whether it is for the best interests of the State to charge so much per horsepower developed by the water of the State or not to do so.

Mr. POMERENE. That is, to decide whether or not the State shall receive any revenue?

Mr. SMOOT. That should be left entirely with each State.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, perhaps the Senator from Ohio did not hear me a little while ago, but I now advise him that under the laws of every Western State one can appropriate water, without being obliged to pay one penny for it. So the man who located a water-power site would get the water from the State without paying anything for it; and the Senator from Utah would give him the right to occupy the land without paying for it. Therefore he would not pay a dollar to either the State or to the Federal Government.

Under any system the State utilities commission has the right to regulate the prices at which a power company shall sell its power? That is quite a different question.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield further?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. In order that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] may understand just exactly the position of the Senator from Utah, I wish to state that when the State makes application for the use of the land required for the power house to develop the water system which belongs to the State, the State holds the title to the land, and either the State or the Government can impose upon the power-site people in locating the lands any rates that they may desire for the power created.

The amendment which I propose to offer as a substitute for the pending bill does not give the title to the man who erects the power house or distributes the power, but provides that it shall never go out of the possession of the State making the application. So the public-utilities commission of the State can regulate that just as it is here proposed to undertake to regulate it by charging so much per horsepower generated, and whatever charge is made goes to the State in which the power is located, and not to the Government of the United States. Not only that, but the matter will be controlled by the public-utilities commissions of the States and not by the Secretary of the Interior, as is provided in this bill.

Mr. POMERENE. Then the Senator's position is that no limitation should be placed upon the public-utilities commission whatsoever when it comes to the determination of the question as to whether or not the State should derive any revenue from this water power?

Mr. SMOOT. I think that each State ought to decide that matter for itself.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I am very sorry that we have been diverted to the consideration of the amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Utah, instead of adhering to the bill which is now before us; but I desire to say that this matter of regulation is entirely aside from the proposition of acquiring the right in the first place. Under the proposition of the Senator from Utah the State would give the right to the use of the water free and the Government would give the use of the land free, and so the power company would not pay anything for either land or water.

So far as the regulation is concerned, we shall discuss that later; but this matter of regulation is very much misunderstood. The State has the power to regulate public utilities, but it has no power to regulate a purely private business. The trouble about this thing is that many of these power developments will never be controlled by a public utility. Suppose a man wants to build a pulp mill, and he acquires a power site in order to provide himself with power for his enterprise. He does not not sell a pound of power; he utilizes it all in the manufacture of pulp. Here is another man who wants to locate a power plant for the purpose of operating nitrate works. He does not intend to sell a pound of power; he is intending to utilize it all in his nitrate works. Your public-utilities commission can not reach him.

The Great Northern Railway owns and operates a hydroelectric power plant in the Cascade Mountains, by the aid of which it carries its trains through the great Cascade Tunnel, several miles in length. It is now looking for power sites for the development of energy with which to operate its entire road through the mountain section. It takes out those sites, it developes them, but it does not sell a pound of power to anybody. It simply utilizes the power it generates in the operation of its trains. What can a public-utility commission do in the case of power sites so developed, without a contribution of any kind either to the State or the Federal Government.

So, Mr. President, we come back to the proposition about the charge. Should there be a charge or should there not be? I think that we have arrived at that stage when the public mind demands that the Government of the United States have a return of some kind for these valuable properties, which they are willing to dispose of to those who desire to develop them. The question is, Should there be a limit? I am entirely convinced that upon reflection you will say that there should not be. There should not be, for this reason: These power sites exist in all varieties of value, in all degrees of accessibility, and at all distances from the market.

I have spoken several times about the great power site at Polson, in my State. It is on the Pend d'Oreille River. That river empties the great Flathead Lake, which is the greatest body of fresh water between the Missouri River and the Pacific Ocean—a great natural reservoir. That river tumbles over a series of cascades 7 miles in length. As I heretofore have shown upon this floor, it is capable of developing 294,000 horsepower. Mr. President, if that power site were put up for sale I feel certain there would be any number of bids for it of from two to three million dollars from people hoping to secure it. Would you let somebody go in and develop that power site and take it for merely nothing? How are you going to limit the charge? I do not know what would be a fair charge.

I can point you to other places in my State, Mr. President, in the remote mountainous sections, where a small development is possible or even a large one, but at a cost so great that it promises only a trifling yield if it can be made to pay at all. In such cases possibly the Secretary of the Interior might be permitted to say to a man: "Yes, we will give you a permit and we will not charge you anything for it for 10 years; after that we will charge you 10 cents a horsepower for the next 10 years, and possibly 25 cents for the balance of the time."

Conditions are so varied, Mr. President, that it would be the height of unwisdom in the Congress of the United States to endeavor to fix either a minimum or a maximum rate. Why can you not trust it to the Secretary of the Interior and let him fix whatever price his judgment dictates? Of course the man who desires a permit will go to him, they will discuss the matter, the Secretary will make the best bargain he can for the public, and the man who desires the power site will represent all the conditions which ought to prompt the Secretary to make the terms as reasonable as he can.

Mr. President, I desire to speak for a short time on the matter of recapture and wish it were possible to do so to a Senate with a reasonably full attendance.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hughes	Page	Stone
Bankhead	James	Pittman	Swanson
Brady	Johnson, S. Dak.	Pomerene	Thomas
Bryan	Jones	Ransdell	Thompson
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Reed	Tillman
Chilton	La Follette	Robinson	Vardaman
Clapp	Lane	Saulsbury	Wadsworth
Curtis	McCumber	Shafroth	Walsh
Fernald	McLean	Sheppard	Watson
Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Sherman	Weeks
Gallinger	Norris	Smith, Ga.	Williams
Gronna	Oliver	Smith, Md.
Hollis	Overman	Sterling

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the question of the annual charge that ought to be made being disposed of, the next point over which a serious difference of opinion arises, and which occasions the greatest contention, is the amount that is to be paid for the property which the Government takes over at the expiration of the period of the lease. As I have explained to you, it must take over the works that were constructed by the permittee; and the difference of opinion arises in this way: One school insists that at the end of the period the Government, if it takes over the plant, should pay its then fair value. Another school insists that it ought not to pay its then fair value, with all the unearned increment that will arise by reason of the general development of the country, but that the money which is actually invested in the plant only ought to be returned to the investor; in other words, that he ought to have a good, reasonable, fair return upon all the money that he has invested in it during the entire period of 50 years, and then at the end of the time, if the Government takes it over, he should get his money back.

Mr. President, here is the situation: The permittee gets his privilege under the act from the United States, constructs his plant, acquires his water right under the provisions of the laws of the State, and the charges for power sold, as you have often been told, become subject to regulation all the time by the public utilities commission of the State in which the development occurs. All of his rates will be fixed upon the basis of the amount of money that he has invested in the enterprise. He is entitled to get back all of the necessary expenses of conducting the business, and then he is entitled to such a rate as will return him a reasonable profit upon the money he has invested in the plant. So it will go on for the full period of 50 years; and if, after the 50 years have expired, the Government allows him to remain in possession of the property, his rates will still be fixed on the basis of the original cost to him of the enterprise.

But we will assume now, Mr. President, that the Government concludes to take over the property and turn it over to some one else, to another and a new lessee. The Government is then called upon to pay, should this bill become the law, not only the amount which was originally invested in the plant but to pay the then fair value of it. Of course, around all of these developments industries will grow up; the entire country will have undergone a change within the period of 50 years that none of us, no matter how keen or active his imagination may be, can accurately foresee. Why, these properties, Mr. President, the power-house site, the adjacent land utilized for one purpose or another in connection with the business, the transmission line, the rights of way, and, above all, the water rights may and probably will have an enormous value after so many years. Whatever it is, under the bill as it has been rewritten by the committee, all that must be valued, and the permittee must be given the fair value of his property as it then shall be. The Government then turns it over to a new lessee at exactly what it has to pay for it. Now, Mr. President, when he starts off in his business he is entitled to a fair return upon the money that he invests, and, of course, that being more than the original cost, the rates must be higher than they were before. We had better let the man who built the plant originally continue rather than to take it from him at its "fair value" and turn it over to somebody else. The rates of the new owner are fixed upon the basis of what he has invested in the property. Fifty years pass and the Government takes it over again, and turns it to another man at the "fair value," presumably something more than it was before. So every time the Government takes the property over the rates rise and are higher than they were during the preceding period. That is not right.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I interrogate the Senator at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is the Senator entirely certain that in the event the Government took over the plant at its fair value, as described by the Senator so correctly, and then leased it again to a second permittee the second permittee would invest any capital?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly. The idea contemplated is that the Government will take over the plant, having already arranged with a new lessee to operate it. The Government will simply give the lessee the right again to occupy these lands for a period of 50 years, and will turn over to him the acquired property at just exactly what the Government paid for it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Well, Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator will pardon me, of course the Government might say, "We lease you the whole thing"; but if they leased him the entire plant, after paying for all but the dam site, they would, of course, lease at such a figure as would return the Government its just interest upon the fair value of the property which it purchased. In any case, the fair value, something more than the original investment, becomes the basis of subsequent charges.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I see the point raised by the Senator. I did not know whether or not my conception of the situation coincided with the idea of the Senator. Of course, the power house, theoretically then 50 years old, at the end of the term becomes the property of the Government when it is paid for.

Mr. WALSH. Exactly. It takes it over and pays for it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. My conception would be that if the Government wanted to re-lease the property, it would not be in the same position as it was at the beginning of the first 50-year period; that it would be not only leasing land which happened to have a power site upon it but would be leasing a complete power equipment.

Mr. WALSH. I apprehend that would not be the situation. I apprehend the Government would not take it over at all until it had already found a new lessee. I apprehend that very likely the Government would say to the new lessee, "We will give you a lease on the public land, land occupied under this act, on the payment of a royalty; you pay to the original lessee whatever shall be determined to be the fair value of the other property to be taken over." I have no doubt that is what the Government would do; but suppose that Congress should appropriate money enough to buy the property at what the court shall determine to be its fair value, then, you will observe, the Government will have to get from the lessee a return upon the money that it invests. In any case, whether the Government leases the whole thing or whether it simply leases the public land, and the lessee buys the other property at its fair value, as determined by the court, such fair value becomes the basis upon which subsequent charges are made.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I dislike to interrupt the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WALSH. I have yielded to the Senator from New York, and I trust the Senator from Utah will pardon us until we get through with our colloquy, and then I will be glad to yield to him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana declines to yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought the Senator from New York had concluded.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Apparently, then, Mr. President, if the Senator from Montana will permit me to interject an observation, no matter how careful we may attempt to be in drafting a statute in this year 1917, we are really invading a field of conjecture as to what is going to happen 50 years hence.

Mr. WALSH. I should say so.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And the idea in my mind was that when the 50-year period had expired, and 3 years prior to the expiration of the 50-year period, if my recollection of the terms of the bill is correct, the Government has found some other lessee which at the end of the fiftieth year it decides to permit to use the property, it notifies the first permittee——

Mr. WALSH. Yes, sir.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And in its relations with the second permittee an entirely different state of affairs exists as compared with relations with the first permittee, because at the end of the 50-year period, by one method or another, the Government finds itself in possession of a completely equipped power plant with all the accessories.

Mr. WALSH. On paying for it its fair value.

Mr. WADSWORTH. After having paid for it its fair value. Then, I assume—and I hope the Senator will not think me impertinent in making this suggestion—from the conjectures of the Senator from Montana—certainly they would be conjectures if made by me—that after that period has arrived, 50 years having gone by, from then on the Government will endeavor to charge a sufficient rental in order to earn for itself a proper rate of interest on the money expended at the end of the first 50-year period in taking over the property.

Mr. WALSH. Exactly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then, from that time on the Government is in the business of generating power?

Mr. WALSH. Of course, it is contemplated that the Government will not hold the property, but it will do just as it is proposed to do now, turn it over to someone else.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Simply by lease?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; the bill contemplates that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Would the Senator be willing to give me and the Senate his idea as to what would become, in that event, of that property, so far as its being subject to taxation by the State authorities is concerned?

Mr. WALSH. If the Government retained the property and itself operated it, it would not be subject to taxation by the State authorities under the doctrine of Van Brocklin against Tennessee, to which the attention of the Senate was invited this afternoon; but if it turned the property over to a lessee, all of the property would be subject to taxation, except the lands which originally belonged to the Government, and the leasehold interest in that land would be subject to taxation. Do I make myself clear?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is the Senator quite sure that a new lease made upon the property by the first permittee after being turned over to the Government at the end of the 50-year period and then leased by the Government, the Government never surrendering title to the improvements, would be subject to State taxation?

Mr. WALSH. The leasehold interest would be subject to taxation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The lease itself?

Mr. WALSH. The lease would be subject to taxation; but I assumed that the Government would not hold the title to all the property. It would simply hold the title to the land which it originally owned, and the original lessee would convey to the new lessee all the other property; or, perchance, the original lessee would convey it to the Government and the Government would immediately convey it to the new lessee; so that the new lessee would own all the property that the original lessee owned, and it would all be subject to taxation, just the same as in the hands of the original lessee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then the second lessee, of course, would have to expend new capital in taking over the property created by the first lessee?

Mr. WALSH. That is the point I am making; and that would be a higher basis upon which rates would be fixed during the succeeding period.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill specifically provides how the fair valuation shall be arrived at; and I call the Senator's attention to section 5. In the proviso it says:

> Such fair value shall not include or be affected by the value of any public lands, rights of way, franchises, or other property leased or granted under this act by the United States, or by the good will or prospective revenues.

Mr. WALSH. I understand that perfectly.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I did not understand the Senator when he stated that the fair valuation at the end of the 50 years would include the franchises and good will and the rights of way and the prospective revenues.

Mr. WALSH. I do not see how the Senator could have understood that. I made no such statement.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood the Senator to say that.

Mr. WALSH. No; I spoke about the power house, and I spoke about the generating plant, and I spoke about the transmission line, and about the right of way for the transmission line, and all those things, including the water rights.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator does not mean to say that the power house is going to increase in value in 50 years, does he?

Mr. WALSH. I do not know why it should not.

Mr. SMOOT. It will decrease in value.

Mr. WALSH. Let me explain. Here is your power site. The water is diverted at the dam and can be carried for a mile away through a wood-stave pipe or through a steel pipe and dropped to the power house. That power house may be situated upon land a mile away from the land on which the dam is. It may not have been acquired from the Government at all, and while the house built upon the land can not increase in value the entire property—the house and the land—may have become enhanced enormously in value.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. The point that seemed to me somewhat obscure with respect to that part of the bill which has just been under discussion is this:

Suppose the investment in the property at the end of 50 years was a million dollars. Suppose it was earning at that time 20 per cent upon the investment. In valuing the property would the amount of its earnings be a factor or element in determining the amount the Government should pay in taking it over?

Mr. WALSH. I rather think, under the rules applicable to eminent domain, that they would not be; that is to say, that we would not be entitled to introduce proof to show what the entire plant was producing.

Mr. CUMMINS. It seems to me that is a very important matter. I was not at all sure in reading the bill somewhat hastily whether that element in value—and it is a real element in value in the case of a private property—would be taken into account or not. We had that subject somewhat under discussion when the other water-power bill was before the Senate, as the Senator will remember. I was very solicitous then that it should be eliminated by direct expression in the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I answered the Senator from Iowa, having in mind the question as one strictly of a legal character. I do not believe that in the estimation of value as a legal principle you could show what the entire plant is producing. Nevertheless, as a practical proposition we all know it would enter into it; that, in the first place, the value of these things is what they will bring in the market, what a man would be willing to give for them if they were put up for sale—a man willing but not obliged to buy from a person willing to sell but not obliged to sell, as it is expressed—and as a practical proposition in arriving at that figure it would be impossible to exclude the influence of the surrounding conditions, including the success or the failure of the enterprise.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. But, if you will pardon now, I propose, if you follow me, to get rid of all those troublesome questions by simply inserting in a simple amendment at line 19 of page 15, so that instead of reading "shall pay in a lawful warrant drawn on the Treasury of the United States, or otherwise, before taking possession the fair value of such property," it shall read, "the fair value, not to exceed the actual cost, of such property."

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I was interrupted, and did not hear all of the colloquy between the Senator from Montana and the Senator from Iowa; but it struck me, when the Senator was talking about the cost and the fair value, that one of the elements of value at the end of the 50-year period would be the water right that is controlled by the State. It might be acquired, and would be acquired under the laws as they now exist in the several States, for nothing; but after the business had been developed for 50 years, and a great industry had grown up, and the country had developed greatly, that water right itself would be worth millions of dollars at a fair value.

Mr. WALSH. Why, of course.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Government or a subsequent lessee were required to pay the fair value of all the rights, it would have to pay that value, which cost them nothing and which was really made by the public that patronized the institution.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator is absolutely right about that.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. STONE. Under the plan we are considering, the Government permits the permittee to use the land by paying a rental of a certain amount per horsepower. That is for the use of the land. Is the State forbidden, or would it be authorized, to charge that same permittee a certain amount per horsepower for the use of the water?

Mr. WALSH. It would be authorized to do so; but let me say to the Senator that none of our Western States have deemed it wise to do anything of the kind. They have said to everybody: "Come and take it, put it to a beneficial use, and we do not ask you a dollar." That is the policy of every Western State. So you need not have any fear at all that any State is going to burden enterprise or drive capital to other States that are more liberal in their laws. We have already taken care of that.

Now let me say, Mr. President—I was discussing this matter of "fair value"—that there is another reason why we ought not to adopt that idea. I have shown you that if you adopt the idea that is expressed in the amendments tendered to this bill you merely make a stepladder of this thing, and every time you change the ownership you increase the burden that you put upon the public; and accordingly the Government never will take back the land it leases at the end of the 50 years. Mr. President, that was the very purpose with which this provision was incorporated in the bill. It originated with those who have no interest in and give no support to the idea that the property ought to come back to the Government at the end of the 50 years. They want to frame this bill in such a way as that the power site will not be taken back—in other words, that there shall be a perpetual grant.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has that idea about it. He does not want this site taken back. He does not want any charge made during the continuance of the lease, and he does not want the Government to take the land back at the end of the 50 years. This provision of the bill meets his hearty concurrence.

But there is another reason, Mr. President, and an unanswerable one, in my view, why this should not be taken. Suppose you cut this provision out of the bill altogether and do not say one word about the Government taking over this property acquired in connection with the power site and necessary for its utilization. Now, the 50 years have gone by. Why, Mr. President, the people of the State can exercise the right of eminent domain and take over that property, paying for it the fair value as it then shall be. That is the law of every State.

Mr. STONE. Does the Senator mean to take over the riparian land as well?

Mr. WALSH. That belongs to the Government of the United States, and the State can not take that; but you understand that the right of the original lessee has ceased. That land belongs to the Government of the United States now. The Government can turn that land over to the new lessee, who may then appeal to the State law of eminent domain and take possession of the other property which is necessary in order to the operation of the plant; and then he must pay to the owner of that property, the original lessee, the fair value of that property.

So, Mr. President, no provision of this kind is needed in the bill. It expresses just exactly what the law would be if never a word was said about it in this bill. It is in the language of a concession, as though a valuable right were acquired by or reserved to the people, when, in fact, they would enjoy that right if the bill were entirely silent on the subject. So that from any point of view that is a radically erroneous provision in this bill; and the idea, as it seems to me, ought to receive the acceptance of everybody; that when the lessee is permitted to make a fair return on his investment during the period of 50 years he ought then to get back the money that he paid into it and quit if the Government does not desire that he shall occupy longer.

Mr. President, if we can solve whatever difficulties inhere in the two features of the bill adverted to there will be no difficulty whatever in reaching a satisfactory conclusion concerning the mere details of this bill. The whole controversy hinges upon those two questions—the charge that is to be made during the life of the lease and the basis upon which the property is to be recaptured at the end of the 50-year period.

Now, I want to say just a few words in relation to the attitude taken by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] and to state to the Senate his position in relation to this matter as I understand it; and I want to do so with complete fairness to him.

The Senator from Colorado joined with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] in recommending against this bill, urging that the proper solution of this problem is to turn these water-power sites over to the States by a simple act somewhat as follows:

> All of the power sites upon the public domain are hereby granted to the States, respectively, in which they are situate.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. And all other lands within their borders.

Mr. WALSH. You can all understand that that introduces a change in our policy concerning the public lands that has been adhered to since the beginning of our Government. Why, Mr. President, away back in Jackson's administration it was argued upon the floor of the Senate that the proper disposition to make of the public lands was to turn them over to the States. The matter was thrashed out. All the great minds of that day having seats in this body, whose fame has added so much luster to its history, addressed their talents to the discussion of that question, and it was rejected; and there is no more sentiment in this country to-day, Mr. President, in favor of that idea than there was in those times.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Senator is mistaken in his history as to the action of the General Government with relation to the States. In the case of a number of States the General Government ceded all of its lands to the respective States. I know it did so in my own State. Very early after North Carolina ceded to the General Government the territory now composing the State of Tennessee, and after the establishment of the State, the General Government ceded all the lands within that State to the State of Tennessee; and the same thing was done in the case of other States.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the statement of the Senator from Tennessee is not in the nature of a correction. I was not unaware that in the case of a number of individual States general grants had been made such as those referred to by the Senator from Tennessee. In the case of all of the States specific grants of land for various purposes have been made. That is not what I am talking about. I am talking about a general act under which all the public lands everywhere were granted to the States within which they lie.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana further yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. SHIELDS. That was the character of act I was speaking of. It was a general act in my State granting all the lands within the boundaries of the State.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator does not understand me. I appreciate that perfectly. That is not quite the character of measure to which I refer. I was talking about an act under which not all lands in the State of Tennessee were granted to the State of Tennessee, but one under which lands anywhere in the United States would be granted to the States in which they lie. I say that 80 years ago that question was debated upon the floor of the Senate, and it was rejected by the Congress of the United States at that time, and it has no more countenance in the public mind to-day than it had then. So that while it might be a wise thing the sentiment of the country is so decidedly against the idea that the suggestion is not to be harbored as offering any solution whatever of the problem before us. To advance it is to argue for the indefinite continuance of the present situation of affairs. As I told you, these power sites have all been tied up for 10 years; and the proposition of the Senator from Colorado is to let them remain tied up for 10 years more—yea, for 50 years more.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. WALSH. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. For the purpose of simplifying the question of property rights, could not that be eliminated by allowing the company that owned the property to retain the property, if they saw fit, at a higher price than others would give, and then permitting them to re-lease from the Government?

Mr. WALSH. Undoubtedly. The Senator from South Dakota will understand that at the end of the 50-year period there is no prohibition against leasing again to the individual who had the original lease. If he has conducted his business in a satisfactory way and if he offers as good terms as anyone else offers, in all reasonable probability the Government will let him remain in possession and give him a lease for a further period. The idea is to let our grandchildren handle that thing when they have to, 50 years from now.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I thought, from questions that have been raised, that the question of the value of the property at that time entered largely into it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. I desire to call to the attention of the Senator from Montana our policy with regard to the public lands in one aspect that seems to me to be a little in conflict with his general statement, which is technically true.

We have granted, either to the States or to public-improvement companies, lands in all the western States infinitely greater in extent than the power sites. The General Government granted to my own State and to railway companies constructing lines through the State enough land to constitute an empire. Why is not the grant to the States for the purpose of developing the water-power sites exactly like the grant of lands to aid in the construction of railways or any other public utility of that character?

In my State, in addition to the railway grant, the Government granted a very large area of land—and that is true of other States as well—under what is known as the swamp act of 1850, all for the purpose of building up the State and aiding in its development. Now, why can not precisely the same thing be done with regard to water-power sites?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the conditions are practically the same, as the Senator from Iowa suggests. But the trouble about the matter is that the country has had so unfortunate an experience in connection with these grants that have been made to the States that I very much fear that it does not care to persist in that policy, which was discarded quite a good many years ago. We grant lands to the States now for educational purposes, and for similar and related purposes, but we have quit granting lands to the States to aid in public improvements. I think the experience of the State of Iowa in that regard has not been particularly satisfactory to the people of that State.

Mr. CUMMINS. Undoubtedly the grant may have been too extensive, but no one has ever quarreled with its purpose. I do not think you could find any one who would question the wisdom of the aid extended by the General Government in the construction of railways. At least, I never heard it questioned.

Mr. WALSH. Of course the Nation granted the lands to the State, and the State immediately granted the lands to the railroad company for the purpose of constructing the railroad. In other instances, as you will recall, the Government made the grant directly to the railroads. The system of thus aiding in the construction of railroads by great grants of land has been the subject of the most severe condemnation in our times, brought about, I think, rather because the thing is viewed from the standpoint of the present day than from the standpoint of the day when those grants were made. But I fear very much that the country would feel that that policy had been tried and had been found wanting; so I should rather feel that that was not a solution that would avail us very much at the present time.

I was discussing the attitude taken by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] with respect to this matter, and explaining to you that his policy was not to pass any legislation at all dealing with this subject except a general act turning over these lands—and all public lands, for that matter, as he corrected me—to the State. He says further, however, that it is not necessary to have any legislation at all about this matter; that the State now has the right to take these lands and devote them to water-power purposes through the exercise of the right of eminent domain. He concedes that the right of eminent domain can not ordinarily be exercised except by bringing the owner of the land into court, and that there are no means by which the Government can be brought into court at the suit of the State or anyone representing the State in an action in eminent domain; but he says that if the corporation having the right to exercise the power of eminent domain gets into possession of the property, gets into possession of one of these power sites, it can not be put out, if it offers to pay the fair value of the property; and he cites the well-known authorities applying the principle of equity to lands occupied by railroad corporations either with or without the consent of the owner.

Now, let us see what the practical effect of that theory will be. Corporations organized under the laws of the State of Colorado, enjoying the right of eminent domain, may, if the view of the eminent Senator from that State is the law, go out upon the public domain and grab a power site anywhere, occupy it in defiance of the National Government, being required only to pay what may be determined to be its value at the time of the taking. Mr. President, some declarations may be found in the reports here and there, beyond a doubt, to the effect that the right of eminent domain may be exercised by a State over the public lands. The Senator called your attention to quite a number of them, most of which are reviewed by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Van Brockman against Tennessee, referred to by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. It will be found, as I think, upon reading that opinion that the Supreme Court of the United States gives no countenance whatever to the idea that a State may appropriate public lands of the United States under the right of eminent domain, and for the very plain and simple reason that the Constitution of the United States provides that Congress shall have the power "to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations concerning the territory and other property of the United States," thus excluding any power on the part of the State to interfere with these lands at all or to attempt to dispose of them.

But, Mr. President, suppose that is not correct. Of what consequence is it that there is such a right as that? One can not raise a dollar to put into power development upon any such theory as that. It was argued by certain eminent gentlemen from the State of Colorado before the Supreme Court of the United States some six weeks ago. Suppose it is right. No one has ever been found who is willing to invest any money upon any such proposition. There is not a dollar for investment in the State of Colorado or anywhere else upon the opinion of any lawyer that the State may thus exercise the right of eminent domain. So whatever merit there may be in that view as a legal proposition it offered no practical solution of the problem before us.

Mr. President, I had not intended to talk about this matter anywhere nearly so long as I have spoken of it. I hope, however, I have given some enlightenment to the Senate upon the general aspects of the bill and directed its attention to the salient features of the measure in a helpful way. I merely want to say, in conclusion, that I am very much more concerned about the enactment of some legislation by Congress upon this subject, upon the passage by this Senate of some bill that will go over to the House and be dealt with by some conference committee, than I am about a bill which conforms to my own notions as to what it ought to be. It does seem to me there ought to be statesmanship and wisdom enough in the Senate to pass some bill representing its ideas in respect to water-power legislation. Now is the opportunity to do that, and I am going to ask those who have followed the discussion with any interest whatever to join with me in putting through the best possible bill that we can, but putting through some kind of a bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Before the Senator takes his seat——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator has intimated that a leasehold estate might be the subject of taxation. If that were true, under a bill which restricts and limits the money that can be derived from it, either through the public utilities commission of a State or through any regulation that is made by the Interior Department, what would a leasehold estate ever be worth?

Mr. WALSH. It would be worth just exactly what any other franchise is worth.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will ask the Senator further, whether he knows of an instance in his own State where a leasehold estate has ever been taxed?

Mr. WALSH. Of course I do.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I must say that I have never known of one in the State of Colorado. I leased a piece of property for 99 years. I subleased it for 20 years. The tax for the entire property is paid. The tax for the real estate and the house on it is paid, and consequently everything else is merged in that.

Under the law of some States it might be the subject of taxation, but even if it were the subject of taxation it seems to me that when you curb and limit the amount of money which can be realized from an investment of that kind you must of necessity make your leasehold worth nothing. It seems to me, therefore, it can not be the subject of taxation.

Mr. WALSH. Railroad property is in exactly the same situation.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does the Senator mean to say that where a railroad leases its road to another company to operate the lease is subject to taxation.

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have never heard of an instance like that.

Mr. WALSH. That is the situation we are now in with the Northern Pacific. It occupies the public land with its railroad; it simply has a right of way over it; and that right of way is subject to taxation.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have not any doubt that the right of way is subject to taxation, but that is not a leasehold estate. That is one of the properties which is owned by the company. We have several companies in the State of Colorado which have absolutely leased their railroads, and the lessees operate the railroads. I have never heard of anything but a tax on the roadbed and the rails and whatever the other property is worth, but never upon the pure leasehold itself.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, simply because it is an easier way to tax it, but if the Government of the United States owned the right of way and leased it there would not be any objection to taxing the leasehold.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Here is the difference between them: The United States Government owning this land is supposed to receive such benefit as that the land is exempt from taxation. If it is exempt from taxation, it is the same as if it paid for the entire value of the plant. There are some other benefits that are supposed to take its place. If the United States Government paid taxes on one of these power plants and leased it, can it be possible that the lessee would have to pay on that lease also? There is no such law in my State, and I do not believe it can be done.

Mr. STONE. I should like to ask——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield the floor?

Mr. WALSH. I yield the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. The Senator from Colorado has the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado has been recognized.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I did not want to take the floor at this time. Let the Senator from Missouri go ahead.

Mr. STONE. I did not mean to take it, except to ask——

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to take it, if no one else wants it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield the floor?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I desire to address a suggestion to the Senator from Colorado with respect to the argument he is just making, which is, as I understand him, to the effect that a leasehold is not the subject of taxation. The Senator from Montana referred to railroads as being in a situation like that which would arise from these water-power sites.

Mr. President, it is true, undoubtedly, as a general proposition that railroads are taxed on their roadbeds, cars, locomotives, and so on. They are often taxed, I think usually so, on their franchises; at least, they are in many States; they are in my State. But suppose a company should be organized to lease a railroad and under the contract it would turn out in the course of time that the rental was very low as compared with the value of the lease—in other words, that the lessees developed a very profitable business under their lease, where they would if a buyer came demand a price far in excess of what they were paying—does the Senator hold that a State could not levy a tax upon the value of that lease?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am not contending that. I am raising the query as to whether the railroad company itself that owns the road must not pay all the taxes. I have never heard of any instance to the contrary, where there was an additional assessment made upon the lessee, whose duty it is not to pay the taxes. There is a very strong reason presented by the Senator from Missouri for the position he takes, and it is possible that that might be the law, although I do not think that it has been so decided, at least not that I have ever heard of in my State.

But, Mr. President, when you consider that this is all hedged in by the fact that there shall be a utility commission that will not permit the company to earn any more than a reasonable rate, the leasehold would be absolutely of no value. Consequently, even if there was a liability, as the Senator suggests, there would not be a liability in a case of this kind for the payment of taxes, because the leasehold is made by the very act itself, so that it can not become valuable. If you limit the amount of money that can be charged by these companies, so that they can not, for instance, make more than 6 per cent per annum, what value is there in a leasehold estate? It is so tied down by the very conditions of the act itself that it is impossible to have a value.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator understands, I suppose, that when the commission comes to fix a rate, it must first allow all expenses, taxes, and everything else, and then it must allow a fair return on the money invested besides.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That may be, but the difficulty about that is that what they have got as an initial investment, being curbed and limited by the utilities commission itself, it would be impossible for it ever to be worth anything of substantial value over and above the cost of the enterprise in the first instance. The very object in having utility commissions is for the purpose of restraining the levy unjustly made upon the people; and that, of course, may affect its earning capacity, and it must of necessity affect the value of any leasehold estate, even if the leasehold estate were taxable. On that account, it seems to me, that you can not have any substantial value the subject of taxation.

Mr. NORRIS rose.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does the Senator from Nebraska desire to interrupt me?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I want to get the floor for just a moment when the Senator is through.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to retain the floor if we are going to continue this afternoon.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand we are not going to continue. I understand that the Senator from Missouri is only waiting for an opportunity to make a motion to go into executive session. I am not going to try to prevent the Senator from making an argument. I want to have an amendment read.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well; that is perfectly satisfactory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska asks permission to submit an amendment to the bill.

Mr. STONE. That there may be no misunderstanding. I really am not sitting here waiting to move an executive session if it is the pleasure of the Senator from Colorado or of the Senate to keep on with the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to offer an amendment to the bill, that I ask may be printed. I ask unanimous consent that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. After the semicolon following the word "eleven," line 20, page 13, insert the following proviso:

After the semicolon, following the word "eleven" on line 20, page 13, insert the following:

"Provided, That in granting leases under this act the Secretary of the Interior shall give preference to application for leases for development of electrical power by States, counties, municipalities, and irrigation districts, and in all such leases no rent or fee of any kind shall be charged. In lieu of such leases to any State, county, or municipality, or at any time after the making of the same, the Secretary of the Interior on demand therefor from the proper authority shall execute to any State, county, or municipality a patent for the property so leased or authorized to be leased by the provisions of this act. Such patent shall contain a stipulation providing that if the said grantee shall sell, lease, or mortgage the property so conveyed, or if the said grantee shall not proceed with reasonable diligence to properly improve the same for the development of hydroelectric power, or in case any dam or other structure on such property necessary for the production of hydroelectric power be destroyed, and the said grantee shall not with reasonable diligence proceed to rebuild the same, then the said conveyance shall be void, and the said property, together with all improvements, if any, thereon, shall revert to the United States."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed.

Mr. STONE. I will ask the Senator from Colorado if he desires to proceed?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I would rather postpone my remarks until to-morrow. I will state that I do not expect to try to call up the Porto Rican government bill to-morrow.

Mr. WALSH. Perhaps we can agree upon a recess until to-morrow.

Mr. SHAFROTH. As far as I am concerned, I have no objection to a recess.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the pleasure of the Senate?

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. MYERS. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 16, 1917, at 12 o'clock meridian.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

By the marvelous disclosures Thou hast made of Thyself, O God, our Father, in the vast and stupendous universe which environs us, and in its wonderful adaptation of means to ends everywhere apparent; by Thy potent influence working in and through the hearts of men; by the love poured out on the Cross of Calvary for a dispairing world; by the mercy displayed in His last expiring breath, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do"; by the universal faith which has come down to us out of the past; by the hopes of yon bright heaven; help us, we pray Thee, with clear vision and dauntless courage with firm and steadfast steps to pursue the right as it is given us to see the right.

"Not enjoyment and not sorrow
Is our destined end or way;
But to act that each to-morrow
Find us farther than to-day."

"And when the tongue is eloquent no more, the soul shall speak in tears of gratitude." Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, January 13, 1917, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 7742. An act placing Joseph Beale on the retired list of the Navy.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 7742. An act placing Joseph Beale on the retired list of the Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

S. 4429. An act to amend the postal laws; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

S. 4586. An act to protect and conserve the halibut fisheries of the Pacific Ocean, to establish closed seasons in halibut fishing in certain waters thereof, and to restrict the landing of halibut in the United States of America and the Territory of Alaska during the closed seasons established; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

EXTRA COPIES OF THE VOCATIONAL EDUCATION BILL.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that 1,000 copies of the vocational education bill as it passed the House be printed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks for the printing of a thousand additional copies of the vocational education bill as it passed the House. Is there objection?

Mr. BARNHART. Reserving the right to object, I will ask the chairman how these copies are to be distributed—through the document room or through the folding room?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know. Probably they will go through the folding room.

Mr. MANN. Well, there is no object in having a thousand copies go through the folding room. I do not think the gentleman wants to do that. That would be nonsense.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I doubt the propriety of printing only a thousand copies of this bill if there is any considerable demand for it. I shall probably have some demands, but if a thousand copies are printed, and they go to the document room, the chairman of the committee will probably go and get them, and the balance of us will not have any. I think the proper way for these chairmen of committees is to introduce proper resolutions and ask for a reasonable number, and let those resolutions come before the committee and have them properly considered. If there is a demand for these documents, it will be granted.

Mr. MANN. If the chairman of the committee has requests, I do not see any reason why the committee should not have a thousand copies if they want them. They are the ones who get the requests in the main.

Mr. HUGHES. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that there have been a great many requests for copies of this bill. I made my request as economical as possible.

Mr. BARNHART. If the gentleman will change his request from copies of the bill and make it a document, putting it in document form, he can have many times the number he would have in reproduction of the bill. It is a request for the reprinting of a bill. It should be in document form.

Mr. HUGHES. I am willing to accept the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. MANN. I suppose that a good many of the people who want this bill want it for the purpose of making suggestions in regard to its terms, it having gone to conference. Those suggestions are almost valueless if made on a House document print, because the paging and the lining do not correspond with those of the copy that will be before the conferees.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Texas rise?

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. I wanted to say in the discussion of this matter that I have a number of applications from professors of colleges and institutions in Texas for copies of the bill that has passed, together with the hearings and such speeches on both sides as may be valuable.

The SPEAKER. What is the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. HUGHES. The request of the committee, Mr. Speaker, is that 1,000 additional copies of the vocational education bill be printed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that a thousand extra copies of the bill on vocational education be printed as it passed the House.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the chairman that he make his request for 2,000 copies. Members have told me—Members who are not even members of the committee—that they have had requests for 100 copies of this bill. It occurs to me that even 2,000 copies would be a small number to answer the demands already made for copies.

Mr. BORLAND rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. BORLAND. I rise to object. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] and the chairman of the Committee on Printing [Mr. BARNHART] that this number is only of value in conference. It is not a law. It is probable that a great many of these requests that are referred to by Members are merely requests for the bill as finally passed. What the chairman of the committee aims to secure is an extra number of copies of the bill as it is in progress through the two Houses, doubtless for the purpose of answering requests of the people who are interested in the amending and perfecting of the bill. Now, we are not going to save any printing if we enlarge the request of the chairman of the committee. We may find that we are engaging in a task that is more or less unnecessary; but when the bill has finally become a law, then the interest of educators will be aroused in it, and we may at that time be compelled to print it in document form.

Mr. BARNHART. If the gentleman from Georgia will withdraw his request, I think we can arrange for a number that will be satisfactory to him without action by the House.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee how the disposal of these copies is to be made? Are they to go to the document room and be taken by anybody, regardless of how many copies others may want?

Mr. BARNHART. My idea is that the document room has the authority already to order an additional number of copies of a bill each day, a few from time to time, as it may be indicated that actual wants require, and they will have them there for distribution.

Mr. DYER. I understand; but if only a thousand copies are printed and they are not to be apportioned, a few Members will get all of them, because there are requests here, I assume, for as many as 10,000 copies, at least, of the bill now.

Mr. BARNHART. I understand; but I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that the purpose is merely to send it out to the "topnotchers," so to speak, who are very much interested in the bill in the course of its consideration. But many of these requests that are coming in are for the completed bill as finally enacted. These few copies are asked for now only to supply the needs of those who are interested in the changes that have been made in the bill, so that they may make suggestions to the Senate.

Mr. DYER. I understand that; but some Members will get two or three hundred copies or more and send them to all the schools in their districts, and those of us who have special calls, as indicated by the gentleman, will not be able to get copies. I think they ought to be divided up in some way so that we will be sure of getting at least a few copies.

Mr. BARNHART. The purpose as expressed was that the chairman of the committee should go and get them and that those who want them should make their applications to him.

The SPEAKER. No such request as that has been submitted to the Chair.

Mr. BARNHART. I know that, but the request has been withdrawn anyhow.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HUGHES] withdrawn his request?

Mr. HUGHES. I have not.

The SPEAKER. The request is that 1,000 additional copies of this vocational education bill be printed, to be disposed of through the folding room.

Mr. MANN. No; not through the folding room.

Mr. HUGHES. Through the document room.

The SPEAKER. Through the document room. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the oath of office be administered to Hon. TINSLEY WHITE RUCKER, elected to succeed our late lamented colleague, Mr. TRIBBLE, from the eighth congressional district of Georgia. His credentials have not arrived, but there is no question as to his election. He is present and desires to take the oath of office.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUCKER of Georgia appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office prescribed by law.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. MCARTHUR, for to-day, on account of important business.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS.

Mr. COX, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of H. R. 20569, Sixty-third Congress, third session, without leaving copies, no adverse report having been made thereon.

UNITED STATES SECTION OF INTERNATIONAL HIGH COMMISSION.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that there be a reprint of House document 1788, Sixty-fourth Congress, second session. I would like to have 5,000 copies printed. It is the report of the United States section of the International High Commission on the work accomplished at its meeting at Buenos Aires. It is requested in the following letter from the Secretary of the Treasury:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 3, 1917.

Hon. HENRY D. FLOOD,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. FLOOD: May I suggest that you move that there be a reprint of House Document No. 1788, Sixth-fourth Congress, second session, and that an edition of 5,000 copies be struck off? This is the report of the United States section of the International High Commission on the work accomplished at the meeting at Buenos Aires and since the close of that meeting. A very limited edition has been published, and inasmuch as we already have a very considerable demand for copies it is desirable that a fairly large edition be published forthwith. Furthermore, the probability of a second Pan American financial conference will cause an increasing demand for this report.

I shall greatly appreciate it if you will take the appropriate steps in connection with this matter at your earliest convenience.

Faithfully yours,

W. G. MCADOO, Secretary.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that there be a reprint of House Document No. 1788 of 5,000 copies. Is there objection?

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, my recollection is that this high commission was given an appropriation of $40,000 to make this investigation and print report of the same. It seems to me that is a sufficient allowance. Furthermore, the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury demands of the Congress that this action be taken forthwith. This is unusual and mandatory extraordinary. There is a regular course of procedure in complying with requests like this. It is to introduce a resolution and let it go to the Committee on Printing so that committee may investigate the need and cost thereof and report to the House, so you may consider as to whether we shall take from our own allotment for printing enough money to pay for this request of the Treasury Department, for which it has a printing allotment, and therefore I object.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 7536. An act authorizing the Western New York & Pennsylvania Railway Co. to reconstruct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Allegheny River, in the borough of Warren and township of Pleasant, Warren County, Pa.; and

S. 7538. An act authorizing the Western New York & Pennsylvania Railway Co. to reconstruct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Allegheny River, in Glade and Kinzua Townships, Warren County, Pa.

PUBLIC EXPENDITURES.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of public expenditures.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of public expenditures.

Mr. MANN. We would much rather hear the gentleman talk.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE CHAPLAIN.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a short editorial which appeared in the Evening Journal, a paper published in Richmond, Va., last Saturday, and which commends our worthy and beloved Chaplain, Dr. Couden. I am quite sure it expresses the sentiment of all Members of this House on both sides of the Chamber, and I ask unanimous consent to insert it in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing an editorial from the Richmond Evening Journal. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The editorial is as follows:

BLIND CHAPLAIN'S DAILY OBLATION.

Not the least valuable in the storehouse of treasures yielded by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is the daily invocation by the House Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, who for more than 20 years has served in that capacity. No visitor to the National Capital happening into the House at the opening of the daily session can fail to be impressed by the venerable figure, whose sightless eyes visualize the Almighty as readily as the man in complete possession of the seeing faculty. For many years we have followed the gems of literary thought compressed in Dr. Couden's daily prayer. Each supplication is a marvel of condensation, an epitome of man's spiritual longings, so lofty in theme, so fervent in spirit, so reflective of true devotion that even the most pronounced skeptic in the House must be impressed and for the moment uplifted. We make no apology for reproducing on this page, so long as Congress remains in session, the blind Chaplain's offerings. Wholly aside from the spiritual qualities contained, the literary construction of each is such that the prayer would adorn any editorial page in the country. We could wish that more extended publicity were given these inspiring oblations. So far as we know the Evening Journal is the only newspaper in the country making a practice of featuring the House Chaplain's daily intercessions, but we hope their setting forth in the manner shown will suggest itself to other editors as not unworthy of emulation. No matter to what religious denomination a reader may belong, the devotional beauties contained in the daily prayer may be assimilated with the complete approbation of conscience. Even the agnostic, if a lover of good English, can appreciate the concrete expressions, the choice of words, the multum in parvo of these wonderful petitions to Divine Grace. Read them if by chance you have overlooked their eurythmic charm.

POWERS OF COMMITTEE ON RULES UNDER HOUSE RESOLUTION 446.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for a minute or two, at the end of which I wish to offer a resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, a doubt arose in the minds of some members of the Committee on Rules as to its legal authority in the matter of compelling answers of contumacious witnesses under the investigation which it has been instructed by the House to pursue, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] informed the Committee on Rules that he would present, and he has presented, a resolution which provides for the appointment of a select committee of five Members to make certain investigations. That is the individual action of Mr. CAMPBELL. It is not the action of the Committee on Rules. But in behalf of the Committee on Rules I present the following resolution, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to address a parliamentary inquiry as to whether this will interfere with the regular order of business?

The SPEAKER. Not at all.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Then I do not object.

Mr. GARRETT. Now, Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee offers a resolution and asks unanimous consent for its present consideration. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 448.

Resolved, That in the performance of the duties imposed upon it by reference to it of House resolution 446 the Committee on Rules shall have the power to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths and to employ such stenographic and clerical assistance as may be necessary. The expenses incurred hereunder shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives on vouchers ordered by this committee and signed by the chairman thereof and approved by the Committee on Accounts, evidenced by the signature of the chairman thereof.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I offer another resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee offers another resolution and asks unanimous consent for its present consideration. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 447.

Resolved, That in the consideration of House resolution No. 446, committed to the Committee on Rules, said committee be, and it is hereby, authorized and empowered to require witnesses to answer all questions propounded by said committee, or a member thereof, touching the subject matter of said resolution, and to require any witness called before it to testify fully as to any information in his possession, whether in the nature of hearsay testimony or otherwise, relative to the matters set forth in said resolution. And said committee is specifically directed to require one Thomas W. Lawson to name any Member of Congress or other person alleged by him in his testimony before said committee on January 8 and 9, 1917, to have given him any information relating to the subject matter of said resolution.

Mr. MADDEN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee whether the committee has taken any steps to bring Mr. Lawson before it for a further hearing.

Mr. GARRETT. In answer to the gentleman from Illinois I will state that in a very few moments after the resolution had been rereferred to the committee on Friday last a subpœna was issued to be served on Mr. Lawson to appear to-day. That subpœna was taken by the Sergeant at Arms. He was not able to find Mr. Lawson, but his secretary advised the Sergeant at Arms that Mr. Lawson would arrive in the city some time to-day, that he could not be here at 10 o'clock. Within the last hour the chairman of the Committee on Rules has received a telegram from Mr. Lawson that he will arrive in the city at 2 o'clock and be ready to appear before the committee. It is expected that the hearings will begin at 3 o'clock.

Mr. MANN. This relates to a new resolution?

Mr. GARRETT. A new resolution.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think it is a little previous to insert in this resolution a requirement that Mr. Lawson shall answer questions which were propounded to him in reference to another resolution then before the committee—this resolution under consideration not having been then introduced?

Mr. GARRETT. The resolution under consideration has been introduced.

Mr. MANN. But it had not then been introduced?

Mr. GARRETT. No; it had not.

Mr. MANN. The purpose of this is to clear up all questions of authority?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. But it may serve to complicate it. At first blush I should think the House in directing Mr. Lawson to answer an inquiry propounded last week, in relation to a resolution which was not introduced until last Saturday, would rather complicate than clear up the difficulty.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that I would not personally care to express an opinion along that line at this time. I am speaking now for the committee, and I will state that it represents the judgment of the committee. There was doubt in the minds of some members of the committee as to whether House resolutions 420 and 429, or inquiries under this resolution, would reach the point that the House desired the committee to arrive at or obtain the information, or try to obtain the information, and for that reason this resolution was presented, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] having given notice that he would present it, and because of the fact that we desired to begin at 3 o'clock the committee deemed it necessary to have additional power.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. As I understand the resolution that the gentleman offers, it refers to a resolution this day introduced by the gentleman from Kansas and referred to the Rules Committee.

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Then I think that goes just as far as it would if it was introduced a week ago.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. I will say that the resolution does not direct Mr. Lawson to answer the inquiry which he refused to answer last week; it merely directs him to name the Member of Congress referred to in the testimony, in so far as it is relevant to this resolution.

Mr. GARRETT. That is a very direct and clear statement of the situation.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Was Mr. Lawson given permission to leave Washington at the time he was excused from testifying?

Mr. GARRETT. No; the instructions to Mr. Lawson were to remain subject to the call of the committee.

Mr. LONGWORTH. In Washington?

Mr. GARRETT. I can not say whether it was to remain in Washington or whether it was the general statement to remain subject to the call of the committee.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I happened to be present at the time, and my recollection is that he was instructed to remain in the city of Washington.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman may be correct about that.

Mr. LENROOT. After resolution 429 had been reported the committee had no power to subpœna witnesses or order Mr. Lawson to remain here. When it reported the resolution 429 its power to make further order in reference to it was gone.

Mr. LONGWORTH. As a matter of fact, he was ordered to stay here.

Mr. LENROOT. He was; but I do not think he was in contempt of the order after the resolution was reported.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

FORUM BILL.

The SPEAKER. This is Unanimous Consent Calendar day, and the unfinished business is the bill (H. R. 14816) to provide for the use of the public-school buildings in the District of Columbia as community forums, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Two weeks ago on the last unanimous-consent day this bill was called on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. It is the forum bill. The parliamentary inquiry I wish to make is, the bill not having been finished on that day, whether or not the Unanimous Consent Calendar should not proceed to the next bill instead of this coming up as unfinished business. I make the inquiry in order to get a ruling, not that I have any objection to the forum bill.

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair that the practice has been that a matter having come up and been partially disposed of goes over as unfinished business.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Chair having ruled that this is unfinished business, a question that has not heretofore arisen since the creation of the Unanimous Consent Calendar, whether in the consideration of the Unanimous Consent Calendar after completing this bill the Clerk will continue with the following bill or begin anew as is customary?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he would begin anew. This identical question was up about the Potomac bridge.

Mr. MANN. If the House does not want to consider the bill it has a very easy remedy.

The SPEAKER. Yes; if the House does not want to consider the bill it can raise the question of consideration.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. That was not my object. I propounded the question to find out what the rule was.

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair that the ruling heretofore made ought to be adhered to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 14816, known as the forum bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky) there were—ayes 50, noes 64.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and fifty-nine Members present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the forum bill.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 132, nays 203, answered "present" 1, not voting 98, as follows:

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present; the Doorkeeper will unlock the doors.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, without having any hearing on the merits of this bill—reserving the right to object, is this bill in regular order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent and subject to call?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. This bill has to be disposed of some way before there is any other business in order.

Mr. MANN. Not at all.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know if this bill is on the regular call under the regular procedure on Unanimous Consent Monday. I repeat the inquiry, Is this bill on the regular call in the regular method of procedure of unanimous-consent call? If not, I shall feel constrained to object. I have no views on the bill one way or the other. I merely want each bill to have a fair chance.

The SPEAKER. This bill is the unfinished business coming over from the regular order of two weeks ago. Does the gentleman object to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. FERRIS. How can there be unfinished business from one unanimous-consent day to the other? Under this procedure one bill might hold the calendar indefinitely. This would practically do away with this day.

The SPEAKER. It has been ruled on two or three times and it seems to be the most orderly way of proceeding. You get a bill up here and fool away a whole day on it——

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there are about 25 or 30 Members coming from the far Western States that have little bills—bills that will only require a few minutes. This is their only chance to get them considered, on unanimous-consent day, and that is, indeed, a very slim one, because we have to run the gantlet of unanimous-consent objection. We have little or no consideration under suspension of the rules, and I do not think it proper to take up a bill of this importance reported from the District Committee, when they have a District day, and consume an entire day for the consideration of bills from that committee. I have nothing to say whatever about the merits of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I submit that where unanimous consent was given for the consideration of a bill which requires consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and the House declines on motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union that that ends the unanimous consent given.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Not at all, Mr. Speaker; I have the right and I do make the motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering H. R. 14816.

Mr. MANN. That has been made and voted down.

The SPEAKER. It is clear——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. There has been intervening business and this bill still retains its place on the calendar until disposed of in the regular way.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Kentucky is in error.

The SPEAKER. The House clearly expressed itself about it by voting 202 against to 132 in favor.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The House, Mr. Speaker, may have expressed its desire, but it has not expressed it on the parliamentary question. The question of "consideration" is the only way by which this bill can be gotten out of its position on this calendar now.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Then, Mr. Speaker, I demand the question of consideration.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it has always been held, even though a bill under a special rule should be in order and goes over, you can raise the question of consideration on it when it comes up again. This is a bill that requires consideration in the House, but the same rule as to the question of consideration in the House applies to a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on a Union Calendar bill. That has been decided, and that ends the unanimus consent that has been granted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not rule on that point. The Chair will rule, though, that the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky is not in order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I insist this bill is yet before the House and undisposed of. There is but one motion that will dispose of it and that is the "question of consideration."

The SPEAKER. The motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is equivalent.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If the Chair holds that way——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection?

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina objects.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for its consideration.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I believe under the rules that motion can not be made a second time in a day.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. There is no rule for it; there is but one way to get rid of this bill and that is to raise the "question of consideration."

The SPEAKER. Well, a motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is precisely the same thing.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Not at all, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I suggest the Chair must at some time rule on this question.

The SPEAKER. What question?

Mr. GARNER. The question of whether, after a bill has gotten permission to be considered by unanimous consent, and the motion is made to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and that motion is voted down, whether that disposes of the bill. If it is equal to that of consideration, it certainly disposes of it, because if you raise the question of consideration, and the House refuses to consider, that certainly disposes of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Not at all.

Mr. MANN. It does not dispose of the bill, but it disposes of the question of unanimous consent.

Mr. GARNER. Yes; so the House has just voted on the question of whether it will go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider this bill, and, by a vote of 202 to 132, it declined to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The gentleman from Kentucky then asked that the House consider in the House, as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, this bill, and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RAGSDALE] objected. Now the gentleman makes a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

If the House votes it down again, then the gentleman asks unanimous consent to consider it in the House, as in the Committee of the Whole, and if objection is made we again vote on going into the Committee of the Whole. It would be an endless proceeding.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. There is but one proposition that can parliamentarily come before this House, and that is the "question of consideration." That is all that is left. And as soon as they decline to make that motion I shall insist in one way or another in getting this matter up for consideration.

Mr. RAGSDALE. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAGSDALE. How can they raise that question when the Chair has ruled that this motion that is now made by the gentleman from Kentucky is out of order and can not be considered, and that this is not before the House?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Then, until the gentlemen avail themselves of their one remedy the House will sit here doing nothing.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky contend you can keep going through this process all day?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do when they have a remedy of which they will not avail themselves.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the Speaker will permit, I do not have any doubt about the facts. I voted for the bill, and I would like to see it considered; but there is not any question whatever that under the procedure of this House the voting down of the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider a bill is tantamount to and the same thing as refusing to consider, and that the bill is out of the way of the House for consideration now.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the Manual, on page 337, which has this note to section 753:

On a motion to go into Committee of the Whole to consider a bill the House expresses its wish as to consideration by its vote on this motion.

And citing volume 5 of Hinds' Precedents, pages 4973 to 4976.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, permit me to call the attention of the Chair to the rule on a similar matter. Under the rules, when there is a call of the committee not on Calendar Wednesday the committee calls up a bill on the House Calendar, and at the end of an hour it is in order to move to go into Committee of the Whole on a Union Calendar bill.

Paragraph 5 of Rule XXIV expressly provides if that motion be determined in the negative it shall not be in order to make motion again until the disposal of the matter under consideration or discussion, which would be the House bill. Now, what we are having under consideration to-day is the Unanimous Consent Calendar. Here is a bill where it was in order to go into the Committee of the Whole on that calendar. That vote was decided in the negative. While the rule does not expressly cover it, it is a similar case, and I think a similar ruling ought to be made.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The position of the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. Speaker, is not at all well taken. The Unanimous Consent Calendar is not the business under consideration.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The business under consideration is a bill which is upon the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. MANN. But it comes on the call of the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

The SPEAKER. There are several precedents about this matter, and the Chair will take the trouble to read only one of them. They all rule the same way. On page 21, volume 5, section 4975, of Hinds' Precedents is the following:

On February 23, 1901, Mr. William P. Hepburn, of Iowa, under the terms of a special order which made his motion the regular order, moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5499) to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Mr. OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD, of Alabama, rising to a parliamentary inquiry, asked if it would be in order to raise the question of consideration.

The Speaker said:

"The Chair thinks not; but the question can be tested on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole. That presents the same situation as if the question of consideration were raised."

There are four or five precedents, all of which are along the same line. Therefore the Chair declines to recognize the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] to move to go into the Committee of the Whole again.

HOUSE RESOLUTIONS 447 AND 448.

On motion of Mr. GARRETT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which House resolutions 447 and 448 were agreed to was laid on the table.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. BOOHER, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of George Welty, no adverse report having been made thereon.

SECTION 20, ACT TO REGULATE COMMERCE.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the first bill.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 563) to amend section 20 of an act to regulate commerce, to prevent overissues of securities by carriers, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire of the gentleman having charge of the bill, the Rayburn bill, whether, if he takes this up for consideration, it will be considered in the House or in the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. ADAMSON. It is immaterial to me. I intended to move to go into the Committee of the Whole House, but I prefer, if the House is willing, to consider it in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman will realize it will take most of the day if we enter into the consideration of this important bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not think it ought to do so. We have had this up at a previous session and passed it with only 12 dissenting votes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think this is too important a bill to be considered on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and, therefore, I object.

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman consent to leaving it on the calendar?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] asks that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, it seems to me there ought to be some limit of time on some of these bills at the top of the Unanimous Consent Calendar. There are not very many more unanimous-consent days in this Congress. Every gentleman who has a bill on the calendar, which he knows will not be considered under unanimous consent, still asks to have the bill retained on the calendar. I am not going to object to this bill just to further demonstrate what would happen. You could not finish this bill in three days.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, "while there is life there is hope." So long as it remains on the calendar there is a chance for its consideration.

Mr. MANN. And it is a good bill at that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection to the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin withdraws his objection to the consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would be very glad to have this bill considered, but the House has just indicated that it did not desire to-day, on unanimous-consent day, to consider a very worthy bill. That bill could be discussed in one-third of the time that it will take to dispose of this bill. If, however, gentlemen want to go ahead with the stock-and-bond bill and take up to-day, and the next unanimous-consent day, and the next unanimous-consent day with it, with the certainty that even then the bill will not become a law in this Congress, I am not going to object to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, replying to the gentleman from Illinois, if the Chair will permit, there is really no necessity for prolonged debate on that bill. We passed this bill two years ago in one day, after having it thoroughly debated, and there is no necessity for long debate on it now, if gentlemen do not want to speak. It will, in my judgment, settle the whole railroad controversy that is now before the country.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman knows very well that this is probably the most important legislation proposed at this session of Congress. I would have been willing to spend a week working at it, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. ADAMSON. Will not the gentleman admit that the bill was thoroughly considered when the House passed it two years ago?

Mr. MANN. I will not admit that it was proper to call it up when the committee called it up. That is not a proper thing to do.

Mr. ADAMSON. I stand pat in my advocacy of this bill, and here is another opportunity, Mr. Speaker, and I do not feel at liberty to slight this opportunity.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman say there will be free debate on this bill?

Mr. ADAMSON. As full and free debate as has already been had.

Mr. MANN. I do not think that this bill was ever debated to any great extent in this House. I have no recollection of it, at least.

Mr. ADAMSON. I have a higher opinion of Members' recollection than that.

Mr. MANN. If there was any considerable debate on it, it made no impression on Members' minds.

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not think I would be performing my duty if I withdrew the bill now.

Mr. FERRIS. I have no personal interest in these bills, Mr. Speaker; but let me appeal to the gentleman from Georgia and ask him, Does he think he ought to bring up a bill of this kind that will take up all the unanimous-consent days at this session?

Mr. ADAMSON. I shall not retaliate in kind, I will say to the gentleman from Oklahoma; but I believe this bill is more important than all the other bills on the calendar at this time.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman thinks it so important, I shall not object to it.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I do not think a question that affects all the railroads in the country ought to be settled in an hour. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] objects.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that this bill be passed over without prejudice. Gentlemen may have a change of mind by the time the next unanimous-consent day comes along.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

GRANT OF PUBLIC LANDS TO THE STATE OF OKLAHOMA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15156) granting public lands to the State of Oklahoma.

The title of the bill was read.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I object, Mr. Speaker, on the theory that this bill would not be concluded to-day if taken up.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky objects, and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McCLINTIC] asks unanimous consent that it be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

UNCOMPAHGRE INDIAN RESERVATION, UTAH.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 43) in relation to the location, entry, and patenting on lands within the former Uncompahgre Indian Reservation, in the State of Utah, containing gilsonite or other like substances, and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I object.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Utah asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CLAIM OF THE SIOUX TRIBE OF INDIANS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 4371) authorizing the Sioux tribe of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I object.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill and the next, numbered 281 and 282 on the calendar, be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. GANDY] asks unanimous consent that Nos. 281 and 282 be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL INSURANCE FUND.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the resolution (H. J. Res. 250) to provide for the appointment of a commission to prepare and recommend a plan for the establishment of a national insurance fund, and for the mitigation of the evil of unemployment.

The title of the resolution was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I do not see that on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. It is right after No. 282.

Mr. MANN. It is on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, No. 305.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that this bill involves an appropriation and the appointment of a commission. It is too important a bill to be disposed of by unanimous consent, and therefore I object in order that there may be a more careful consideration of it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, will the Speaker recognize me for a motion to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman at about half past 4 or 5 o'clock.

Mr. LONDON. Then I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the bill retain its place on the calendar without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that this resolution be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AVIATION IN THE COAST GUARD.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15736) to provide for aviation in the Coast Guard.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. LONDON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. LONDON. I will.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the object of this legislation has been accomplished in two other bills, namely, the Army bill and the Navy bill, that this bill in particular be laid on the table. I apprehend that that is the parliamentary step to take.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the bill be laid on the table. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ASSESSMENTS FOR OPENING STREETS, ETC., DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15460) to provide for the payment of assessments for benefits for the opening of streets, avenues, roads, and alleys in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BORLAND. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar.

HOURS OF SERVICE OF RAILROAD EMPLOYEES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9216) to amend sections 2, 3, 4, and 5 of an act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon," approved March 4, 1907.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COADY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks that this bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. VARE. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman if the same purpose has not been attained in the Adamson bill?

Mr. COADY. I think so; yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ADAMSON. There are some skeptical people who pretend that the Adamson bill will not stand. If it should fail, we might have to legislate again, you know, and it is well enough to let this stand for the present, out of respect to the skeptics.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to this bill going over without prejudice?

There was no objection.

MISBRANDED ARTICLES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10496) to prohibit the manufacture, sale, or transportation in interstate commerce of misbranded articles, to regulate the traffic therein, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman from Kentucky wants to discuss the bill, I will reserve the right to object. It is too important a bill to be passed in this way.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not want to discuss it, but I ask unanimous consent to pass it over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to pass it over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AUXILIARY RECLAMATION PROJECT, YUMA, ARIZ.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 14825) to provide for an auxiliary reclamation project in connection with the Yuma project, Arizona.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to have that bill reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill of similar title for this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is it of similar tenor?

Mr. HAYDEN. Of similar tenor and similar title, S. 5718.

The SPEAKER. Where is that bill?

Mr. HAYDEN. Is is on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. MANN. It is Unanimous Consent Calendar 394 (S. 5718).

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me we should have the bill reported.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] is going to ask to have the Senate bill considered instead of the House bill, the Chair thinks it best to have the Senate bill read.

The Clerk read the bill (S. 5718) to provide for an auxiliary reclamation project in connection with the Yuma project, Arizona, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to set apart any lands in the State of Arizona heretofore or hereafter withdrawn under the reclamation law, in connection with the Yuma reclamation project, as an auxiliary reclamation project or unit, and sell, in tracts of not more than 160 acres to any one purchaser, the lands so set apart and believed to be susceptible of irrigation, at public sale under suitable regulations, for not less than the reasonable value per acre of the land plus the estimated cost per acre of reclamation works to be constructed for the reclamation of said lands so set apart plus the proportionate cost per acre of the works previously constructed and available therefor. That appurtenant water rights for lands in private ownership may be sold for not to exceed 160 acres to any one person, at a price which shall not be less than the highest price per acre paid for public land sold under the provisions of this act, payment thereof to be made under the same terms as for public land under the provisions of section 2. Final water-right certificate shall not be issued to such private land until payment has been made in full. No works shall be constructed nor water delivered through any of the works of the Yuma project for the irrigation of any such private lands unless application has been made to purchase a water right for such land under the terms and provisions of this section. The Secretary of the Interior, at or prior to the time of sale, shall fix and determine (a) the reasonable value of the land per acre; (b) the estimated cost per acre of the works to be constructed; and (c) the proportionate cost per acre of the works previously constructed and available for the lands offered for sale.

SEC. 2. That all bidders at such public sale shall be required to make a deposit of 10 per cent of the amount bid for the tract proposed to be purchased, and upon notice from the Secretary of the Interior that such bid has been accepted shall be required to pay 15 per cent additional within 60 days after such notice. In case of failure to do so the deposit shall be forfeited and the corresponding lands shall be available for further sale. In case the bids for the lands shall not aggregate a sufficient amount within six months from the time fixed for the filing of bids to meet the probable cost as announced, all deposits shall be returned. The remaining 75 per cent of the purchase price shall be paid in three annual installments, with interest at 6 per cent per annum on deferred payments until paid, running from the date of notice to pay the additional 15 per cent, but advance payments may be received at any time. Upon full payment of the purchase price patent shall issue for the lands, and no qualification or limitation shall be required of any purchaser or patentee except that he be a citizen of the United States or have declared his intention to become such citizen. Such patent shall also contain a grant of a water-right appurtenant to the land.

SEC. 3. That the moneys received under the provisions of this act shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and be covered into a separate fund known as the auxiliary reclamation fund of the Yuma project, Arizona.

SEC. 4. That the money in the said auxiliary reclamation fund of the Yuma project, Arizona, shall be available for the construction or completion of irrigation works for the said auxiliary project or unit to the extent of the moneys received on account thereof in connection with the sale of the lands therein. The landowners shall pay the cost of operation and maintenance, and the charges to cover such cost as fixed by the Secretary of the Interior shall be paid each year in advance of the delivery of water. Upon the announcement by the Secretary of the Interior of the completion of the said auxiliary project or unit thereof, the operation and maintenance of the irrigation works shall, as soon as practicable, be turned over to an organization representing a majority of the landowners, to be operated and maintained by them at their expense in accordance with a contract therefor to be made with the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 5. Any surplus of funds paid on account of construction remaining after completion thereof, and that any money remaining in said separate fund known as the auxiliary reclamation fund of the Yuma project, Arizona, after completion of the said auxiliary project and after reimbursement of the reclamation fund for the proportionate share of works built by means of the latter fund shall be credited to the cost of operation and maintenance of the works of the said auxiliary project, and any balance thereof on hand when the said auxiliary project is taken over, as provided in section 4, shall be paid to the contracting organization.

SEC. 6. That the provisions of the reclamation act of June 17, 1902, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, known as the reclamation law, shall be applicable to such auxiliary project, except any portions of such acts as may be in conflict with the provisions hereof.

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into full force and effect.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 4, after the word "for," strike out the remainder of line 4 and lines 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10, down to and including the word "two," and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That appurtenant water rights for lands in private ownership may be sold for not to exceed 160 acres to any one person at a price equal to the estimated cost per acre of the works to be constructed plus the proportionate cost per acre of the works previously constructed and available for the lands, if any there be, payment to be made under the same terms as for public land under the provisions of section 2."

Page 3, lines 23 and 24, strike out the words "or have declared his intention to become such citizen."

Page 4, line 1, after the word "land," add the following to section 2:

"Provided, That any person who has made an entry which is now valid and subsisting, or who has a preference right to make entry, for any irrigable land embraced within the limits of the auxiliary project, may purchase said land at the price of $2.50 per acre and shall be subject to the same payments for the irrigation works as is required of persons holding private lands under the provisions of section 1 hereof: Provided further, That the purchasers or owners of the land to be irrigated under said auxiliary reclamation project shall also agree to pay to the United States the total actual cost of the works of said auxiliary reclamation project in the event that the actual cost of said works shall exceed the estimated cost thereof."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate bill, it being a bill of similar tenor on the calendar.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. BORLAND. This is rather a novel reclamation project, and I would like to have the gentleman in charge of the bill give us some explanation of it before we proceed with it. As I understand it, the purpose is to irrigate what is known as the mesa lands connected with the Yuma project.

Mr. HAYDEN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. BORLAND. These mesa lands have heretofore been withdrawn as lands susceptible of irrigation, but in order to reclaim them it is going to be necessary to install a pumping plant operated by power obtained from the Laguna Dam. Is that the idea?

Mr. HAYDEN. That is the idea.

Mr. BORLAND. And the water will be pumped up to the level of the mesa?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. How much of the mesa land is going to be irrigated in that way?

Mr. HAYDEN. About 40,000 acres.

Mr. BORLAND. It is that auxiliary plant to pump the water up to the mesa lands, and the power therefor, and of course the canals and ditches in the mesa, that are included in this so-called auxiliary project?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. Does the bill contemplate that the holders of these mesa lands shall pay also a portion of the cost of the original project?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; the purchasers and owners of the mesa lands are to pay the proportionate cost, the bill says, per acre of the work previously constructed and available for the land.

Mr. BORLAND. What is meant by the words "available for the land"?

Mr. HAYDEN. Available for the irrigation of this land is the Laguna Dam, the canal extending from the Laguna Dam on the California side to where it returns to the Colorado River, the siphon under the river, and the main canal on the Arizona side of the river down to the point where the pump is to be located.

Mr. BORLAND. This pump is to be wholly available for the mesa land?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. Nobody else can use that?

Mr. HAYDEN. And the holders of the mesa land are to pay the estimated cost per acre of the works to be constructed; that is, the cost of the pump and the canals and laterals that will be built on the mesa.

Mr. BORLAND. As I understand the plan, it is intended that the Government shall sell so much of the mesa land as is public land and put the money received therefor in a separate fund for these auxiliary works.

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; for the reason that there is now no money available in the reclamation fund to construct any such auxiliary project.

Mr. BORLAND. Is the money in the auxiliary fund to apply only on the auxiliary work, or will it apply also on the proportionate cost of the original work?

Mr. HAYDEN. It will apply on both. The bill says that the money placed in this fund shall be used to construct new works, and to pay the proportionate cost of the works that have already been constructed. So if this plan is carried out, money will be available and paid into the reclamation fund to reimburse that fund for the proportionate share of the works already built. Let us suppose, for example, that there are now 70,000 acres served under the existing project, to which the whole cost is charged. When these 40,000 acres in the mesa unit are added to the entire project, then four-elevenths of the cost of the works heretofore constructed will be charged to this new unit and paid for in cash.

Mr. BORLAND. The only difference between this plan that the gentleman has evolved and the present reclamation law is that under the present law we retain some sort of a lien on the land for the cost of the project paid in 20 annual payments, and under this it is equal to the purchase price.

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes. That is the plan.

Mr. BORLAND. The Government sells the land and the purchase price received goes into the project. But suppose the Government sells a portion, say, 25 or 40 per cent, of the available public land in the 40,000 acres on the mesa. In doing so it pledges its faith to this portion that it will construct the auxiliary work. Suppose there is not a ready market for the remaining 60 or 75 per cent, how is the auxiliary work to be constructed?

Mr. HAYDEN. If the Government does not receive enough money to entirely construct the works, then the money is to be returned to the people who bid, and nothing is accomplished.

Mr. BORLAND. Does the gentleman contemplate that one sale is going to dispose of the whole 40,000 acres?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; one sale should be all that is required.

Mr. BORLAND. Within the limited time?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; within six months after the Secretary of the Interior estimates the cost and announces that the land is for sale, and if he does not get money enough to do the work all the money so far paid in is to be returned.

Mr. BORLAND. Is that in the bill?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. Where is it?

Mr. HAYDEN. In section 2:

> In case the bids for the lands shall not aggregate a sufficient amount within six months from the time fixed for the filing of bids to meet the probable cost as announced, all deposits shall be returned.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman is confident that the land will find a ready market.

Mr. HAYDEN. I am.

Mr. BORLAND. I have seen the land. I realize that it is supposed to be good for citrus fruit.

Mr. HAYDEN. It is, and within eight hours' ride on the railroad of the great citrus-fruit country of southern California.

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; and quite in demand for oranges. Let me ask the gentleman why is it that he places the limit at 160 acres to each purchaser?

Mr. HAYDEN. That is the limit fixed in the reclamation law.

Mr. BORLAND. But that is subject to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HAYDEN. And so it is in this bill, not to exceed 160 acres. The gentleman will find that in line 7, page 1:

> And sell, in tracts of not more than 160 acres to any one purchaser.

Mr. BORLAND. Does the gentleman think that under that the Secretary can offer it in tracts of 40 acres?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; in tracts of 5 acres, 20 acres, or 40 acres.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman will realize that heretofore there has been a great temptation for a man to take up more land for irrigation than he could profitably work.

Mr. HAYDEN. The thought of the committee was that in selling the lands close to the town of Yuma and the railroad that such lands would bring a greater price if divided into small tracts. Lands at a greater distance, down by the Mexican border, might be sold in tracts as large as 160 acres, but that is all within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. BORLAND. I think the gentleman is not quite accurate about that. I doubt whether the language "not to exceed 160 acres to any one person" leaves it in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. It might be claimed that the purchaser had the right to buy any number of acres up to 160.

Mr. HAYDEN. So far as I know, it is the intention of the Interior Department to sell much of this land in small tracts. If the gentleman thinks it would improve the bill to add the words "within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior," I shall not object.

Mr. BORLAND. I think it would. I want to say to the gentleman in charge of the bill that, in my judgment, this may be an isolated case where his plan will work. It will work if the gentleman is right in saying that the bidders are ready to take approximately the whole 40,000 acres.

Mr. HAYDEN. I think it will work well on this project.

Mr. BORLAND. What is going to be the attitude of the bidders in case the gentleman is disappointed and the project does not work?

Mr. HAYDEN. Then they will have their money paid back to them.

Mr. BORLAND. I want it made very clear. I do not want it started as a reclamation project and have the faith of the Government pledged to its continuation.

Mr. HAYDEN. The Government is not bound to continue the work. To make it clear that the Government is not obligated to do that we state that if enough money is not received the amount collected shall be returned. And we state further that when the purchasers or owners do agree to make payments for the reclamation of their land they shall pay the total actual cost of the new work, if it is in excess of the estimated cost, and the proportionate cost per acre of the work previously constructed and available for the land.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, we are under obligation to build a large number of reclamation projects, and such money as is available ought to be devoted to completing those projects already begun, but it seems to me that if these people are locally able to take care of this situation they ought to have an opportunity to try it. With the assurance of the gentleman from Arizona that if the scheme failed they will have no demand on the reclamation fund to continue it, I think they ought to try it. I shall not object.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Arizona as to the value of the land involved in this transaction?

Mr. HAYDEN. It is absolutely valueless without water. With water it is valuable citrus-fruit land.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Who built the canal to which reference is made?

Mr. HAYDEN. The canal from which water will be pumped has been constructed by the United States Reclamation Service.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The Government furnishes the capital for this enterprise of 40,000 acres?

Mr. HAYDEN. No; the purchasers of these lands advance all the money.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But the Government puts up the land as a basis for the entire operation.

Mr. HAYDEN. Of course, if there was no land, there could not be an irrigation project.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What would be the value of the land after it was irrigated?

Mr. HAYDEN. It is worth the cost of reclamation at least, which I imagine will be about $100 an acre.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Four hundred thousand dollars? I did not hear accurately.

Mr. HAYDEN. Four million dollars.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Four million dollars is the estimated value of the land when it is properly irrigated?

Mr. HAYDEN. When it is properly irrigated, cultivated, and the purchasers have expended their money and time upon it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But the Government furnishes the basis of that investment by contributing the land? That is what I want to know.

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Arizona asks unanimous consent to substitute the bill S. 5718, of similar tenor, for the House bill and to consider the Senate bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The bill has been read. The Clerk will read the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 4, strike out the following language: "That appurtenant water rights for lands in private ownership may be sold for not to exceed 160 acres to any one person, at a price which shall not be less than the highest price per acre paid for public land sold under the provisions of this act, payment thereof to be made under the same terms as for public land under the provisions of section 2," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That appurtenant water rights for lands in private ownership may be sold for not to exceed 160 acres to any one person at a price equal to the estimated cost per acre of the works to be constructed plus the proportionate cost per acre of the works previously constructed and available for the lands if any there be, payment to be made under the same terms as for public land under the provisions of section 2."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, lines 23 and 24, strike out the words "or have declared his intention to become such citizen."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee). The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, after the word "land," insert: "Provided, That any person who has made an entry which is now valid and subsisting, or who has a preference right to make entry for any irrigable land embraced within the limits of the auxiliary project, may purchase said land at the price of $2.50 per acre and shall be subject to the same payments for the irrigation works as is required of persons holding private lands under the provisions of section 1 hereof: Provided further, That the purchasers or owners of the land to be irrigated under said auxiliary reclamation project shall also agree to pay to the United States the total actual cost of the works of said auxiliary reclamation project in the event that the actual cost of said works shall exceed the estimated cost thereof.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 8, after the word "purchaser," insert the words "in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman mean to say that he is willing to give the Secretary of the Interior authority to sell more than 160 acres of this land to one person?

Mr. BORLAND. No; that is not the intention. The intention is to give him discretion to sell in tracts of less than 160 acres each. I am not at all clear that I have reached that purpose.

Mr. MANN. This authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to prescribe tracts of less than 160 acres now, or of not more than 160 acres. The gentleman's amendment will provide not more than 160 acres, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, which would allow him to sell 10,000 acres in one tract. As the bill is now, this is authority to grant not more than 160 acres, and he can make it 40 acres or 10 acres, and I suppose very often it will be 40 or 80 acres.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, it struck me that the Secretary of the Interior would be authorized to receive bids from these private individuals for any sized tract up to 160 acres, but that language did not vest in the Secretary of the Interior the right to offer the land in tracts of less size, but authorized him to accept bids up to that sized tracts. What the gentleman has spoken of is what we desire to accomplish.

Mr. MANN. I take it that this is what will be done, though the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] may know better than I in that respect. The Secretary sets aside certain of these lands, and will indicate the size of the tracts which will be sold. That is the authority given him here, but in any case he must not sell more than 160 acres to an individual.

Mr. HAYDEN. That, I understand, is the purpose of the department.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman could obtain his purpose by an amendment along these lines: After the word "tract" insert the language "of varying size, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, but of not more than 160 acres to any one purchaser."

Mr. BORLAND. I had that in mind.

Mr. MANN. I think that is exactly what this means.

Mr. BORLAND. I was going to insert there, after the word "tracts," the words "that he may determine," so as to make it read:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to set apart any lands in the State of Arizona—and sell in tracts he may determine, of not more than 160 acres—

And so forth—

And so forth.

Mr. MANN. After all, that is what the original language means.

Mr. BORLAND. I think it is well to put it in there, because the temptation is always to bid for the largest amount of land that the Government can be induced to sell.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to amend my amendment and to offer in its place the following.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment and offer another. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "tracts," insert the words "of such size as he may determine," so that the line as amended will read: "and sell in tracts of such size as he may determine, of not more than 160 acres," etc.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAYDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 14825) was, by unanimous consent, laid on the table.

UNCLAIMED BANK DEPOSITS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16070) to dispose of unclaimed bank deposits in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

BALANCE DUE LOYAL CREEK INDIANS, ETC.

The next business on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9326) to pay the balance due the Loyal Creek Indians on the award made by the Senate on the 16th day of February, 1903.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill remain on the calendar without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

REPUBLIC COAL CO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was S. J. Res. 50, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell the coal deposits in and under certain public lands to the Republic Coal Co., a corporation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. HILLIARD. Mr. Speaker, I am disposed to object, but I reserve the right to object.

Mr. STOUT. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman reserves the right to object. Mr. Speaker, I desire to explain the purpose of this little joint resolution for the benefit of the gentleman from Colorado and others who may be interested. The joint resolution provides, in brief, that the Republic Coal Co., which is a subsidiary company of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad Co., may lease 640 acres of this land. This joint resolution provides for a greater amount of land than that, but I have an amendment which I propose to introduce which will cut it down to 640 acres, making it the same size tract as any association of private individuals can take up under the present law.

As we all know when the original railroads were built through that western country a number of them were given vast tracts of coal lands and others had opportunities to acquire great quantities of coal lands at very reasonable figures or at no figure at all. When the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad was built through from the Missouri River to the Pacific coast all the avenues for the acquisition of coal lands by railroads had been closed. The only way that they could get coal lands was to purchase them from their competitors and their competitors were naturally very loath to sell to any railroad company. This company finally did get control of 640 acres of land. It expended $850,000 to $1,000,000 in the development of that coal. That is the only source of coal between the Missouri River and the Pacific coast, and naturally that little tract of coal land has now been exhausted, and this bill gives them the privilege of leasing—it was originally sale and purchase—but it is a lease upon terms to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior. This additional 640 acres of land immediately joins that which they have about worked out. Now, the facts are these: This coal is of low quality steam coal. We are compelled to use it in the section of the country where I reside. We get coal from this little camp where this mine is located. This railroad company, if it can not get coal from its own mine, will be compelled to purchase coal from independent mines of which there are three or four in the camp. That will necessarily, as it has done this year, produce a coal famine in that part of the State. My own town, a little city of 8,000 people, has been face to face with a coal famine for the last five months, and I think this would relieve the situation a good deal. At least this railroad company could get its coal and permit these independent companies to use their entire output for the supply of domestic needs. I can see no possible objection to this bill in any sense of the word. It is not giving this railroad company any special advantage because, as I say, any four citizens, the gentleman from Colorado, two other gentleman, and myself, could go there and take this land under very much more advantageous conditions than the railroad company is permitted under this bill, but we would not do it for the reason that the coal is 350 feet deep and it would cost, as competent engineers have reported, $300,000 to put down a shaft so it would produce in paying quantities. The railroad has its machinery in there. Its shafts and tunnels are right there. It has $850,000 worth of machinery ready to work and it can get out this coal more economically than it can be extracted by any other corporation or individual under these conditions. The fact that the railroad company has got to have coal, the fact if it does not get it in this manner it has got to purchase and thereby inflict a hardship upon the communities near the property, and perhaps 150,000 people around there are supplied from this camp, I think makes it in the interest of public policy that this measure should become the law, and in the light of this statement I trust the gentleman from Colorado, who is a man from the West and understands the conditions out there, will see fit to withdraw his objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. HILLIARD. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much I am not able to come to the conclusion of my distinguished friend from Montana [Mr. STOUT], who is so persuasive that if this land were mine I would quickly give it to the railroad company. But it is not mine, and I am familiar with the West. I know how the railroad companies have grabbed all the coal lands out there. The fact that the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad did not get as much as the Union Pacific, as the gentleman states, is no reason why it should now get some land upon terms upon which neither he nor I could get land out there. This is simply an act for the purpose of giving the railroad a chance to get the land which neither the gentleman nor myself could get under the terms proposed to be given to the railroad company.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

Mr. HILLIARD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado objects.

FLANDREAU BAND OF SIOUX INDIANS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13165) authorizing the Flandreau Band of Sioux Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk will report the next bill.

RECLAMATION OF ARID LANDS IN NEVADA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2519) to encourage the reclamation of certain arid lands in the State of Nevada, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request that this bill be committed to the Committee on Public Lands. I do that with the consent of the author of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Clerk will report the next bill.

TREATY OF WASHINGTON.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 649) making appropriations for expenses incurred under the treaty of Washington.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

CLAIMS OF STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill H. R. 3654, to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and adjust certain claims of the State of North Carolina.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. POU. Mr Speaker——

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a short explanation of this bill. The various States of the Union made contributions providing for the military indebtedness of the Government in prosecuting the War of 1812. All of the States which made these contributions have had a settlement with the Government except the State of North Carolina. Now, I do not know whether the Government owes the State of North Carolina anything, or whether my State owes the Government. But the matter ought to be ascertained, and this bill only provides that the accounts shall be audited. There is no appropriation carried in the bill, and the matter ought to be settled at some time or other.

Mr. MANN. There is no appropriation carried in this bill. If there is, it is buried in the claim, and it would require an appropriation, of course, in a deficiency bill, if the claim is approved. It authorizes the auditing of a claim, which claim, when audited, is paid as a matter of course without controversy through a deficiency bill.

Mr. POU. I did not understand that there was any appropriation. It was not so intended, and I am willing to have it amended.

Mr. MANN. There is no appropriation directed, but it authorizes the auditing of a claim. These claims when audited are paid through the deficiency bill, just like judgments against the Government, without controversy and without consideration except just nominally.

Mr. POU. I am willing to have the bill amended.

Mr. MANN. And I am not saying that is an improper course.

Mr. POU. In view of the fact that a similar settlement has been had with almost every other State, and, I believe, with every other State, it would seem that North Carolina ought to have its account audited.

Mr. MANN. North Carolina has been so modest and has held itself under such self-restraint that it has waited for more than 100 years to present this claim. Is not the gentleman afraid of its losing its self-restraint?

Mr. POU. I shrug my shoulders, too.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I took occasion last session to go over this bill and the report very carefully, and also the copy of the brief prepared by the attorney for the claim in this case. There is a great difference between the claim of North Carolina, as set forth in this case, and the claims of the other States. I shall be constrained to object to its consideration, but have no objection to the bill retaining its place on the calendar, if the gentleman will make the request.

Mr. POU. I am much obliged to the gentleman for granting that small favor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. DYER. I think the gentleman from North Carolina wanted the bill to remain on the calendar without prejudice.

Mr. POU. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

RETIREMENT PAY OF JUDGES IN TERRITORIES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11152) to provide retirement pay in certain cases for judges of the United States district courts in the Territories.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. DYER. I object.

TABLET IN MEMORY OF COL. DAVID DU B. GAILLARD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I will ask to have the bill passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BATTLEFIELD OF GUILFORD COURT HOUSE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 8229) to establish a national military park at the battle field of Guilford Courthouse.

The title of the bill was read.

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ABANDONMENT OF PINEY BRANCH ROAD.

The title of the bill was read.

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

METROPOLITAN POLICE, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The title of the bill was read.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] has charge of this bill, and he is necessarily absent from the floor for a moment. I ask unanimous consent that it be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DONATION OF LAND TO THE CITY OF ST. AUGUSTINE, FLA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3699) to donate to the city of St. Augustine, Fla., for park purposes the tract of land known as the Powderhouse Lot.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. STAFFORD. I do.

Mr. SEARS. I was wondering whether, if I were to move an amendment on page 2, line 5, after the word "purposes," making it read "or if the Government should decide to use said lands for public buildings or military purposes," that would not meet the gentleman's objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will state to the gentleman, as I said when this bill was last under consideration, that my objection is fundamental in that I believe it should not be the policy of the Government, when it has no further need of public land, to donate it to a municipality or to the public. The policy pursued in the case of public buildings no longer needed for public-building purposes, where a municipality wishes to take over the building, has been for the Government to sell it to the municipality at a reasonable price.

Mr. SEARS. If the Government prefers to take this back, should not the Government be allowed to do it, and in the meantime let the municipality improve it?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am perfectly willing to give the preference to the municipality, but the land should not be given away.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Wisconsin yield for a moment?

Mr. STAFFORD. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman taken into consideration the fact that this is the oldest settlement in the United States and that always we "young people" owe a little to age? I am reaching that period myself where I sometimes think some people owe a little to age, although I am afraid I have had very little respect myself at times for age in the past.

Here is the oldest city in the country, the oldest settlement in the country, filled with history and romance. It never has asked very much from the Government, although it has contributed largely to the people of all the country through its history and through the romances connected with it.

They can not afford to buy the land, probably. I suppose there are more people go to St. Augustine because of the age of the city and its historical connections than go to any other locality in the United States. I went there myself once or twice just because of that fact. We spend a considerable amount of money in our parks, national parks, and in our local parks. We really expend the money for the benefit of the sightseers. We spend a very large sum of money in Washington—not as large as I would like to see spent—for the benefit of those who come here. We spend nothing in St. Augustine, the father of the country in a way, the mother of the country in a way—the beginning of the country.

Why not, in deference to what they are doing for our visitors who go there, give them a little land which is of no value to us, but which they will fix up and make of value to everybody who goes there? [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the appeal made by the gentleman is quite potent, and yet I can not see any reason why we should make any exception in dealing with this city. If our tourists go there, certainly they go there with their money to contribute to the business and support of the city. As I said on other occasions, I do not see any reason why we should not give the preference to this municipality, but I can not see any reason why we should make an exception in this case. Therefore I object.

Mr. SEARS. If I should offer an amendment to the effect that the land should revert to the Government, will the gentleman object?

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection to its going over for two weeks. In the meantime I will give it my further consideration.

Mr. SEARS. I thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] for his expression in behalf of this bill, and in the meantime, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LANDS WITHIN THE BLACKFEET INDIAN RESERVATION, MONT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 793) modifying and amending the act providing for the disposal of the surplus unallotted lands within the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, Mont.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky objects. The bill is stricken from the calendar.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be permitted to remain on the calendar without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma objects. The bill will be stricken from the calendar.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may retain its place on the calendar and be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ACTIONS UNDER INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16733) to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as heretofore amended, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as heretofore amended, be further amended by inserting between the seventh and eighth paragraphs thereof the following paragraph:

"All actions by carriers subject to this act for the recovery of all or any part of the schedule charges for any service subject to this act shall be begun within three years from the time the cause of action accrued, and not after: Provided, however, That any such action may be brought at any time prior to January 1, 1917, if such action would not then have been barred by some statute of limitations except for this act. Nothing in this paragraph shall be construed as changing in any way the duty of a carrier to promptly demand and collect its lawful charges or as relieving it from any liability or penalty for failure so to do."

SEC. 2. That the last sentence of the second paragraph of section 16 of said act to regulate commerce reading as follows: "All complaints for the recovery of damages shall be filed with the commission within two years from the time the cause of action accrues, and not after, and a petition for the enforcement of an order for the payment of money shall be filed in the circuit court or State court within one year from the date of the order, and not after," shall be amended to read as follows:

"All complaints for the recovery of damages shall be filed with the commission within two years from the time the cause of action accrues, and not after, unless the cause of action shall have accrued in respect of or in connection with some service subject to this act done or undertaken to be done by a carrier subject to this act, for which the carrier shall have begun action for the recovery from the complainant of all or any part of the schedule charges after said two years shall have expired or within 90 days before the expiration of said two years, in either of which cases his complaint may be filed with the commission within 90 days after such action shall have been begun by the carrier, and not after.

"A petition for the enforcement of an order for the payment of money shall be filed in the district court or State court within one year from the expiration of the time limit set for the payment in the order, and not after."

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, neither the author of this bill nor the member of the committee who reported it is present at this moment. Three separate measures were introduced and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and were by that Committee submitted to the Interstate Commerce Commission. The result is the bill before you. The Interstate Commerce Commission has in its last three or four annual reports, as I understand it, recommended provisions along these lines. In the present statute I understand there is no limitation as to time of the right of the carrier to bring its action for the recovery of undercharges. This fixes a limit of three years on claims of that kind. The testimony before the committee was that there were many cases instituted by common carriers on claims for undercharges after the lapse of three, four, five, and even six years. This will remedy that evil.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce [Mr. ADAMSON] has stepped out of the Hall temporarily. He is very anxious that this bill shall be passed at this time. As the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] says, it has been recommended by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and was unanimously reported by the committee, and I believe it ought to be enacted.

Mr. STEENERSON. I should like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin a question. I move to strike out the last word. From the reading of the bill as I caught it, it fixed the date of January 1, 1917, which date has already passed. Should not that be changed?

Mr. ESCH. I move to amend that by making it March 4, 1917. The bill was reported to the House prior to the date set forth in that paragraph.

Mr. STEENERSON. Might it not be better to make it March 5, so as to have it after the passage of the act?

Mr. ESCH. I will act on that suggestion. I move to amend by striking out in line 2, page 2, the words "January 1" and inserting in lieu thereof "March 5."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 2, in line 2, by striking out "January 1" and inserting "March 5."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] is as well posted on matters of this sort as anyone in the House, but I am inclined to think the gentleman overlooks the purpose of this provision. A bill of this sort ought to be explained. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin is not the amendment he wants to propose. This bill undertakes to limit the time within which a suit can be brought by a railroad company for the recovery of certain schedule charges, and provides for a limitation of time within which such action shall be commenced—within three years from the time the cause of action accrued. I believe that that is a reduction of the time, although I am not certain. Then follows a provision, provided, however, regardless of the limitation of three years, that the action may be brought before January 1, 1917. That is for the purpose of not cutting out anybody.

Now, if this bill becomes a law, in all probability it will not become a law before March 4, and it would be useless to give the right to bring an action by March 5 which could not already be brought within the three-year limitation, because no attorney, agile though he might be, would be able to get his clients into court by March 5.

Mr. ESCH. I am willing to accept any suggestion that the gentleman may make.

Mr. MANN. Am I not correct about that?

Mr. ESCH. Yes; I think the gentleman's point is well taken.

Mr. STEENERSON. They ought to have 60 days, anyway.

Mr. ESCH. Of course the President might not sign this by the 5th of March.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; this is the short session, and he must sign it before March 5 or it will not become a law. If you are going to extend the right to bring the action contemplated, you ought to give a substantial time within which the action may be brought. I think this bill was drawn by the Interstate Commerce Commission. I know they are interested in its passage, it being designed to rectify discrepancies between the rights of the railroad companies and of the shippers.

Mr. ADAMSON. The bill was drawn in conformity with their wishes.

Mr. MANN. The date was fixed as January 1, 1917, when the bill was introduced in June, 1916. If I were changing it, I should fix it at July 1, 1917.

Mr. ADAMSON. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois. I think that ought to be done.

Mr. ESCH. I accept that amendment.

The SPEAKER. What is the amendment?

Mr. ESCH. Strike out "January" in line 2, page 2, and insert "July."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] withdraws his pro forma amendment, and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] withdraws his amendment and offers another, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 2, strike out "January" and insert "July."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

NATIONAL SOCIETY UNITED STATES DAUGHTERS OF 1812.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was House joint resolution 230, authorizing the National Society of United States Daughters of 1812 to file its historical material in the Smithsonian Institution and to make annual report to the secretary thereof.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I notice from the report of Secretary Walcott that he criticizes the general purpose of this bill, claiming that the Institution has not file space to take care of the archives of this organization. What was the moving cause of the committee in reporting this bill in opposition to the adverse report by the secretary?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I think if the gentleman from Wisconsin will read the letter of Mr. Walcott more carefully he will find that his objection is not on the ground that there is not sufficient room, but on the ground that it would cause a little more editorial work for the officials of the Institution.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I might reply in kind, that if the gentleman from Michigan would read the letter more carefully he would not make that retort. I call the gentleman's attention to that portion of the letter upon which I predicated my statement:

I desire further to state that the Institution has not the facilities to provide exhibition or storage space for the great mass of books, manuscripts, and other material which might be expected were a number of societies authorized to deposit their collections here.

Mr. MAPES. Yes; he says, "A number of societies being authorized to deposit their collections." We are only asking for one. Mr. Walcott is anticipating that a lot more will ask for the same opportunity. I will say to the gentleman that the language of this bill contains a clause which is very similar to the language in the bill incorporating the Society of the Daughters of the Revolution. For some reason, when the charter incorporating the Daughters of 1812 was passed, it did not contain the provision that is in the other charter allowing the Daughters of the Revolution to file their valuable historical material with the Smithsonian Institution. This is a similar provision, giving the Daughters of 1812 the same right which the Daughters of the American Revolution now have.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I may be in error, but I will ask whether the Daughters of the American Revolution have not the general authority to file their historical matter in the Smithsonian Institution if the secretary deems it of sufficient historical importance? I direct the gentleman's attention to the last paragraph in the secretary's letter, in which he says:

I may add in this connection, however, that the Smithsonian Institution is already authorized by law to receive collections for the United States National Museum from any source and will be glad to place on exhibition any objects which are found to be of sufficient historical importance to warrant such action.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the president of this organization is a constituent of mine, Mrs. Robert Hall Wiles, a woman very active in doing historical work, especially in connection with the Daughters of 1812. The gentleman will recall that it was this organization which a year or two years ago was active in connection with the return of a certain Confederate flag to Louisiana, upon which we heard considerable eloquent discussion in the House.

The Smithsonian Institution is, I think, authorized to receive almost any kind of donation that it wants to. I would not be in favor of permanently loading up the Smithsonian Institution Building with old junk of any kind, but here is an organization that is collecting now some very valuable material concerning the War of 1812, which, by the way, just at present is of particular interest in view of our relations with European countries at this time. They have no place in which to preserve this information which they acquire. In the course of time we are going to construct in Washington a hall of archives. I do not know what we are going to put into it. It is in process—I will not say of incubation, because it was incubated some time ago—but there is a movement of some kind. Probably things of this sort will be put in the archives in the end, but the Smithsonian Institution now has a considerable amount of room which may be profitably used for storing any of these documents, if later it may be found that they should be moved away from the Smithsonian Institution.

I think these ladies are doing a very good service to the country, both the Daughters of 1812, the Daughters of the American Revolution, the Daughters of the Confederacy, and various other daughters in collecting information. I feel certain of one thing, that they are doing a great deal more good to our country, to our people, and to womanhood than those misguided, unfortunate-minded people who are engaged now in patrolling the White House. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield? I would like to ask the gentleman a question as to the amount of editorial work that is purposed to be imposed on the Institution by the deposit of their various reports year after year.

Mr. MANN. I may say that the editorial work is very little. The reports of the Daughters of the Revolution are now transmitted to Congress. These people will make a report to the Smithsonian Institution. Of course, if it contained a great mass of documents the editorial work would be in cutting them out in making the report to us; that is all. There is no writing to be done, none that calls for editorial work. It is like we receive reports here, sometimes ordering a part of them printed and a part not; it is a very simple process.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I am swayed by the statement of the gentleman from Illinois, who has served as a Regent of the Smithsonian Institution for a number of years, and I will take his judgment that it will not cumber up the archives against the judgment of the secretary.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

House joint resolution 230, authorizing the National Society United States Daughters of 1812 to file its historical material in the Smithsonian Institution and to make annual reports to the secretary thereof.

Resolved, etc., That the National Society United States Daughters of 1812 is authorized to report its proceedings annually to the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, and that the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution shall communicate to Congress such portions thereof as he may deem of national interest and importance. The Regents of the Smithsonian Institution are authorized to permit said National Society United States Daughters of 1812 to deposit its collection of manuscripts, books, pamphlets, and other material for history in the Smithsonian Institution or in the National Museum, at their discretion, upon such conditions and under such rules as they shall prescribe.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MAPES, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

UNALLOTTED LANDS OF CREEK INDIANS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 114) withholding from allotment the unallotted lands or public domain of the Creek Nation or Tribe of Indians, and providing for the sale thereof, and for other purposes.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, at the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY], that this resolution be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES IN OKLAHOMA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 108) to confer upon the superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma the authority now conferred by law upon the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior respecting lands allotted to the enrolled members of the Five Civilized Tribes and their individual moneys.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have received letters from the representative of the Indian Rights Association protesting strongly against this bill, and from some others interested in the bill. I am strongly opposed to the bill, and I do not see any purpose to be obtained in keeping it upon the calendar.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill that affects the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma. I venture the assertion, and I make the statement now on the floor of this House, that there is not a single Indian in Oklahoma who is opposed to this bill; and if the gentleman has any letters from any Indians, certainly they are from Indians outside of the State of Oklahoma. I know of no Indian and of no white man who is not in the employment of the United States Government who is opposed to this bill. It is the only bill that has been introduced into this House that meets with the unanimous approval in the State of Oklahoma of every person, white, black, and red.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, replying to the gentleman's statement, I know and I assert it on my own knowledge that the representative of the Indian Rights Association in this city, Mr. Brosius, is strongly opposed to this bill. I have received letters from a former member of the Committee on Indian Affairs protesting against the bill, and I have received a letter from a person who has Indian blood in him in my own city protesting against the bill. For these reasons, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects to the bill going over without prejudice, and it will be stricken from the calendar.

DENISON COAL CO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1093) to permit the Denison Coal Co. to relinquish certain lands embraced in its Choctaw and Chickasaw coal lease, and to include within said lease other lands within the segregated coal area.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I reserve my objection; yes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a short statement for the benefit of the gentleman from Kentucky. This provides for the taking up of some lands by S. P. Aucker, of the Denison Coal Co., who had originally a coal lease under the firm name of W. C. Fordyce. The land upon which the lease was taken was found to be barren of coal. We passed an act on July 25, 1910, which attempted to rectify that error and to give the man land which had coal underneath it; but on account of an error in the description of the bill, which was introduced by me, the description having been furnished me by the Indian Bureau, the land was not given contiguously. A part of it was described in section 30 when it should have been described in section 32, so that the department could not issue a lease to this man. This poor fellow has paid some nine or ten thousand dollars royalty in advance, which should be applied upon the coal when it is mined; the coal when it is mined will, of course, be distributed among the people there, and the royalties above the nine or ten thousand dollars already paid will be paid into the Treasury for the benefit of the Indians. Subsequent to the time referred to before—I think it was on March 3, 1913—an act was passed which attempted again to rectify the error, but unfortunately that act related only to those people who were at that time operating coal. This gentleman could not operate coal upon his leasehold, because there was no coal there; it was barren of coal. All others in the same situation as this gentleman and his associates have been taken care of, but this poor fellow is left there with his money paid into the Treasury, and he can not get any coal and the Indian can not get any further royalty.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how long does the gentleman think it will take to consider this bill in the House? Is the consideration of it nearly through?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. So far as I am concerned; yes.

Mr. MANN. I do not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act of Congress approved June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L., p. 832), entitled "An act granting to Savanna Coal Co. right to acquire additional acreage to its existing coal lease in the Choctaw Nation, Pittsburg County, Okla., and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to permit the Denison Coal Co. to relinquish the lands embraced in its existing Choctaw and Chickasaw coal lease, all of which lands have been demonstrated to be not valuable for coal, and to include within the said lease in lieu thereof the following-described lands which are within the segregated coal area and unleased: The southwest quarter of the northeast quarter, and northeast quarter of the northwest quarter, and south half of the northwest quarter, and north half of the southwest quarter, and southwest quarter of the southwest quarter, all in section 6, township 3 north, range 14 east; and south half of the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter, and east half of the southeast quarter, and south half of the northwest quarter of the southeast quarter, and southwest quarter of the southeast quarter, and southeast quarter of the southwest quarter, and south half of the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter, all in section 1, township 3 north, range 13 east; and northwest quarter of the northeast quarter, and north half of the northwest quarter, and southwest quarter of the northwest quarter, all in section 12, township 3 north, range 13 east; and east half of the northeast quarter, and south half of the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter, and southwest quarter of the northeast quarter, and northwest quarter of the southeast quarter, and southeast quarter of the northwest quarter, and north half of the southwest quarter, all in section 11, township 3 north, range 13 east, 960 acres, more or less: Provided, That if the surface of said lands has not been sold in accordance with the provisions of the act of February 19, 1912 (37 Stat. L., p. 67), the said Denison Coal Co. shall have the right to use only so much of the surface of said lands as may be reasonably necessary for the purpose of carrying on mining operations, not to exceed 5 per cent of such surface, the number, location, and extent of the tracts to be so used to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and said company shall purchase the surface of the tracts so used for mining operations in accordance with section 2 of said act: Provided further, That should the surface of said lands have been sold in accordance with the provisions of said act of Congress approved February 19, 1912, the said Denison Coal Co. shall acquire such portions of the surface as may be reasonably necessary for prospecting or for the conduct of mining operations as provided in section 3 of said act: Provided further, That the said Denison Coal Co. shall pay all amounts due and unpaid under its existing lease before the said company shall be permitted to include the above-described lieu lands in the lease, and that all moneys which shall have been paid by the said company under its lease as advance royalties shall be credited on the royalty on production from the lieu lands in accordance with the terms of the lease."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SALARY OF UNITED STATES DISTRICT ATTORNEY, RHODE ISLAND.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10110) to increase the salary of the United States district attorney for the district of Rhode Island.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I wonder why it is that all of this legislation, not only as regards United States district attorneys, clerks, and marshals, goes to the Committee on the Judiciary, as well as legislation in regard to the salaries of those in the Department of the Interior and clerks in the War Department and the Navy Department. This bill is without the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Judiciary. It belongs to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice. We have had a good deal of talk here in the last three weeks about the increase in the salaries of the various offices, and it is always made the effort to put them through on an appropriation bill as a rider, or by referring them to committees that have not jurisdiction of that subject. Now, I want to call the attention of the House to this bill. This is the first clean opportunity I have seen for the last three weeks in which to present this question. Subdivision 36 of Rule XI provides—

The examination of the accounts and expenditures of the several departments of the Government and the manner of keeping the same; the economy, justness, and correctness of such expenditures; their conformity with appropriation laws; the proper application of public money; the security of the Government against unjust and extravagant demands; retrenchment; enforcement of the payment of moneys due to the United States; the economy and accountability of public officers; the abolishment of useless offices; the reduction or increase of pay of officers, shall all be subjects within the jurisdiction of the nine standing committees on the public expenditures in the several departments, as follows.

Now, this bill is for the increase of the salary of the district attorney and ought to have gone to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice. Presumably and possibly under the rule laid down that after a bill has been referred to a wrong committee and a report given by that committee and it is on the calendar it is too late to object, but I wonder whether the author of this bill will object to unanimous consent to rerefer this bill to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Speaker, answering the gentleman from California, I would not have any objection to it being referred to that committee were it not for the fact that the matter has been pending for so long a time that to refer it to that committee would be to participate in an act of delayed justice.

Mr. RAKER. This matter has been in my mind for some three months. I have sat here on the floor of this House when hours upon hours of this House's time have been taken up with increases of salaries in various departments, the jurisdiction being either assumed by the Committee on Appropriations, the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, or the Committee on Agriculture. Now, the Committees on the Judiciary, on Appropriations, on the Post Office and Post Roads, and on Agriculture already have more legislation before them than they can attend to, of vast importance; with 11 committees of the House fully equipped with clerks and assistants, without a meeting, without work, and without attention, and important matters relating to the jurisdiction of each one of those committees, the opportunity is presented so clearly in this bill where there can be no possibility of question as to jurisdiction, I think the author of the bill ought to send it to that committee having jurisdiction of this matter, not to go into this one subject, but go into all kindred subjects to which this bill relates, not only the salaries of United States district attorneys, but the salaries of marshals, the salaries of clerks, and the salaries of commissioners, and the salaries of clerks in particular where they charge fees instead of getting a lump salary, and other reform legislation in regard to this matter that would give a litigant an opportunity to present his case to the court without being swamped with expenses before he can get before the court for a final hearing. In other words, the law is such that a litigant with little means is absolutely bankrupted by the man with a large sum of money before he can get into these courts, and I hope the gentleman in this instance, while I am in favor of this legislation, will see to it that the committee having jurisdiction of this bill will meet so there will be something definite before them; that the gentleman will yield and permit it to go to that committee so that they may have an opportunity to meet and consider all the conditions that bear upon this question.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Now, does not the gentleman think it would be a very logical thing for me to do to have it referred to any committee, at this time, in order to justify the existence of that committee? Why should I be the vicarious victim of somebody's mistake?

Mr. RAKER. There is no vicarious victim in this matter.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. It is all very well for the gentleman to insist upon having a proper reference of bills hereafter, but he should not make me the vicarious victim of somebody's mistake at this time.

Mr. RAKER. It is not the gentleman from Rhode Island, because my regards of him are of the highest, not only as a gentleman but as a lawyer, as a man, and as a legislator, and one who represents his constituents, always here on the job, and nine-tenths of the time right.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. How does the gentleman know? Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I will yield.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has referred to the rule and quoted from paragraph 36 of Rule XI, part of which reads:

Shall all be subjects within the jurisdiction of the nine standing committees on the public expenditures in the several departments, as follows.

And to show how brilliant and consistent the gentleman from California and his Democratic colleagues are in adopting the rules of the House they say "the nine standing committees as follows" and then enumerate eleven. That is as near as you ever get to the facts.

The SPEAKER. Whatever the reference ought to have been in the beginning, it is too late to raise the question of reference now.

Mr. RAKER. I said that from the decisions.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know how it happens these things are referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. The Chair knows he has found it that way, and he expects to leave it that way. Is there objection?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire why this one district attorney should have his salary increased when all the others are not included. Why do you not make a systematic inquiry as to all United States district attorneys and make a horizontal increase for all those that are clearly entitled to it, if any of them are? I am not going to object. The facts may warrant this increase, but there should be a very clear showing made for singling out this one man.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. The facts as examined by the Committee on the Judiciary bore out any statement I have made in reference to the bill, that the district attorney of Rhode Island was not proportionately paid; that is, considering the salary of the other district attorneys, his salary was not equal.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. How much does he now get?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Two thousand five hundred dollars, and he gives his whole time and attention to it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. How much do the other district attorneys get—I mean generally speaking?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I will give that.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. How much more business does the district attorney of Rhode Island have to perform than the other district attorneys throughout the country?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I have the whole thing here.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Are these facts in the report on the bill?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. The report on the bill?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; does the report on this bill contain the data showing by comparison with the work performed by other district attorneys that this one is clearly entitled to an increase? I doubt the wisdom of this kind of legislation.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Michigan rise?

Mr. CRAMTON. If the time of the House is of any value, I expect to save some of it by saying that I intend to object.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Will the gentleman withhold his objection until I state my reason for the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Briefly; yes. The report, I will say, however, does not carry any of the information and has not the recommendation of the Department of Justice——

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. It has.

Mr. CRAMTON. And I am opposed to this class of legislation.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. It has the recommendation of the Department of Justice.

Mr. CRAMTON. They state that they do not make a specific recommendation.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. They need not make a specific recommendation. We are not splitting hairs on recommendations. The question is whether they recommend it, and they do.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I will.

Mr. DYER. I will say this is a very meritorious bill, in my judgment. I think it has the unanimous report of the Committee on the Judiciary, and there is no question but that the bill ought to pass.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Now, if the gentleman will permit me for a moment. Quoting from the report of the committee, it says:

This bill seeks to increase the salary of the district attorney for the district of Rhode Island from $2,500, which is his present salary, to $3,500. The reasons that influenced the committee to make the recommendation are that the business in connection with the district court of Rhode Island has greatly increased in recent years and much important litigation is now pending in the district; that the district attorney is compelled to devote practically his entire time to the duties of his office, and it appears to the committee that $2,500 is inadequate for a lawyer whose ability and attainment would warrant his appointment to such an important position. Furthermore, the present district judge suggests that the salary should be $4,000. The Department of Justice, however, suggests $3,000. The committee has thought it wise to so amend the bill so as to make the salary $3,500.

And the letters of the district judge and the Department of Justice are appended to the report. And let me say to the gentleman that I wrote the district attorney in order to get more detailed information in support of this measure, and he wrote me under date of December 15, 1916:

Since July 1 the work has not decreased a particle. We are now engaged in a number of matters that tax the utmost capacity of the office, and have as yet been unable to institute all the proceedings that are pending in the office.

The work at present requires practically all the time of the United States attorney and both assistants, and oftentimes it is necessary to have the clerks and attorneys do extensive night work to keep up with the matters on hand.

We have just completed the trial of an important prosecution under the Harrison law, in which we secured the conviction of persons who were the center of the illegal traffic in drugs in this district. The result was due to the very efficient work of Peter C. Cannon in the trial of the case.

This fall the civil work has piled up so that the demands on the office are even greater than during the periods shown on the inclosed reports.

Now, answering the gentleman's questions as to the relative importance of the office and the work done there, I will quote from the annual report of business transacted in the district of Rhode Island for the fiscal year ending July 30, 1916. It says:

In 1916 there were 36 criminal prosecutions begun; 37 civil cases have been commenced.

The May term of the grand jury, which comes in on the fourth Tuesday in May, will have not less than 10 cases for consideration.

There will therefore be between 50 and 60 criminal prosecutions commenced during the fiscal year 1916.

There are pending in the office at the present time approximately 35 matters in which civil suit should be commenced at once.

Some of these cases involve liability for revenue taxes amounting to $2,000,000.

There are also several suits on internal-revenue bonds, which total over $100,000 in amount.

The criminal prosecutions are important and bitterly contested. The cases in several instances involve the determination of new questions of law, and so involve a large amount of work.

The amount of business in the office has practically quadrupled since October, 1914, as an inspection of files of the office will show.

The increased importance of the military and naval posts in Rhode Island and the addition of an immigration station at Providence have all added to business that requires attention.

Since the 1st of January the office has gotten out approximately 425 pages of brief in various law matters before the district court, besides attending to routine matters.

There are 10 or more cases now awaiting argument in which briefs will have to be written. Consequently it is safe to say that it will be necessary to prepare 250 more pages of brief before June 30, 1916, or the end of the fiscal year.

When the amount of time required to examine authorities, etc., is considered, the enormous amount of time and labor required will become evident.

There seems no immediate prospect of a let up. The work as it stands can not be cleaned up within a year by the present office force working eight hours per day.

During the past year everyone in the office has worked, on the average, from 10 to 12 hours a day, and at long periods the men in the office have worked until midnight and after.

Aside from the actual work in preparing cases, etc., there is necessarily considerable executive work required in directing the work of two assistants, two and sometimes three stenographers, and various special agents and accountants.

And I can go on quoting from this report for the benefit of the gentleman who objects, but I trust that my reading so far will silence his objection to letting this bill go through.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object. I am one Member of the House who really believes it is time the House took economy as its watchword. I have been doing a great deal of voting that way, and this is the first time I have had anything to say. While this is a small matter, I think it is typical. The bill comes in without a favorable report from the department. I will read what they say. This is from the Assistant Attorney General:

As compared with other districts, it would seem that $3,000 would be reasonable compensation for the district attorney.

And the committee comes in with a bill for $3,500, $500 more than the department says would be reasonable. It adds:

But the department does not care to make any specific recommendation in the matter.

And the letter from the district judge makes it plain that this district attorney does not give all his time to the duties of the position.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I know he does.

Mr. CRAMTON. But that he is engaged in private practice. He is engaged in private practice; and, furthermore, the report gives no data as to the office.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Will the gentleman yield? May I say to the gentleman——

Mr. STINESS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. STINESS. I ask the gentleman to yield that I may answer his question.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I was gratified when I found the gentleman from Rhode Island had risen in order to enlighten the objector.

Mr. STINESS. I would say, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, that it was my fortune to hold the office of United States district attorney and this office in question from September 1, 1911, to September 15, 1915, until I came to Congress, and I wish to say that the salary is entirely inadequate for the office.

Mr. CRAMTON. But still my friend will admit that they are getting singularly high-grade men in that position? [Laughter.]

Mr. STINESS. The duties of the office necessitate a man giving all his time to them. I gave practically all of my time to them during the three years I was in the office, and during the time I was in office there were a great many prosecutions started, one against the Atlantic National Bank, where now the president is serving a term in State's prison. That case was finished after I left the office.

There have been a large number of prosecutions for fraudulent voting and things of that kind. Assistants have been granted to the office since I left it. The man who succeeded me was a very good Democrat, a very able man. I got out of the office, and I have no reason to withhold my praise for him and his administration of the office.

I do not think that where we spend the amounts of money that we do here in Congress, giving experimental positions large salaries, we can afford in a district like Rhode Island, taking the whole State, to give a pitiful $2,500 to the United States district attorney. You can not get a man qualified for the office to hold it at that salary.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STINESS. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Why does not the Attorney General take up all these salaries throughout the country and make a systematic investigation of them? And if there is a necessity for a raise, why does not the Attorney General make a recommendation for a systematic raise, and raise all of them? Why should we raise only one in a separate bill?

Mr. STINESS. I can not say why the office of the Attorney General does not act. While I was United States attorney I am free to state that the conduct of that office was beyond my comprehension. I want to say in behalf of the man who succeeded me that $2,500 is inadequate for his compensation, and that $3,500 would not be an exorbitant salary. There is no graft in this proposition, and no "pork" of any kind. It is simply to pay a capable man a fair salary.

I hope the objection will not be pressed and that the bill will be passed. [Applause.]

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Speaker, I just wish to answer a question or two about the salaries. In Connecticut, where they have no assistant, the salary is $3,500. In Alabama, Maine, and Vermont it is $3,000, and in Florida it is $3,500. That is the amount recommended in this case.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How much is the salary involved here?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. We are trying to raise it from $2,500 to $3,500.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. For a United States district attorney?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will mention the fact, merely for the information of the House, that during the consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill we found in numerous instances that experts and scientists were being paid $3,000 at the dictum of the Secretary of Agriculture, and on the passage of the grain-grading act and the cotton-futures act it developed in the course of inquiries on the subject, that the Secretary, without direction from Congress, fixed the salaries as high as $3,000 for all sorts of men coming into the service, who unquestionably would not have the professional knowledge or the talent of a man capable of filling the office of United States district attorney.

It seems to me that that ought to appeal to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] and other Members of the House. If the idea is to hold that a Secretary should report a plan for fixing salaries, we might begin with the Secretary of Agriculture, where Congress is now scarcely consulted at all.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not know whether my friend desires to refer this matter to the Secretary of Agriculture or not. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am simply comparing the cases. I do not know anything about the merits of this case at all.

Mr. CRAMTON. This salary was not fixed by the department, but the recommendation from the department, if you are to call it a recommendation, is for a lower salary than we are asked to pass upon here. I know of a woman here in one of the departments performing a work which could not be performed by anybody else in the country—a woman employed in the Treasury Department, who is an expert in deciphering mutilated money, a position of the very highest trust, and she is getting only $1,500 a year, after having been in the employ of the Government for 40 years. Now, I do not propose to consent to have the bill go through here without the necessary data before us, allowing a man to continue in private practice and to raise his salary to $3,500 a year, against the recommendation, as you might call it, of the department under which he serves, and without any data in support of it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will have to object if the gentleman wants to press it.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I wish to ask the gentleman a question.

A MEMBER. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The regular order is, Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan objects.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Will the gentleman accept an amendment from me in the line that the Department of Justice suggests, that it be made $3,000?

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not want to do the man an injustice. We are told positively that this man is worth $3,500 a year. I could not accept that. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I thank the gentleman from Michigan for his magnanimity. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

PAY OF COMPOSITORS AND BOOKBINDERS, GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 6626) to fix the rate of pay for compositors and bookbinders in the Government Printing Office.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana objects, and the bill goes off the calendar.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BOARD OF MANAGERS, NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the resolution (H. J. Res. 244) for the appointment of four members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

The title of the resolution was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas objects.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I shall have to object.

Mr. CANNON. Object absolutely, without permitting any explanation?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I will withhold the objection.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman withdraw his objection?

The SPEAKER. No; he says he will withhold it.

Mr. CANNON. This is a unanimous report from the Committee on Military Affairs. The terms of office of these four people expire, and under the law they continue to hold office until their successors are chosen. There is one of these members who was president of the board of managers. On investigation he was shown to be fearfully short of honesty, and, as the evidence shows, willfully, maliciously, and for his profit, mulcted the post fund to the amount of over $45,000 in worthless securities, and he is still a member of that board. He resigned. I am satisfied from the examination that was given that if he had not resigned he would have been removed as president. Now, it seems to me that with a unanimous report from the Committee on Military Affairs this resolution ought to be considered. That is all I have to say.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. CANNON. By the way, I ought to have stated that the gentleman was then, and I presume is still, a constituent of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

Mr. BORLAND. No; the gentleman is quite wrong about that.

Mr. CANNON. He had his office in the gentleman's district.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman to whom the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] refers was appointed from the State of Kansas.

Mr. DYER. Kansas City, Kans.

Mr. BORLAND. And is still a resident of Kansas City, Kans.; and, if I am not mistaken, he is now off the board. He was a constituent of my colleague [Mr. TAGGART]. I do not know what motive or reason ruled the judgment of the Committee on Military Affairs. I do know that the members whose terms of office expired were two of them Democrats and two of them Republicans. The resolution which is offered here, for some strange reason differing from the ordinary rule, recommends three Republicans and one Democrat, and it does seem to me that a thing like that ought hardly go through this House by unanimous consent, although it might go through under other circumstances.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman permit me to make a short statement for his information?

Mr. BORLAND. If the gentleman will permit me to make a slight amendment to the resolution, I shall be glad not to object.

Mr. ANTHONY. The board now consists of seven members, four of whom are Democrats and three of them Republicans. The Committee on Military Affairs think it would be entirely proper to allow another Republican to go on the board, which still gives the Democrats four members and the Republicans three. It does not interfere with the Democratic control of the board.

Mr. BORLAND. I realize, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. ANTHONY. There has never been any partisanship on that board.

Mr. BORLAND. I realize that that board formerly consisted of nine members. The Democrats are left with four members, and with a change in the political complexion of the House it would be quite possible to increase the number again to nine members, making it five Republicans and four Democrats. But I do not see any reason why, when there are two Democrats and two Republicans whose terms expire, we should bring in at this particular juncture a resolution recommending three Republicans and one Democrat, nor do I think that that resolution ought to go through by unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman remember the last resolution that passed?

Mr. BORLAND. The last resolution, if I recollect rightly, was the one when Maj. Warner——

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; the last resolution named all Democrats and no Republicans.

Mr. BORLAND. I do not recollect that.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's memory is very capricious.

Mr. BORLAND. If so, it was a very much better resolution than this one.

Mr. HELVERING. The board previous to the present one were all Republicans and no Democrats.

Mr. BORLAND. If the gentleman from Kansas will permit me to make a slight amendment to that resolution, I shall be glad to withdraw my objection.

Mr. RAKER. I hope the gentleman will let it go over for two weeks.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman from Missouri has objected.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MANN. Let it go over until the next Congress, and then we will show you. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri objects.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask unanimous consent to make a short statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the House is making a mistake in failing to fill these vacancies. The Committee on Military Affairs has considered the matter very carefully, and has done what it considered to be the fair thing. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] alluded to a very unpleasant incident which happened on that board within the last year, only he did not tell the whole story. Not only has the post fund, with which the member whom we are trying to supplant on that board had been intrusted, been looted to the extent of $47,000, but since that disclosure was made another incident has been brought to light where that same member of the board has violated the law by taking from an inmate of the hospital of one of the homes $300 of pension money against the law.

Mr. FERRIS. Why do they not prosecute him?

Mr. ANTHONY. I say it is hardly in comport with the dignity of the House in the face of such circumstances to refuse to supplant such a public official as that, and I am surprised that the gentleman from Missouri or any gentleman from Kansas should object to it.

Mr. BORLAND. Bring in a proper resolution, then.

Mr. HOWARD. How many indictments have been brought against this man?

Mr. ANTHONY. No indictments; but the board of managers has placed the whole affair in the hands of the Department of Justice, and it is up to the Attorney General to act.

Mr. BORLAND. If the committee will bring in a proper resolution, the House will agree to it, I am sure.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri has objected.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent for a minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri has objected, and that is the end of that controversy. The gentleman from Illinois asks two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. It has been stated that heretofore the action of the Republican Congress was partisan. I have some familiarity with the history of the National Soldiers' Home. Gen. Franklin held the responsible place as chairman of the board of managers for from 16 to 20 years. He was a valiant major general in the war for the Union, and a Democrat. He was succeeded by a New York judge, whose name now escapes me, who held the place as successor of Gen. Franklin for 8 or 10 years.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Gen Black.

Mr. CANNON. No; Gen. Black was on the board, but this was a New York judge who succeeded Gen. Franklin, and held the place until his decease, and was an efficient official and a Democrat. Then he was succeeded by a Republican, Hon. James C. Wadsworth, and he was succeeded by the man who defaulted. That is all I desire to say in justice to the management of the National Soldiers' Home, in which, so far as I know and believe, there never has been a partisan administration under the Republicans.

TRANSFER OF RETIRED ARMY OFFICERS TO ACTIVE LIST.

The next business on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17424) authorizing transfer of certain retired Army officers to the active list.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I object.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will reserve the objection.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to proceed for eight minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Dalaware asks unanimous consent to proceed for eight minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, this bill was introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. McLEMORE] and has been reported by the Committee on Military Affairs. My interest in the matter is purely from the standpoint of the merits of the bill. It is a long story as to how I became interested in the bill of the gentleman from Texas. I have gone into every detail of it, because certain of my colleagues on this side were informally talking of the bill one day and I saw that they were badly and erroneously mistaken about the matter. This bill provides that five officers who took advantage of the so-called Panama Canal act, the act of March 4, 1915, which gave officers who had served a certain number of years on the Panama Canal the privilege of retiring, may be transferred to the active list, if the President nominates them and the Senate confirms the appointment, provided they are appointed within one year of this act becoming a law. Certain officers took advantage of the Panama act. It was perfectly proper, they had every right to do it under the law. It was passed for that purpose.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Were these officers, any of them, educated at West Point or Annapolis?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Some of them were. In fact, I think all except the officer who is a chaplain were West Point graduates.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. They left the service for another opportunity that presented itself?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I am coming to that, the gentleman should not anticipate my remarks.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is speaking partly by my courtesy and I may reply to him.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I do not mean to be discourteous to the gentleman. In the letter of the Secretary of War, under date of December 4, 1916, to the chairman of the House Committee on Military Affairs, he has the following paragraph:

> The act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year 1916 contains a provision authorizing the transfer to the active list of officers of the Army previously transferred to the retired list for physical disability, and provides that each officer so transferred be carried as an additional number and be given the place on the active list he would have had if he had not been retired. This act does not include officers who have been retired under the Panama Canal act, approved March 4, 1915, which deficiency in legislation the bill S. 6850 would remedy.

I submit that these officers who had every right under the law which you gentlemen passed here to retire could go into whatever profession they wanted to, notwithstanding the opinions to the contrary. I will be perfectly frank to the House and say to you that because certain of these gentlemen were employed by what is termed war-order factories—I do not know to which places they did go for employment—is no reason why, when the War Department and the Secretary of War says it is a good business investment for the United States Government to take them back, that they should be denied that right. To-day the particular officer in question which this bill will affect will draw down for the rest of his days $3,750 as retired pay of a colonel. I understand of the five affected only one desires to return.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Can the gentleman inform us whether any man affected by this act occupies what might be called a subordinate position in the construction of the Panama Canal—I do not refer to Gen. Goethals, but Gen. Siebold and Gen. Hodges. What was the grade and rank of these men?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Lieutenant colonel of ordnance, the next was a major, who was a chaplain, and the other three were captains.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. That was before we promoted them?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Under the Panama Canal act they could retire on the next higher grade. This bill provides that they shall go back to a grade lower than that they were retired on.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman will remember that we promoted some men down there and denied it to others, which was a crime.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. This bill provides that they must go back to the grade below the one they retired on. Now, they raise the point, and I will state that there is an amendment which was prepared in the War Department which provides that these men shall never be eligible to a grade higher than the one they are now holding as retired officers. For instance, one of the men is a colonel, retired as such, and he will go back and be a lieutenant colonel, but he can never be eligible for a grade higher than colonel. If he should go back and be eligible for a brigadier generalship some time, he could not be considered.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. What is the reason for that? If you put a man back, why deprive him of the right of promotion under general military law?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. If I was managing the matter, I would not consent, but nevertheless the War Department and the people most interested are willing for it to go in so as to remove all objection.

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman knows that under the general rule of retirement a man is retired in the next higher grade. Now, then, these men hold this rank and they go back to their former rank, and then under that you propose to prevent them from ever receiving the promotion that they would have in the general promotion in the Army.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I will say that in this particular case if a man goes back as a lieutenant colonel he is eligible for colonel, but for no higher rank.

Mr. HOWARD. That is the very thing I am objecting to. If he is entitled to go back at all into the Army—and I agree with the gentleman from Delaware that we will only be paying a little more than he gets on the retired list if he is put on the active list and we will have his services—but if he goes back he ought to go back as a full-fledged officer with all the rights and immunities thereto pertaining.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Does the act allow him to again take advantage of the Panama Canal act?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. In reply to the gentleman from Connecticut I will say there is a further proviso reported from the committee that any officer transferred to the active list under this act shall not again be entitled to the benefits of the Panama Canal act except for age or physical disability incurred in the line of duty.

I am only interested, as I say, because this seems to be one of those bills of real merit. Here is a man who will get retired pay for 16 years at the rate of $3,750 a year. During that time the Government can not get any official use of that man. If this bill is passed, he can go back into the Army. It will not hurt anybody because he goes back, and he will draw down for active work for 16 years a salary of $4,500 a year while a lieutenant colonel, or $5,000 a year if a colonel. I submit that when the War Department and the Secretary of War and the Bureau of Ordnance asks that this be done, and they all say that it is a good move, that we should consider it as merited legislation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why does not the bill provide that they shall be examined professionally before reinstatement, and let the examination be both medical and professional? Usually in the reinstatement of persons who have voluntarily retired, their reinstatement is conditional upon examination extending to their profession, as well as to medical fitness.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. The bill provides such on page 2.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Delaware has expired.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more, in as much as I have yielded to interruptions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Yes.

Mr. GARLAND. I would like to ask the gentleman this question. These men, as I understand, were employed by some of the private munition factories, were they not?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I will say to the gentleman that one of them is a chaplain, so I do not see how the question of a munition factory could very well be raised. Two were so employed; the rest were not.

Mr. GARLAND. As a matter of fact, it is understood that some of these officers who went into the private munition factories failed in their duties, and the private manufacturers let them out. Does this bill apply to some of that kind? Do you expect them to go back without examination as to ability and be in the department and operate on the question of munitions for the United States Government?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I am very glad that the gentleman has raised that point. I can answer his query in the negative. This bill will only concern one man, because there is only one of the five who will take advantage of it. In regard to what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GARLAND] has said, I will say that the bill provides that the Senate must pass upon the confirmation of these men before they get back, and they must pass a medical examination.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I have been very patient, and I can not yield. I would like to cover a little bit of ground. I say that in all courtesy to the gentleman. It is merely gratuitous upon my part that I am presenting this case here to-day. It is nothing to me. I do not want the gentleman to take any offense, but what is the gentleman's question?

Mr. CARAWAY. I have no question.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Very well. I submit that a man who has rendered good service in the department, when the department wants him back, when there is nothing against his record, should be given the opportunity to come back. I can show by documents which I could introduce, if I had the time, that the man wanted to stay in the service of the United States, but that he left it because of the ill health of his wife on the Isthmus of Panama. That illness resulted in her death. Since her death he desires to come back into the service. I do not know what my friend from Pennsylvania, Mr. MOORE, with his legislative and parliamentary experience, is going to say about this bill, but I submit that whatever he does say, there is nothing that can be raised against this man as to his fitness, and as to the desire of the Secretary of War and the War Department to have him back, especially as his coming back will tread on nobody's toes, and especially as he must be confirmed first by the Senate. A bill (S. 6850) has already passed the Senate in this Congress, and is similar in every way to this one.

Mr. Speaker, I herewith append as a part of my remarks a copy of a letter sent by the Secretary of War to the chairman of the House Committee on Military Affairs, under date of December 4, 1916, as well as copy of a letter sent by the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, both of which attest to the fairness and merit of this proposed legislation:

DECEMBER 4, 1916.

Hon. S. H. DENT,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. DENT: I wish to bring to your attention Senate bill 6850, which is the same as H. R. 17424, now on the Union Calendar.

The act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year 1916 contains a provision authorizing the transfer to the active list of officers of the Army previously transferred to the retired list for physical disability, and provides that each officer so transferred be carried as an additional number and be given the place on the active list he would have had if he had not been retired. This act does not include officers who have been retired under the Panama Canal act approved March 4, 1915, which deficiency in legislation the bill S. 6850 would remedy.

Officers transferred to the active list under the present law have been advanced one or two grades in rank, whereas officers transferred under bill S. 6850 would return to the rank each held at the time of his retirement, or, as it happens, one grade lower than that held by each on the retired list.

The officers retired under the Panama Canal act were physically and mentally sound, well trained, and had had unusual experience for their age, and I consider it a good business proposition for the Government to obtain the active services of those who desire to return to the active list under the conditions of bill S. 6850.

One of the officers served 21 years in the Ordnance Department, and his return to the active list would help to meet a pressing shortage of experienced officers brought about by the increased burden placed upon that department through recent appropriation acts and by the loss of a number of such officers taken from the department by the inducements of private employment, which shortage could be relieved in no other prompt manner. There are now several demands for such an officer which there is no way of meeting.

I consider the enactment into law of bill S. 6850, as passed by the Senate on September 8, 1916, to be for the best interests of the Government.

Sincerely, yours, NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, September 7, 1916.

Hon. THOMAS W. MILLER,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: I have your letter of September 7, inquiring whether the bill H. R. 17424, current session, providing for the transfer of certain retired officers of the Army to the active list is of a personal character or might be considered as general legislation for the best interest of the Government. I am familiar with the bill, which would render eligible for restoration to the active list in the Ordnance Department an officer who was retired from active service in this department under the Panama Canal beneficiary act—Lieut. Col. T. C. Dickson. I officially advised the Secretary of War concerning the bill, and in doing so I stated to him that the restoration of Col. Dickson to active duty in this department would be greatly to the interest of the Government, in that it would help to meet a pressing shortage of experienced officers brought about by the increased burden placed upon the department through recent appropriation acts and by the loss of a number of such officers taken from the department by the inducements of private employment, which shortage could be relieved in no other prompt manner. I have now several demands for such an officer which I have no way of meeting.

Whatever personal character the proposed legislation may have is, to my mind, of no importance in comparison with the public interest which is involved.

Very respectfully, WILLIAM CROZIER,
Brigadier General, Chief of Ordnance,
United States Army.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee). Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like the attention of my friend from Arkansas for a moment. The gentleman from Arkansas could have some of my time if he desired it; but as the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. MILLER] has had 13 minutes upon this question and has directed some of his remarks to me, I think I ought to be permitted to reply.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded. The Clerk will report the next bill on the calendar.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. CARAWAY. I will withhold it, but I am going to object.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I call the Speaker's attention to the fact that I did object to this bill, but reserved the objection so that the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. MILLER] might be heard; and, now that I have the floor, I am willing to object if the gentleman from Arkansas does not object.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, the regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LAND PATENTS IN OREGON.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill H. R. 17055, providing when patents shall issue to the purchasers or heirs on certain lands in the State of Oregon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CITIZENSHIP OF DIRECTORS IN BANKS ON STATE BORDER LINES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill S. 4256, to amend section 5146 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, so as to permit national banks located near the boundary line of adjoining States, subject to the discretion of the Comptroller of the Currency, to select only a majority, instead of three-fourths, of their directors from residents of the State in which they are respectively located.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not see the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] present at this time. I think some one ought to make a statement concerning the bill. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MISSOULA NATIONAL FOREST, MONTANA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 5082) adding certain lands to the Missoula National Forest, Montana.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky objects and the bill is stricken from the calendar.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill retain its place upon the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

PAYMENT UNDER HOMESTEAD ENTRIES, FORT PECK INDIAN RESERVATION, MONT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 5612) providing additional time for the payment of purchase money under homestead entries of lands within the former Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky objects.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman to reserve his objection for a moment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will reserve the right to object.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, let me say this bill is for the relief of a large number of settlers in certain conditions up in Montana on the reservation, and that a very great hardship is being worked upon them. It is nothing to me personally, but it would relieve a lot of deserving people. I think the time ought to be extended so they will not lose their homes and have their lands forfeited, and the department has very earnestly recommended it, and I hope the gentleman will not insist upon his objection, because this a humane measure really and it does apply to a lot of deserving people. I hope the gentleman will let this bill go through.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, it is getting late in the afternoon and this bill might go over as unfinished business and might not be considered on the next unanimous-consent day, and I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky objects.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADDITIONAL ENTRIES UNDER ENLARGED HOMESTEAD ACT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1061) to allow additional entries under the enlarged homestead act.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LANDS WITHIN FORMER FLATHEAD INDIAN RESERVATION, MONT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1059) to provide for the payment for certain lands within the former Flathead Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LANDS FOR RESERVOIR PURPOSES, TWIN FALLS, IDAHO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 5014) to amend section 1 of the act of August 9, 1912, providing for patents on reclamation entries, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Kentucky withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I withhold the objection.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, this is a very worthy piece of legislation recommended by the Secretary of the Interior. There is no objection to it from any source by anyone informed as to its merits and I hope the gentleman will not object. It would not take two minutes to pass this bill, and it will certainly gratify me very much.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CERTAIN LANDS FOR RESERVOIR PURPOSES, TWIN FALLS, IDAHO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1740) to repeal an act entitled "An act granting to the city of Twin Falls, Idaho, certain lands for reservoir purposes," approved June 7, 1912, and to revoke the grant made thereby.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I reserve the objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this bill is so unusual in character that I think that it ought to pass with a little celebration. The city of Twin Falls, Idaho, got authority by special act of Congress to take certain public lands. Now, this bill proposes to revoke that, with their consent, it is true. It is such an unusual thing for us to take back public land that I do not think the gentleman from Kentucky, even under the unusual circumstances, ought to delay for a moment the passage of such a bill, and I hope he will not object to this.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

THE SALE AND DEVELOPMENT OF CERTAIN PUBLIC LANDS FOR THE CONSTRUCTION AND MAINTENANCE OF PUBLIC ROADS.

The next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11258) to provide for the sale and development of certain public lands and for the construction and maintenance of public roads.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill retain its place upon the calendar without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of no quorum and the gentleman from Kentucky moves that the House adjourn.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. RAKER. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California demands a division. The Chair will count.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 49, noes 39.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to call for tellers? I ask for tellers.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman demand tellers?

Mr. LONDON. I demand tellers.

The SPEAKER. Those in favor of taking this vote by tellers will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Thirty gentlemen have risen, not a sufficient number.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Since learning of some matters that other gentlemen are interested in I withdraw my motion to adjourn.

Mr. MADDEN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky has a right to withdraw his motion.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the Speaker rule he has the right after the vote is taken and while the House is determining——

The SPEAKER. He has the right to withdraw it clear up to its finish.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Speaker, a majority having voted to adjourn, can the gentleman then come back and withdraw his motion to adjourn? The House has voted to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The House has not finished the process of voting to adjourn.

Mr. RAGSDALE. A majority of the House has put itself in favor of adjourning.

The SPEAKER. Not a majority of the House.

Mr. RAGSDALE. A majority of those voting.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my demand for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia withdraws his demand for the yeas and nays. But the point of order is made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that there is no quorum here.

Mr. GARLAND. I make the motion that we now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. We want to get through with this other thing first. Did the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] withdraw his point of no quorum?

Mr. MANN. I did not. I wanted the whole House here to see the monkey work.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twelve Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names.

BATTLE FIELD OF GUILFORD COURT HOUSE, N. C.

Mr. STEDMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 8229) to establish a national military park at the battle field of Guilford Courthouse, as amended.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8229) to establish a national military park at the battle field of Guilford Courthouse.

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to preserve for historical and professional military study one of the most memorable battles of the Revolutionary War, the battle field of Guilford Courthouse, in the State of North Carolina, is hereby declared to be a national military park whenever the title to the same shall have been acquired by the United States; that is to say, the area inclosed by the following lines:

Together with all privileges and appurtenances thereunto belonging.

The aforesaid tracts of land containing in the aggregate 125 acres, more or less, and being the property of the Guilford Battle Ground Co., according to a survey by W. B. Trogdon and W. B. Trogdon, jr., made June 8, 1911. And the area thus inclosed shall be known as the Guilford Courthouse National Military Park.

SEC. 2. That the establishment of the Guilford Courthouse National Military Park shall be carried forward under the control and direction of the Secretary of War, who is hereby authorized to receive from the Guilford Battle Ground Co., a corporation chartered by the State of North Carolina, a deed of conveyance to the United States of all the lands belonging to said corporation, embracing 125 acres, more or less, and described more particularly in the preceding section.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to acquire at such times and in such manner such additional lands adjacent to the Guilford Courthouse National Military Park as may be necessary for the purposes of the park and for its improvement.

SEC. 4. That the affairs of the Guilford Courthouse National Military Park shall, subject to the supervision and direction of the Secretary of War, be in charge of three commissioners, to be appointed by him, one of whom shall be a resident of Guilford County, State of North Carolina; such resident commissioner shall be chairman of the board so appointed and shall also act as secretary of the commission. Said commissioners shall have an office in the city of Greensboro, State of North Carolina, and shall be paid such compensation as the Secretary of War shall deem reasonable and just, not to exceed, however, $2,000 per annum for the resident commissioner and $1,500 each per annum for the nonresident commissioners.

SEC. 5. That it shall be the duty of the commission named in the preceding section, under the direction of the Secretary of War, to open or repair such roads as may be necessary to the purposes of the park, and to ascertain and mark with historical tablets or otherwise, as the Secretary of War may determine, all lines of battle of the troops engaged in the Battle of Guilford Courthouse and other historical points of interest pertaining to the battle within the park or its vicinity; and the said commission in establishing this military park shall also have authority, under the direction of the Secretary of War, to employ such labor and services and to obtain such supplies and material as may be necessary to the establishment of said park, under such regulations as he may consider best for the interest of the Government, and the Secretary of War shall make and enforce all needed regulations for the care of the park.

SEC. 6. That it shall be lawful for any State that had troops engaged in the battle of Guilford Courthouse to enter upon the lands of the Guilford Courthouse National Military Park for the purpose of ascertaining and marking the lines of battle of its troops engaged therein: Provided, That before any such lines are permanently designated the position of the lines and the proposed methods of marking them, by monuments, tablets, or otherwise, shall be submitted to and approved by the Secretary of War; and all such lines, designs, and inscriptions for the same shall first receive the written approval of the Secretary of War, which approval shall be based upon formal written reports, which must be made to him in each case by the commissioners of the park.

SEC. 7. That if any person shall, except by permission of the Secretary of War, destroy, mutilate, deface, injure, or remove any monument, column, statues, memorial structures, or work of art that shall be erected or placed upon the grounds of the park by lawful authority, or shall destroy or remove any fence, railing, inclosure, or other work for the protection or ornamentation of said park, or any portion thereof, or shall destroy, cut, hack, bark, break down, or otherwise injure any tree, brush, or shrubbery that may be growing upon said park, or shall cut down or fell or remove any timber, battle relic, tree or trees growing or being upon said park, or hunt within the limits of the park, any person so offending and found guilty thereof before any justice of the peace of the county of Guilford, State of North Carolina, shall, for each and every such offense, forfeit and pay a fine, in the discretion of the justice, according to the aggravation of the offense, of not less than $5 nor more $50, one-half for the use of the park and the other half to the informer, to be enforced and recovered before such justice in like manner as debts of like nature are now by law recoverable in the said county of Guilford, State of North Carolina.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MANN. I demand a second.

Mr. STEDMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. STEDMAN. Mr. Speaker, this bill has received a favorable report from the Committee on Military Affairs. There would seem to be no reason why it should not receive the unanimous vote of the House. It provides that the battle field of Guildford Court House shall be made a national military park whenever the title to the same shall have been acquired by the United States. The area so to be conveyed embraces 125 acres, more or less, and is now owned by the Guilford Battle Ground Co., a corporation organized by a distinguished North Carolinian, Hon. David Schenck, whose early days were spent under the shadow of Kings Mountain, and whose natural instinct of love for the heroic was later in life intensified by a residence amongst people who had inherited by tradition the great deeds of their fathers.

The battle field is even now very attractive and beautiful. It is adorned by many monuments to the memory of Revolutionary heroes, some of them of rare beauty. Amongst others is the statue of Gen. Nathanael Greene, presented to the Guilford Battle Ground Co. by the United States. The expense incurred by the Government will be small.

The bill provides that the military park so created shall, subject to the supervision and direction of the Secretary of War, be in charge of three commissioners to be appointed by him, one of whom shall be a resident of Guilford County, State of North Carolina. Said resident commissioner shall be chairman of the board so appointed and shall also act as secretary of the commission. Said commissioners shall have an office in the city of Greensboro, State of North Carolina, and shall be paid such compensation as the Secretary of War shall deem reasonable and just, not to exceed, however, $2,000 per annum for the resident commissioner and $1,500 each per annum for the nonresident commissioners.

All property conveyed to the Government by the Guilford Battle Ground Co. will be absolutely unencumbered. There will be no indebtedness to be provided for. All expenses hitherto have been met by subscriptions made by private citizens, and assistance has been rendered to a moderate extent by the State of North Carolina. I think there was an appropriation of $750 made by the legislature of that State several times. I can not be accurate as to how often this appropriation has been made. So it will be seen that the expense has been reduced to a minimum.

In its consequences the Battle of Guilford Court House was of transcendent importance to our Revolutionary fathers. Upon that battle field was given the blow which staggered the power of the British Empire, made the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown an inevitable necessity, insured the independence of the Colonies, and laid the foundation of a Republic whose beneficent example and teachings should be felt to the uttermost ends of the earth.

It is of the highest importance to every nation that the memories of the great deeds of its children should be preserved and transmitted from generation to generation. Such is the chief object of this bill. Its passage is demanded by every impulse of patriotism and would be greeted by the people of our entire country with high approval.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina reserves the remainder of his time, 15 minutes. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I can see one very strong and powerful argument in favor of this bill, and that is the distinguished and beloved Member of this House from North Carolina, Gen. STEDMAN. [Applause.]

There are a very great many propositions made to Congress constantly, and a very large number are now pending in Congress for the purchase of various sites to create national parks in commemoration of battles in which other heroes of the past engaged and a great many other places. However, what I want to do is not to discuss the general proposition of the purchase of battle grounds but some of the details of this bill, a discussion which, if it does not have any effect on this bill, as I hope it might, may have some effect on the committee which reports such bills or on the gentleman who presents the next bill to the House.

The affairs of this military park, under the terms of the bill, shall be in charge of three commissioners to be appointed by the Secretary of War, one of whom shall be a resident of Guilford County, State of North Carolina, which resident commissioner shall be chairman of the board so appointed and also secretary of the board so appointed. It provides that he shall receive $2,000 a year salary. He is the resident local commissioner; he is made chairman of the board; he is made secretary of the board—Poo Bah, I think, is the expression. Then there are two other commissioners, to draw $1,500 each for staying away. That is pure graft. There is absolutely not the slightest excuse for providing for two nonresident commissioners to draw $1,500 each when they have nothing to do. The local commissioner, who is to get $2,000, is to be the chairman of the board. He is to be the secretary of the board. He is to be the whole thing, and the other two positions are sinecures. I do not know whether it is a very good time just now for our Democratic friends to be creating sinecure positions at $1,500 each. I have read in the papers that another distinguished body which sometimes believes that it is greater in importance than this body does not even propose to permit any increase in the salary of anybody in the Government service, and there is some merit in that proposition; but I would far rather increase the salary of some of the Government employees who are not getting high salaries than to create two sinecure positions to be held by two Democrats or Republicans of importance, to do nothing except draw their salaries. [Applause on the Republican side.]

There is another provision of this bill to which I wish to call attention. I do not propose to detain the House very long. There are a number of provisions in this bill that I would like to discuss, but there is one in particular. We have passed a number of laws in reference to the committing of crimes and misdemeanors in national parks, and have provided methods for enforcing the law. This bill provides that if anyone does damage in the park, in various ways described, it shall be a misdemeanor which shall be prosecuted before the local justice of the peace in Guilford County, and for each and every such offense shall forfeit and pay a fine, in the discretion of the justice, according to the aggravation of the offense, not less than $5 nor more than $50, one half for the use of the park and the other half to the informer. Well, in the first place, I doubt the advisability of giving a justice of the peace in Guilford County original and final jurisdiction over some misdemeanor committed in this park. In the second place, I doubt the advisability of Congress entering upon the scheme of paying the informer one-half the penalty. Years ago that was the law of the United States in a great many cases. Informers were invited to begin prosecutions. But those laws have been repealed.

Mr. STEDMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. STEDMAN. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that I am perfectly willing to ask unanimous consent to change the maximum limit of the salaries of the nonresident commissioners. The provision of the bill is not exactly as the gentleman states it. The salaries are not fixed at $1,500, but they are not to exceed, $1,500, to be fixed by the Secretary of War. I do not desire to have them exceed $500, and I ask unanimous consent to modify the bill in that way, to make the salaries of the nonresident commissioners not to exceed $500.

Mr. MANN. I think that would be a very good modification, I will say to the gentleman, and I am not going to object to it.

Mr. STEDMAN. I ask unanimous consent to do that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STEDMAN] at the conclusion of his remarks.

Mr. MANN. I do not believe we ought to encourage informers anywhere by the payment of money to them. We have some penalties now, where we pay the informer when we obtain information of violation of the immigration laws, and we put a specific provision in the appropriation bill to that effect. It may be necessary sometimes to do that, but it ought not to be the law of the United States that we hire informers to bring prosecutions for cutting the branch of a tree. In this case the man who picks a leaf off of a tree out of idle curiosity or interest may have somebody bring him up and cost him a penalty, to go to the informer. Now, there are a good many other things in this bill that I would like to correct; but, of course, I know fairly well the temper of this House and am usually able to guess, in a way, when I am up against it.

I reserve the balance of my time, and yield to the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. STEDMAN. I ask unanimous consent to amend my motion, and instead of $1,500 for the salaries of the two commissioners I ask to make it $500. I ask unanimous consent to make that modification.

Mr. MADDEN. Reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the gentleman from North Carolina if it might not be wise to make one commissioner, the resident commissioner, the entire commission; why not have one man?

Mr. STEDMAN. That was considered very carefully by the Committee on Military Affairs. I know a good deal about that myself. There ought to be three commissioners, one who ought to be from Rhode Island, as Gen. Greene commanded the Revolutionary forces there. We went over the whole matter and decided that there ought to be three commissioners.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEDMAN. Certainly.

Mr. NORTON. Does not the gentleman from North Carolina think that two nonresident members of this commission could be secured for less than $500 a year? What I had in mind was about $5 a year, but perhaps $50 would be more appropriate.

Mr. STEDMAN. I think that a man who has enough character and is responsible enough to be a commissioner for one of the great parks comprising a battle field of the Revolutionary War, considering the responsibilities connected with it, and who, for instance, should reside in Rhode Island, ought to have at least $500 to pay any expenses that might be necessary in connection with the office.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to modify the bill by an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 17, strike out "$1,500" and insert "$500."

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEDMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BURNETT. Is there any provision in the bill for the payment of the expenses of these commissioners?

Mr. STEDMAN. No; there is no provision of that sort, and no expense connected with it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEDMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I have visited this battle ground during the past summer. If I recollect right, there was a small appropriation made for the purpose of marking the lines in whole or in part and erecting monuments. I believe that this expenditure ought to be made, as the bill proposes. [Applause.] From history, as well as somewhat from tradition that I have received from time to time, this was one of the most important battles of the Revolution.

Perhaps I feel more than an ordinary interest in this appropriation. The battle ground of Guilford Court House is about 5 miles from Greensboro. There is a Friends settlement, that was made in 1720 or 1725, near the site of this battle ground at New Garden. The immigration was largely from Nantucket. Many families, the Coffins, the Maceys, the Starbucks, and many other families were early settlers at New Garden. Perhaps some of them in Greensboro. There was a very large immigration from North Carolina to Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and across the continent, especially of Moravians and Quakers and Scotch-Irish, from the central and especially the western part of the State.

I grew up in a settlement substantially on the Wabash of North Carolinians. They used to meet in the log houses of the settlers, way back within my recollection, during the long winter nights and talk about North Carolina. The most of them were Whigs, especially the Friends. In 1840 John Motley Morehead was elected governor on the Whig ticket of the State of North Carolina. The most of that North Carolina settlement supported him and believed him to be a man of high character and great enterprise, who perhaps founded whatever there was in industries, outside of agriculture, in North Carolina at Greensboro. The conversation was concerning the old North State, and largely about Gov. Morehead.

I recollect asking my father after they had gone from the house one long winter evening as I had sat and listened there—I said, "Daddy, when we die will we go to Gov. Morehead?" [Laughter.] It is wonderful, but those immigrants, not only Friends, but those who were not Friends or Quakers who came to Illinois and Indiana, first to Ohio, and so on across the continent, were of sterling worth. I never knew a North Carolinian that was a receiver of public or private charity or that did not pay his debts and who was not a good citizen. [Applause.] They made their mark not only in Indiana but clear across the continent. A Member of this House was born on the Wabash and his forbears were from Guilford County. I refer to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HADLEY]. Ex-Gov. Hadley, of Missouri, was of that stock. The Coffins held high positions, many of them industrially and otherwise, in various States in the Northwest territory. S. V. White, who was formerly a Member of the House, for a long time a resident of and, I believe, a citizen of the State of New York, eminent as a business man, was from that county.

Mr. Speaker, North Carolina has a great history. They used to call it the Botany Bay State. I once asked why they called it the Botany Bay State, and the answer came—and to the best of my knowledge I have verified the truth of it—that as a colony or as a State there never was imprisonment for debt there. I think there is no imprisonment for debt now in any State of the Union, and in the absence of fraud there should not be.

Mr. Speaker, I believe it is for the benefit of the oncoming generation in North Carolina and throughout the country that this battle ground should be marked. After all, there is much in sentiment. You may say away with sentiment, but after all is said and done, sentiment well founded lies at the very base of our civilization. [Applause.] Without detaining the House further, I trust that this motion may prevail without a dissenting voice in this great body. [Applause.]

Mr. STEDMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I think that we have been just a little reluctant as a Nation to preserve permanently the tablets of American history. We are too prone to efface the records, and when an opportunity is offered us to make a national park, under the protection of the National Government, of the battle ground which proved to be the turning point of the struggle that ultimately led to our independence, we ought to do it. The Battle of Guilford Court House was fought just about six months before the inevitable surrender at Yorktown. This defeat was the preliminary step to the final surrender and the close of the war. It was the battle that cleared up the struggles further in the South to await Yorktown. It was led by the man who is known in history to have never gained a victory, but whose each and every defeat was equivalent to a victory, and that man, great in his military career, rests in this famous battle ground. I think that from the standpoint of the meaning of the Revolutionary War, which President Seeley said the English people had agreed voluntarily never to mention more often than they were compelled to, we should pass this proposed measure. Knowing that the war planted the greatest Republic the world has yet seen, and knowing also that it struck from the first phase of that Republic, as it first appeared after 1763 and before the Revolutionary War, certain effete elements which had been fastened upon it, such as the feudal system, the law of primogeniture, the law of entail, life tenure in office, hereditary government, and other things, such as taxation without representation, and this being one of the battle fields of that war and one which was fought just before the close of the great struggle, we ought to here and now make it a national military park under the control of the National Government. [Applause.]

Mr. STEDMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I am glad that this bill, introduced by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STEDMAN], is to meet with no considerable opposition in the House. Not alone because its passage is especially desired by the gentleman whom we have all learned to love and honor, but because of its intrinsic merits. A proposition to establish a national military park at the battle field of Guilford Courthouse, in order to preserve for historical and military study one of the most memorable battles of the Revolutionary War, is in every respect commendable, and should be approved by all those who believe that patriotism can be inspired and strengthened by the reservation and preservation of the great battle grounds of the Republic.

Gentlemen of the House will remember that after the surrender of Burgoyne at Saratoga the campaign of the British in the northern colonies seemed to pause. The British cabinet finally determined to carry the war into the southern colonies. Savannah, the capital of Georgia, was captured after an ineffectual resistance and was made the base of further opertions. Sir Henry Clinton proceeded to invest Charleston, the principal port and city of the South. The combined attack of the British fleet and army was successful, and Charleston was forced to surrender. This left the way open for the complete conquest as the British planned, of the Carolinas, Georgia, and finally Virginia and Maryland.

Washington fully realized the danger of such a campaign. The forces of the colonies in the South were small and scattered. They were poorly equipped. The British had been largely reinforced and were placed under the command of Lord Cornwallis, one of the ablest of the British commanders. Washington appointed Gen. Gates, the hero of Saratoga, to the command of the southern army and sent him with such forces as could be secured to stop the British advance. A battle was fought at Camden, and the colonists were disastrously defeated.

Cornwallis advanced into North Carolina, boasting that he would soon conquer all the territory south of the Susquehanna River. He sent his subordinates throughout the country to subdue and reduce the revolutionists. One of his ablest officers, Maj. Ferguson, with a large command penetrated into the mountains. He was met by the mountaineers under the command of Shelby, Sevier, Cleaveland, McDowell, Campbell, and Williams, and at the battle of King's Mountain the British force was utterly defeated and destroyed.

Upon learning of this defeat Cornwallis withdrew into South Carolina and there concentrated and reinforced his army. To meet the new offensive which Cornwallis planned and which was certainly formidable and might be determinative was supremely important.

It was evident that with the Carolinas and Georgia in the hands of the British defense of Virginia was difficult. The fate of the war and the cause of the Colonies now seemed dependent on the preservation of the South. Another loss like that of Charleston, another disaster like that of Camden would have been irreparable. It was felt by Washington, it was realized by Congress that there was but one man equal to the emergency, and that man was Gen. Nathanael Greene.

Gen. Greene was appointed, and at once commenced to organize and equip an army. This appeared an almost impossible undertaking. The colonists were without money or credit. Their armies already in the field were poorly armed, were not even comfortably clothed, they were underfed, and had not been paid. The resources of the Colonies seemed practically exhausted. It was necessary for Greene to create an army, to equip it, and to train it.

When Greene took command in the field he found that his effective force numbered little over 2,000 men. He was largely outnumbered by the British force. Under these conditions it was unwise to give battle until his force could be strengthened. But reenforcements must come from the North. He resolved to move his little army as rapidly as possible to northern North Carolina, and to avoid a battle until he could meet the British on at least equal terms. In order to accomplish this with greatest safety, he adopted the daring plan of dividing his forces, placing one half in command of Gen. Morgan and retaining the command of the other half himself. This compelled Cornwallis to divide his forces and assume the offensive. He sent Gen. Tarleton to attack Morgan, while with his remaining forces he swiftly followed Greene.

Tarleton and Morgan met at the Cowpens, and in the battle which there occurred the British were defeated with great loss.

In a masterly retreat of over 200 miles Greene succeeded in reaching his objective point, and was able there to concentrate his forces and receive his expected reenforcements from Virginia. He resolved to give battle and selected Guilford Courthouse as the place to meet Cornwallis.

The battle was admirably managed by both commanders and stubbornly fought. At its conclusion the British held the field, but with the loss of one-third of their number. Cornwallis's position was untenable, and he was forced to retreat pursued by Greene. The British reached Wilmington in safety, and Greene at once returned to South Carolina to carry on a campaign which finally drove the British into Charleston, there to remain until the close of the war. A distinguished historian says:

Among all the campaigns of history that have been conducted with small armies there have been few, if any, more brilliant than Greene's.

Although he never won a distinctive victory, after each of his battles it was the enemy who retreated and he who pursued.

The Battle of Guilford Courthouse, as can readily be seen, was the culmination of the southern campaign. It was the prelude to Yorktown, Cornwallis's surrender, and the final victory of the Colonists. It was a campaign in which the honors were divided between the North and the South.

When the southern invasion by the British began the southern Delegates in Congress asked that Gen. Lincoln, who had distinguished himself in northern campaigns, be sent South and placed in command. This was done, and for 15 months Lincoln kept the field. For 30 days he defended Charleston against the combined forces of Arbuthnot and Clinton. Finally Lincoln was forced to surrender.

Then Gen. Gates, the commander at Saratoga, was placed in command of the southern armies. "Take care not to exchange your northern laurels for southern willows," was the warning given Gates by Charles Lee. The defeat of Gates at Camden made the warning a prophecy.

After these disheartening experiences the Colonists, as we have seen, turned to the ablest and most trusted of Washington's generals—Nathanael Greene. Greene was born in Rhode Island in 1742. He was the son of a Quaker preacher, but he was an ardent patriot. He became convinced that independence must be achieved if American liberty was to be preserved. This meant war. Notwithstanding his faith and pacific environment, he began the study of military tactics and history. He organized and drilled militia companies. When the news came of Lexington the Assembly of Rhode Island authorized the organization of a brigade and placed Greene in command. He soon joined Washington, and for nearly five years served with him. He was soon recognized as a military genius. Washington depended on him as on no other of his generals. No one except Washington himself so held the confidence of the troops.

After the war Greene settled in the South, for which he had acquired a great affection. He died there at the early age of 44 years, and is there buried. Alexander Hamilton, in an address on his life and public service, said:

In forming our estimate of his character we are not left to supposition or conjecture. We have a succession of deeds as glorious as they are unequivocal to attest his greatness and perpetuate the honors of his name.

Great as was the value of Greene's service in this southern campaign, success could not have been secured without the aid of a number of brilliant and daring commanders who aided him.

Among these were three Virginians of remarkable ability—Daniel Morgan; William Washington, who was a distant cousin of the commander in chief; and Henry Lee, familiarly known as "Light Horse Harry," father of the great general, Robert E. Lee.

Names ever dear to the lovers of the heroic and the romantic are those of Thomas Sumter and Francis Marion. Names which recall not only patriotic service but thrilling deeds of desperate adventure, surprises at midnight, sudden attacks in the gray twilight of the morning, lurking places in the depths of the forests, and long marches under the silent stars. Nothing in fiction exceeds in wonder or interest the marvelous stories of their exploits. Sumter and Marion will ever remain among the favorite characters of American history.

I have already alluded to the mountaineer commanders who won the battle of Kings Mountain. The record of their heroic exploits would make an interesting story never so far adequately told. Their history and exploits should be recorded as an act of justice to those able and daring leaders, and as an incentive to heroic deeds throughout the years to come.

Mr. Speaker, it is well to recall those heroic days. It is well to recount those heroic deeds. We do not live in heroic times. But the spirit of 1776 is not yet died out in American manhood, and we must not smother it with our materialism and our commercialism.

It is for these reasons that I am glad of an opportunity to support the present bill. I sincerely hope that it may pass this body and become a law.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and in the opinion of the Chair two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.
